Announcer: Frank Asper turns now to the devotional quality and character of an 18th Century Italian "Aria" by Tenaglia, as arranged by Philip James.

(Organ selection: "Aria."—Tenaglia-James.)

Announcer: From the "Elijah" by Mendelssohn comes the music of this sacred song with words selected from the Old Testament texts: "Oh! That I knew, where I might find Him, Oh that I might even come before His presence. . . . If with all your hearts ye truly seek me, Ye shall ever surely find me, Thus saith our God."

(The Choir sang: "If With All Your Hearts."—Mendelssohn)

Announcer: We often see the familiar picture of parents and teachers pleading with young people to improve themselves, to learn their lessons, to make the most of their lives. And because of this sincere anxiety on the parts of parents, young people may sometimes assume that they are doing teachers or parents a favor by learning their lessons, by improving their lives. In one sense this is true. It is true that much of the measure of a parent's success and satisfaction is found in the soundness and happiness and success of his children. It is true that much of a teacher's success is found in the lessons that his students learn. But in another sense, it is a peculiar paradox that parents or teachers should so much, so long, so patiently have to plead with young people to make good use of their lives—for every effort they make, all the knowledge they acquire, every lesson they learn is for their own everlasting advantage. And in doing what they should do and in learning what they should learn, they are doing a favor for themselves. Leaving for the moment the matter of prodding and persuading young people, may we look briefly at another side of the subject: Sometimes we may think that we have done someone else a special favor if we live according to law. Sometimes we may think we are doing the Lord God a special favor if we keep His commandments. And it is true that it would please Him to have us do so, for His declared purpose is "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man," (Pearl of Great Price: Moses 1:39) to bring to pass the happiness, and peace and everlasting progress of His children. For this cause were the commandments given, and for this cause has He patiently repeated them through His servants the prophets. But in keeping them, we serve first ourselves—no matter what we may do for others besides ourselves. And in breaking them we do injury to ourselves, no matter what we may do to others besides ourselves. It is a great virtue to love and to please parents; it is a sincere satisfaction to a teacher to see a lesson learned; and it is good to keep the commandments for the approving favor of our heavenly Father. But in all this pleasing of others, in all this learning of lessons, in all this keeping of commandments, we do immeasurable service for ourselves. And others shouldn't have to plead with us so much or labor with us so long to persuade us to do what we ought to be anxiously doing.

(The Choir then sang: "Praise to the Lord.")

Announcer: We have heard a hymn from the 17th century, with words by Josphine Neander: "Praise to the Lord, the Almighty, the King of Creation. O

Sunday, April 4

Second Day

my soul, praise Him, for He is thy health and salvation."

And now Frank Asper turns to a hymn melody by Robert Lowry, which has become inseparably identified with these cherished words of the hymn by Annie S. Hawkes: "I Need Thee Every Hour, Most gracious Lord; No tender voice like thine can peace afford. . . . Stay thou nearby; Temptations lose their power when thou art nigh. I need thee; O I need thee; Every hour I need thee! O bless me now, my Savior; I come to Thee!"

(Organ selection: "I Need Thee Every Hour."—Lowry.)

Announcer: The Tabernacle Choir closes with a brief and delicately echoing anthem of exhortation by L. Stanley Glarum with words from the 47th Psalm: "Sing Praises unto Our King, for God is King o'er all the earth."

(The Choir sang: "Sing Praises."—Glarum.)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the twelve hundred and eighty-fifth presentation, continuing the 25th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by CBS Radio and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the Tabernacle Choir with its three hundred seventy-five singing voices. Frank Asper was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

In another seven days, at this same hour, music and the spoken word will be heard once more from the Crossroads of the West.

SUNDAY MORNING GENERAL CONFERENCE SESSION

The Sunday morning session of the General Conference convened promptly at 10:00 a.m., with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the leadership of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the choral music for this session. Frank W. Asper was at the organ console.

President David O. McKay:

In solemn worship this beautiful Sunday morning, thousands are assembled in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, in the Assembly Hall, Barratt Hall, and many are gathered on the walks and lawns of the Tabernacle Grounds listening to the service over a public address system. Other thousands are listening in over radio and television stations.

This is the second session of the One Hundred and Twenty-Fourth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The first session was not broadcast. It was a General Priesthood meeting held last evening in the Tabernacle, with overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall, the Barratt Hall, and by direct wire over a public address system to members of the Priesthood assembled in the Bonneville Stake Tabernacle; Granite Stake Tabernacle; Sandy Amusement Hall; Ogden Stake Tabernacle; George Albert Smith Fieldhouse at the Brigham Young University at Provo; the Church Institute Building of the Utah State Agricultural College at Logan; South Idaho Falls Tabernacle, Idaho Falls; Big Horn Stake Tabernacle, Lovell, Wyoming.

For your information and interest we should like to say that as nearly as the ushers could count there were assembled in that Priesthood Meeting last evening over 20,000 men and boys who hold the Priesthood. Besides the showing of a film relating to the Senior Aaronic Priesthood the speakers last evening were Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin and members of the First Presidency.

The Millennial Chorus under the direction of Elder A. Burt Keddington furnished the music, and may I take occasion now to thank that group of excellent singers because in the rush last evening I believe we overlooked expressing to them our appreciation of the excellent service rendered.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. was the speaker on Columbia's Church of the Air program this morning at 8 o'clock.

We are now assembled in the second session of the One Hundred Twenty-Fourth Annual Conference of the Church. All the General Authorities are in attendance. There is one vacant seat since last October, that of Elder Matthew Cowley, who passed away during the ceremonies of the laying of the cornerstone of the Los Angeles Temple. He was of a genial nature, a loyal friend, a great evangelist, a friend to man, a true servant and Apostle of the Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Elder Cowley has gone to a rich reward, and received the plaudit, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of Thy Lord." We miss him, but we know that he lives.

These services and all general sessions of the conference will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall, in Barratt Hall, over a public address system, and by television, and you will be interested in this: the service will also be televised over KSL television, Channel 5, and over 10 television stations in Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, and Colorado to an estimated number of television receivers of 3,861,400.

The service will likewise be heard over Radio Station KSL, and by arrangement through KSL over 14 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, Nevada, Colorado, California, Oregon, and Wyoming. The names of these stations have already been announced to the television and radio audiences. That is what we were pausing for at the opening.

Arrangements have also been made to have this session broadcast in Hawaii by tape recording next Sunday.

We desire to express our appreciation to these various television and radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts.

To the audience, those who are assembled in person and the thousands comprising the television and radio audiences, the First Presidency and General Authorities extend a most hearty welcome, and pray that our souls may be uplifted and inspired by our assembling together in this great conference of the Church. God bless you all!

I wish to announce too that we have greetings from some of our boys in Korea: "Our hearts beat in tune with the membership of the Church in sustaining you, and with bowed heads we pray for your welfare and that of the sons and daughters of Zion." LDS Group Chaplain Herbert J. Marsh, First Marine Division, Korea.

Also, to the First Presidency: "May our Heavenly Father's choicest blessings be with you and the membership of the Church as you assemble in General Conference." Signed, Chaplains of the Servicemen and Korean members, First Marine Division in Korea.

We wish to acknowledge also the following: United States Senator Wallace F. Bennett. I have not seen Senator Arthur Watkins. I think he is not here. Congressman William A. Dawson. We have a message from Governor Lee wishing us success, and explaining that an appointment out of the city prevents his being present. We appreciate his message.

We see also present our mayor of the City, Earl J. Glade and Secretary of State Lamont Toronto. We have some special visitors whom we bid welcome whose names have not been handed to me.

Sunday, April 4

Second Day

Dr. William Miller, president of the Weber College; Dr. John Clarke, president of Ricks College; Dr. Lester B. Whetton, director of Snow College; Dr. Daryl Chase, president of the Branch Agricultural College; and I believe, Dr. Howard McDonald of Los Angeles State College.

Others whom probably we have not observed will please realize that you are welcome with these I have named.

We have before us also our mission presidents from the United States, Mexico, Guatemala; stake presidents, counselors, and bishoprics. To all we extend a hearty welcome and express satisfaction and pleasure in your presence and your cooperative spirit in these sessions.

The Choir will furnish the music this morning, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Elder Frank Asper at the organ.

The congregation will now join the Choir in singing "We Thank Thee O God for a Prophet," and the opening prayer will be offered by Elder Golden

L. Woolf, formerly president of the French Mission.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

The invocation was offered by Elder Golden L. Woolf, formerly President of the French Mission.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Ezra Taft Benson looks so much at home in his usual place among the members of the Council of the Twelve that I overlooked formally announcing the presence of the Secretary of Agriculture. We are glad to have him here with us.

The Choir will now sing "Shades of Evening," conducted by J. Spencer Cornwall.

Following the Choir singing we shall hear from President David O. McKay.

Singing by the Choir, "Shades of Evening."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

THE FOLLOWING I take from Section 4 of the Doctrine and Covenants. It was recorded in 1829.

"Now behold a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men.

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day.

"Therefore, if ye have desires to serve God ye are called to the work; . . .

"And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work." (D. & C. 4:1-3; 5.)

When that revelation was given to the Prophet Joseph Smith, he was only twenty-three years of age. The Book of Mormon was not yet published; no man had been ordained to the priesthood. The Church was not organized; yet the statement was made and written without qualification that ". . . a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men."

Another significant feature of this revelation, and others given about the same period, is the naming of essential qualifications of those who were to participate in the bringing about of this marvelous work. These qualifications were not the possession of wealth, not social distinction, not political preferment, not military achievement, not nobility of birth; but a desire to serve God with all your "heart, mind, and strength"—spiritual qualities that contribute to nobility of soul. I repeat: no popularity, no wealth, no theological training in Church government—yet a marvelous work was about to come forth among the children of men.

Manifestly, some higher power was operating to bring about this marvelous work other than mere human and material means.

In passing, it is interesting to note that about that same period Robert Owen of England, a man of exceptional ability, a religious person, decried the departure of the churches from the simple teachings of Jesus. He was dissatisfied also with economic conditions of that time, for he saw little children, indeed he had some working in his own factories, who were only eight and ten years of age. He introduced the law which required the prohibition of little children from working at night and limited others to ten hours a day. He was desirous of establishing conditions which would at least ameliorate some of these conditions which were almost unbearable in society at that time.

He won the confidence of leaders, and the Duke of Kent (Queen Victoria's father) became his patron. With a fortune in his hand, he came to the new world about 1823. He established what he hoped would be an ideal society. Within three years he had lost two hundred thousand dollars, and his experiment failed.

Joseph Smith had no such royal patron, no potentially influential friends. Over one hundred years have passed, and the work of the Church today is stronger and more flourishing than ever before.

This morning I feel impressed to refer briefly to the missionary phase of this "marvelous work."

Recent visits to the various missions of the world have impressed me more deeply than ever with the importance and magnitude of the Church, and with its responsibility to make more potent the proclaiming of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

"Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Matthew 28:19-20.)

Such was the charge given by the risen Lord to his authorized disciples over nineteen hundreds years ago! Such is the charge given by the risen Lord to his authorized servants today. In the corresponding account given by Mark the passage reads: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned," or condemned. (Mark 16:15-16.)

In both these records you will note two fundamental messages are clearly stated:

First: The responsibility to proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ to all the world is explicitly given to those who were called and ordained Apostles of the Lord.

Second: The message implied by Matthew and stated definitely by Mark that, to use Peter's words, "... there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:12.)

In these passages are also intimated, if not clearly stated, that there are two great divisions in the Church of Jesus Christ. First is the missionary, and the second, organization for instruction, mutual edification, and service.

Four conditions contribute to the intensifying of the thought or sense of responsibility of the Church.

First of these are modern means of transportation. These have made practically all nations neighbors. When the Twelve Apostles of old received the admonition from the Lord to go into all the world to preach the gospel, they had, to quote Beverley Nichols, "only the wind to bear them over the seas, only a few pence in their pockets, but a shining faith in their hearts. They fell far short of their ideal, their words were twisted and mocked, and false temples were built over their bones in praise of a Christ they would have rejected. And yet, by the light of their inspiration, many of the world's loveliest things were created, and many of the world's finest minds inspired."

Today "God has given us the power of whispering across space, of transmitting our thoughts from one end of the earth to another." Geographical conditions or distances are just the same, but in point of time New York is as near to the Church headquarters as Provo was when President Brigham Young traveled by horses and whitetop wagon. London is nearer than Fillmore; South Africa, closer than St. George! What a marvelous age we are living in!

Second, another condition that intensifies the importance and magnitude of the Church in its responsibility to the peoples of the world is the willingness of men and women to consecrate their time, their means, and their ability to the advancement of the kingdom of God. No one can associate intimately with mission presidents and with missionaries without being filled with commendation and praise for their sincerity, their untiring energy, their concern for their associates, and for their unselfish devotion to the proclamation of peace and good will. And the same is true of other men in various occupations and callings throughout the Church.

Even more worthy of admiration, meriting more highly the gratitude of the many blessed by their intelligent, loving service, and entire forgetfulness of themselves are our wives and mothers. The inestimable work they do in the missionary field, as in the home, too seldom receives due recognition and praise. I have profound respect, for example, for the mission president's wife who, while showing her deepest tenderness in helping her husband to do his duty, yet in her own sphere, by intelligent, superb planning and unselfish service, gives to any habitation the true spirit of home; and by tender admonition and encouragement, lightens the heart of homesick elders with the assurance that they can and will succeed.

Third, the fulfillment of prophecies made over a hundred years ago regarding the growth of the Church brings forcibly to our minds the responsibility of proclaiming the truth.

Let us take a glimpse at what the Church has accomplished since its humble beginning in 1830. There have been since that time 67,615 missionaries set apart, at an approximate cost to them and their families of $54,500,000.00.

Within the last fifty years the number of missions in the Church has doubled from twenty-one to forty-two today, with 1754 branches.

In addition to what the individuals have spent in missionary work, the Church between 1910 and 1937, inclusive, expended $18,620,028.00. From 1938 to 1953, inclusive, $34,026,640.00, making a total from Church funds of $52,646,668.00. This does not include what the Church spent between the years 1830 and 1910. I could not get those figures. So that is a total amount in dollars expended for missionary service of $107,146,668.00. Just let your mind go back now to the beginning before there was a Church organized, before the Book of Mormon was published, and think how truly was the word spoken that a marvelous work and a wonder was about to come forth.

A half century ago there were comparatively few chapels in the missions owned by the Church. Today there are 410 completed in the United States, Canada, Mexico, and Hawaii, at a cost of $8,488,431.00. There are 206 completed in foreign lands at a cost of $4,525,335.00.

There are 142 buildings now under construction in the missions at a cost of $6,058,450.00. Besides these mission chapels, there are thirty-three mission homes purchased at a cost of over $1,000,000.00.

At the turn of the century there were forty-five stakes, with approximately 550 wards. Today there are 212 stakes with 1683 wards and 232 independent branches.

In addition to this, there are 112 seminary and institute buildings completed at a cost of $2,788,798.00; Brigham Young University buildings, $9,470,000.00, or a total cost of $32,464,438.00.

Now note in the wards and stakes, although this is not directly on my theme, we have nearly 1300 chapels, completed at an original cost of $76,196,505.00; 351 others under construction at a cost of $34,916,707.00; a total cost for ward and stake buildings of $111,113,205.00; or a grand total for Church buildings of $143,577,643.00.

Here is another phase of Church work—baptisms for those who did not have a chance to hear the gospel before they died. As of December 31, 1953, there had been performed a total of 17,357,931 baptisms, and a total number of endowments of 15,035,700.

A marvelous work and a wonder!

Creditable chapels are now found in Finland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, France, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, and throughout the British Empire. Members in Johannesburg are waiting for plans to build a modern chapel on a very suitable lot already secured for that purpose.

On our recent tour to South America we had the pleasure of laying the cornerstone of a chapel in Montevideo, which would be a credit to any ward in the Church, with its chapel, recreation hall, and classrooms. Other sites are already chosen throughout the mission. At Durban, there will be a chapel, recreation hall, and classrooms ready for dedication some time next month.

In the fastest growing city in the world, so they told us—Sao Paulo—where the price of a lot for a chapel is almost prohibitive, the president of the mission is authorized to see what he can do to find a suitable building lot and make his recommendation for a flourishing branch in that great city of over three million.

Other branches in Brazil are calling for suitable accommodations. In the Argentine Mission we visited six chapels near Buenos Aires, in fact, in that city. Though it was merely an investigating tour, we found at each place from fifty to one hundred and fifty members waiting to greet us.

Ever since its organization, the Panama Branch in the Central American Mission has been the recipient of the hospitality of Rabbi Nathan Witkins and the members of the Jewish Church who shared their meeting accommodations with our Church members. Here an active, energetic group merit a meeting place of their own. We express appreciation of the co-operation of this Jewish group who entertained us while we were there visiting officially.

In Guatemala there is already being completed a chapel with its tile flooring and oak finish at such a reasonable cost as would make any ward in the Church envious.

Commendable progress is being made throughout Mexico in regards to furnishing suitable houses of worship.

Brethren and sisters, I cite these few conditions and references not only by way of commendation to the officers and members of these various missions, but for the purpose of calling your attention to this important question:

Fourth, if within a little more than a century this Church could achieve such success in numbers, wealth, and influence, how much more, comparatively speaking, might we accomplish within the next half century with a million and a half loyal members, with comparative prosperity attending our efforts, and with a better understanding in the minds of the intelligent, well-informed people as to the purposes and aims of the Church of Jesus Christ?

Ours is the responsibility, greater than ever before, to proclaim:

1. That the Church is divinely established by the appearance of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and that divine authority through the priesthood is given to represent Deity in establishing Christ's Church upon the earth.

2. That its assigned responsibility is to fulfil the admonition of Jesus to his Apostles to "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

"Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28:19-20.)

3. To proclaim peace and good will unto all mankind.

4. To exert every effort, and all means within our reach to make evil-thinking men good, good men better, and all people happier.

5. To proclaim the truth that each individual is a child of God and important in his sight; that he is entitled to freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly; that he has the right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. In this positive declaration, we imply that organizations or churches which deprive the individual of these inherent rights are not in harmony with God's will nor with his revealed word.

Finally, ours is the responsibility to make available to the tens of thousands of faithful members throughout the foreign missions the privilege of participating in the eternal nature of covenants and ceremonies.

Not counting Kirtland and Nauvoo, eight temples have been completed and are now in use, with two more under construction at a total cost of $13,758,750.00.

One of our greatest responsibilities is to make accessible to faithful members of the Church in foreign lands suitable houses of the Lord. Tens of thousands of them are not able to come where temples are, and where they receive the blessings of the endowment, to have sealed to them their wives and their children for time and all eternity. Ours is the duty to carry the temple to them. It may not be expensive, but it will be complete, and thus will churches be built and strengthened throughout the world.

On this Sunday morning, may we demonstrate our knowledge of the reality of Christ's existence and our love for the gospel by renewed service to his Church, by greater kindness and forbearance toward our associates, and by exercising more charity for the honest in heart the world over.

In the words of President John Taylor, and radiating his same spirit, we say to the priesthood throughout the world:

"Go to every tribe and nation;
Visit every land and clime;
Sound to all the proclamation;
Tell to all the truth sublime;
That the gospel,
Does in ancient glory shine."

God give us this power and the spirit of our callings in rich abundance I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

To the listening audience, President David O. McKay has just addressed us. We shall now hear from President Joseph Fielding Smith, president of the Council of the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Hugh B. Brown.

President Smith.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I HAVE always taken a great interest in Section 4 of the Doctrine and Covenants, one reason being that it was given directly to my great-grandfather, who made inquiry to know what the Lord would have him do. Second, because I have always considered that this revelation was written to me, not only to me, but also to every man in the Church holding the Holy Priesthood.

It was not intended as a personal revelation.

May I make a comment? I do not wish to detract from anything that has been said by President McKay, but I would like to make this comment in relation to verse 4: "For behold the field is white already to harvest; and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perisheth not, but bringeth salvation to his soul."

There is a great responsibility resting upon the members of the Church, both men and women, to proclaim the words of eternal life, but more especially upon these men who have accepted the priesthood with a promise that they would be true and faithful and would magnify their callings, and in the verse that I have read the Lord proclaims this fact: that if we fail in the duties that are assigned to us and refuse to accept the responsibilities which come from that priesthood, that we ourselves are in danger of losing our own salvation. It is a great responsibility resting upon each of us to proclaim this truth to a benighted world. I say benighted because for hundreds of years they have been without the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord and the proper understanding of the things which are written in the scriptures. They have not had a correct understanding of the nature of God, not until the Prophet Joseph Smith came to reveal it.

Strange as that may be, considering the plainness with which the doctrine is taught throughout the scriptures, and so plainly presented this morning by President Clark in his radio talk, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, that they are separate individuals or personages, one the Father and one the Son, but the world did not understand. They do not understand it today notwithstanding the fact that the Lord has made it so plain through the revelations that came through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

It is rather remarkable, is it not, that all the great religious teachers of the world, since the time of the passing of the Apostles to the time that this youth went out into the woods to pray, had no clear understanding of the nature of God.

The men of the Protestant Reformation did not understand it, and in their endeavors to correct the evils that they saw then existing, it never entered into their minds that the doctrine that had been proclaimed since the third century or the fourth century of the Christian era was not in accord with the revelations given by the Apostles of God as they are recorded in the New Testament. That never entered their minds, but they continued that same doctrine of the mysterious nature of God, that Jesus Christ lost his body after the resurrection and was swallowed up in some mysterious way into the great body of God, ethereal in its nature.

Now, when Joseph Smith went out into the woods to pray, he had no understanding that the Father and the Son were separate Personages. I am sure of that. How would he know it after listening to the teachings of the ministers of his day? But he came back after the manifestation was given to him, having been instructed by the Son of God with that knowledge clearly in his mind, and proclaimed it to the world—that Jesus Christ is literally the only begotten Son of God in the flesh, and that he is in the image of his Father.

He gave that great truth back again to the world, and unfortunately many of them, even to this day, are not ready nor willing to receive it.

Now, in the preface to the book of Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord's preface, the first section in the book, we have some proclamations given for the benefit of the world which I would like to read to you.

"Wherefore, I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jun., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments;

"And also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets—

"The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh—

"But that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world;

Sunday, April 4

Second Day

"That faith also might increase in the earth;

"That mine everlasting covenant might be established;

"That the fulness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.

"Behold, I am God and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding.

"And inasmuch as they erred it might be made known;

"And inasmuch as they sought wisdom they might be instructed;

"And inasmuch as they sinned they might be chastened, that they might repent;

"And inasmuch as they were humble they might be made strong, and blessed from on high, and receive knowledge from time to time.

"And after having received the record of the Nephites, yea, even my servant Joseph Smith, Jun., might have power to translate through the mercy of God, by the power of God, the Book of Mormon.

"And also those to whom these commandments were given, might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually—

"For I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance." (D. & C. 1:17-31.)

I wish the Lord could have said, and I wish he could say it today, that this is the only Church upon the face of the earth with which he is well pleased considering this Church individually. That he cannot say, but if we would humble ourselves, if those who are wayward and indifferent, who have received the testimony of the truth would repent, and if every man and every woman and child who is old enough to understand would turn unto the Lord with full purpose of heart and honor and serve him as we are commanded to do, the Lord would be able to say it.

The day is promised when righteousness shall prevail, and when it shall cover the face of the earth as the waters do the sea, and I am sure that many of us will have to humble ourselves if we live to see that day, and if we do not humble ourselves, and should that day come, we will have to be removed.

Brethren and sisters, let us keep the commandments of God as they have been revealed. Let us set the example before the people of the earth, that they, seeing our good works, may feel to repent and receive the truth and accept the plan of salvation, that they may receive salvation in the celestial kingdom of God, and so I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

B

RETHREN AND SISTERS, there are times when silence would seem to be more appropriate than speech, when one is so overwhelmed that speech is no longer an adequate medium of expression, when one could wish that he could broadcast a message from his soul without opening his mouth.

Some years ago we took our little family down to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. The children were young. We stood where thousands of you have stood, on Inspiration Point, and we saw with awe and wonder the depths, the distances, the majesty of that scene. We felt our littleness and insignificance.

As we stood there absolutely speechless, with our arms around each other, little Mary slipped her hand in mine and said, "Daddy, don't you think we ought to pray?"

Looking out upon this great canyon of faces, and realizing that out beyond there are other thousands listening in, again one is smitten with a sense of littleness and insignificance, again it seems that prayer would be the only appropriate form of speech. A man may talk to God when he is afraid to talk to men. Would you join then in a continuation of the beautiful prayer that was offered in the invocation by President [Golden L.] Woolf, which expressed thanks and gratitude for our blessings? All of us are indebted to the past, and I am sure we could, with profit, join in prayer and thanksgiving to God for those who preceded us. All of us, like the mountain streams, depend for our volume and quality upon the springs and tributaries that lie far back in the hills.

Indeed some of us are aware this morning of sustenance from tributaries which have their source on the other side of the valley of life. We thank thee, our Father, for our ancestors. Many of us look back through five generations of Latter-day Saints. We think of them who were associated with the Prophet, of their trials and difficulties; their heartbreaking experiences in Kirtland and Nauvoo; their subsequent journeys across the plains with their ox teams or handcarts; and for some of them the memorable march of the Mormon Battalion. They established themselves in this desert land, and some of them were called by the Authorities of the Church to move again and go into even more rugged and forbidding areas extending from Mexico to Canada. We thank God for our great progenitors. With Nephi, we feel that to be born of goodly parents is one of heaven's choicest blessings.

If for a moment we become personal, it is not because our experiences and heritage are unique—they are but typical of the lives of Latter-day Saints—but we are thinking now of a father, willing all his life to lay everything upon the altar, sending boys on missions, building up new areas, struggling against the elements. We are thinking of a pioneer mother, a woman who somehow had the genius to inspire in the hearts of each of her seven sons and seven daughters a sense of their individual worth and who predicted for them blessings in the future predicated upon observance of law.

We are thinking too of our companions, and I am sure all of you brethren who are assembled and who are listening will join in a tribute to those who know us best, in our weaknesses, and still somehow contrive to bring out of us something of our potential worth; who pray and love us into being our better selves.

This speech would not now be made were it not for one of the choicest of the daughters of Israel. Her faith and loyalty and love were sail and chart and compass on life's voyage. O God, we thank thee for our companions. We are grateful, too, for the hallowing influence of children in the home. They hold us like an anchor in the storm. We think back when we knelt by their beds to nurse them through affliction, when we called on God to bless and restore them, and he heard us; we thank God for the influence of their lives upon us, and for the continuing dividends of their love and loyalty.

We thank God for the privilege that has been ours of working with the young people of the Church. The inspiring message of our beloved President about conditions in the world and the need for missionaries makes those of us who have had that experience feel, as I am sure these mission presidents here today must feel, how great it would be if there could be a hundred thousand of them. I am sure each mission could absorb all the missionaries that we now can send.

Sunday, April 4

Second Day

Thank God for the privilege of working with those young people, worthy descendants of pioneer stock, faithful, full of integrity and faith. They have meant so much to our lives.

Humbly we thank God for the priceless privilege that has been ours to associate with the men in the service, men who are willing to die for freedom and country, and have the courage to live the principles of the gospel. We have seen them coming back from bombing missions, kneeling in their battle dress and talking to God as few men talk. Thank God for the privilege of associating with the servicemen. God bless them.

May we, as we leave this conference, not forget them, but let a flood of letters go out to them, expressing our faith in them, letting them know that we are praying for them.

Thank God, too, for the great privilege of associating with the students in Brigham Young University, the inspiration that comes from those thousands of valiant young Latter-day Saints, fruits of the gospel, nourished and sustained by the blood of their pioneer ancestors. Truly they are thoroughbreds. We almost envy you young people who are listening in, and who are here today, envy you the future, dark and difficult though it may seem. Do not allow the huge events that are darkening the horizon to intimidate your souls, for God will make you equal to your time and task. The same one who led your parents will stand by you if you forsake him not. We envy you as you go forth with the improved methods and increased power to which reference has been made, and we say, with the poet,

Ye that have faith to look with fearless eyes

Beyond the tragedy of a world at strife,
And know that out of death and night shall rise

The dawn of ampler life:

Rejoice, whatever anguish rend the heart,

That God has given you the priceless dower
To live in these great times and have your part

That ye may tell your sons who see the light

In Freedom's crowning hour, High in the heavens—their heritage to take—

"I saw the powers of darkness take their flight;

"I saw the morning break."†

Now, while it would be inappropriate to even mention the first personal pronoun in this speech, it would be ungrateful indeed if reference were not made to the gratitude that fills our hearts for the privilege that now is ours to associate with these great men, a privilege that must not be misread as merit. We love and support and honor them. We thank God for the privilege of sitting at the feet of greater men than Gamaliel of old who tutored Paul.

God help us all that we may add to our faith, virtue, and to virtue, knowledge, and to knowledge, temperance, and to temperance, patience, and to patience, godliness, and to godliness, brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness, charity. God grant that these things may be in us and abound, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ate and merciful power and authority ever described in all literature. It tempers and sweetens the life of him who holds it and blesses the lives of those to whom he ministers. It is the perfect plan of service to humankind because within its province come the greatest of all blessings to man and woman. Why should any man be ashamed of this precious endowment? If he had a commission from political authority, he would probably boast of it. I speak to my own brethren when I ask them how they justify themselves in speaking lightly of this sacred and divine blessing which has come into their lives. There are men, I know, and I hope I won't offend by mentioning them as a class, who have flippantly joked about the priesthood most of their lives. Some of these men, like myself, are reaching an age where life's expectancy is not too long. Out of my friendship for them, I ask them to repent before it is too late.

I mention next the wisdom which the gospel of Christ brings to us about the human body, its status and its care. We are indebted to science, and the great men of research, for the development of much knowledge concerning the human body. I pay sincere tribute to those who have contributed so much to our health, our comfort, and our longevity. I believe that there will be unfolded to these devoted men of science many more of nature's secrets to combat dread diseases, to free men for a larger measure of usefulness in the world. But science has not discovered the secret of life itself, its beginnings and its purposes. The gospel of Christ has disclosed that information. It has told us in plainness of our beginnings as spirit children of the Father, of our coming to earth to take on mortal bodies, of our probation here, and our destiny, if we so elect, to win high places on our return to the Father in the eternities to come. Our bodies, thus housing the eternal spirit, take on a glorified spiritual concept which science cannot give them. Out of that concept we come to know that we cannot desecrate the body with impunity, and without offering affront to him who made provision for us to have it. It follows that we cannot take poisons into it, or otherwise abuse it, without injury to our own self-respect and without great ingratitude. What an incentive to health and cleanliness of life this lofty concept is! In their major aspects the demonstrations of science in the last hundred years have tended to confirm the wisdom of the Word of Wisdom, a product of the gospel of Christ. Where is the thoughtful man or woman who is ashamed of this exalted concept of the human body?

In the society of men it is pretty generally acknowledged that there is no greater establishment than that of the home. Families are the component units in communities and nations, and thoughtful people the world over assert that if all could be right with the homes of the people, the progress of civilization would be assured. Next to its witness for the supremacy of one God and the coming forth of his Son, perhaps the greatest contribution emanating from the holy Bible is its historical and doctrinal support for the unity of the family in the patriarchal order. From the beginning man and woman were to cleave together. Marriage has been ordained of God, and sons and daughters commanded to honor their fathers and their mothers. All of the earlier pronouncements concerning marriage and family ties set forth in the ancient scriptures were adopted by and incorporated into the gospel of Christ. Revelations given with the restoration of the gospel in the latter days have expanded man's understanding of this all-important relationship. The wedlock of a man and woman has been given a significance never before mentioned in all Christian literature, although undoubtedly wished for and hoped for by countless thousands who passed away before the new revelation came. I say wished for and hoped for because I feel sure that Christian men and women of firm faith in immortality have always longed and prayed for the reunion of their families in the hereafter. Well, that assurance came with the restored gospel of Christ and the authority of the Holy Priesthood, under whose power men and women were no more united in marriage until "death doth them part," but they were sealed together with bonds that persist in holy matrimony for time and for all eternity, and into the marriage covenant so established came their children to belong to them forever and forever. What a satisfaction to the true lover of home and family! What a consolation in times of sad earthly partings! What a hope and faith to live for!

I wish that all loving husbands and wives, fathers and mothers, who have lived in the past and who live at present, could enjoy the peace, satisfaction, and encouragement that this great doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ brings. How can one be ashamed of this exalting principle of life and salvation? Is one ashamed of it when he or she prefers a wedding in a church with elaborate, costly, and showy pageantry designed for social prestige, to the simple, quiet, sequestered, meaningful, sacred service performed in the temple of God? Is she ashamed of the gospel of Christ when she declines to yield to the requirements of modesty and appropriateness in dress for the sacred temple ceremonies? Is he ashamed of the gospel when he cannot muster the courage and strength to forsake a personal habit incompatible with the life which is contemplated for the participants in the holy order of matrimony? O my young friends, who contemplate selecting partners for life, I entreat you, be not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. Avail yourselves of the great and beautiful privileges it offers to you. If you do, a rich happiness will come into your lives that will far exceed any slight deprivation you may think you suffer in obtaining the promised blessings.

We live in a world where good men pray for brotherhood and peace. I am sure that to many their prayers seem in vain. So many years have passed since there was a measure of good feeling among nations that we have mostly forgotten that it ever existed and despair that it ever may be. Only the Lord knows what the future holds in store. We as a people are resigned to the acceptance of his will and purposes. I think, however, it is not displeasing to him for us to pray and hope for peace, and certainly it is not out of order for his Church to endeavor to lay the foundations for peace. It has been made known to us through revelation that a lasting peace can come only through righteousness and brotherhood. So long as the adversary of light and truth is able to lead his followers in rebellion against God and the gospel of Christ, so long will there be conflict in the world.

I am not one who believes that that conflict will never cease, for I have faith in the triumph of truth and of God's plans. His eternal plans are laid out for us in the gospel of Christ, and however much stress statesmen and men of the world lay on other formulas, true Christians know that conformity to the plans of the gospel alone will bring enduring peace. The gospel provides us with full understanding of all the requisites. It tells us that first there must be recognition of the supremacy of and love of God the Father, and secondly, that man recognizing himself as a son of God must love his fellow man. These are the basic requirements, but we are given innumerable instructions as to how to implement them.

His Church has been set up in the earth as a tangible institution to foster and encompass the divinely appointed society in which men may live. This government is under the jurisdiction of appointed servants in the Holy Priesthood, who are authorized to give counsel and make decisions in the operation of the Church. The society itself is founded upon the fundamental principle and assumption that individual salvation here and hereafter is acquired through our Savior by individual good living in compliance with the laws and ordinances of the gospel. ## PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

I AM DEEPLY grateful to be associated with you, my dear brethren and sisters, in this great conference of the Church. In your presence I give thanks for the blessings of health and strength sufficient to enable me to participate in the cause so dear to our hearts. I thank God for the testimony and conviction which has come to me in my youth, and grown throughout the years, that he lives, that he is the Organizer and Ruler of the universe, that his Son is our Redeemer and Savior and the Lord of this earth, and that his gospel, planned in the beginning to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man, has been authentically restored to the earth in its fulness, after a long period of time during which its spirit and power were lost to God's children.

So grateful I am for these transcendent blessings which have come into my own life that years ago I resolved that with the Lord's help and the limited powers at my disposal I would do what I could to extend these benefactions to my fellow men, my brethren and sisters in the family of the Lord. With such a purpose in mind, I have selected a text today, which after the most inspiring addresses which have taken place not only at this session but also at the Church of the Air session, I would think to be substantially unnecessary, and yet which I fear in the interest of some at least, may with propriety be called to your attention. I have in mind the preface to the famous definition of the gospel which Paul gave to us years and years ago, in the following well-known words: "... I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." (Romans 1:16.) I am induced to dwell upon these words through the observations which I have made for many years pertinent to the conduct of men and women both within and without the Church. I have remarked on previous occasions that Paul must have been inspired, as he gave his definition of the gospel, to look down through the ages of men and with prophetic vision fathom the reasoning, the philosophies, and the dispositions of men of all ages. Not only was his preface justified on the premise of vision and understanding, but it also conformed to the words of the Master himself, when, at the conclusion of his sermon after feeding the multitude, he uttered these portentous words: "Who-soever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." (Mark 8:38.)

Why should men be ashamed of the gospel of Christ? It is conceivable that many may not be converted and have faith sufficient to accept the divinity of the Lord Jesus and the efficacy of his gospel, but having once had assurance of his reality and the blessings which flow therefrom, why are they so hesitant in the acknowledgment of his goodness and merciful consideration for them? I don't know that I am competent to point out the psychological basis for this state of mind, but I doubt that a psychologist is needed to understand some of the factors that contribute to it.

Undoubtedly one of the factors is pride; I think a false pride, which induces a sense of fear, nearly always without justification, that a confession of religious faith will make for loss of prestige and standing among a certain class of associates. There is sometimes fear that ridicule will follow such an acknowledgment, and of course no one likes to be ridiculed because that is great injury to pride and self-esteem and hard to take.

There are some who may regard the acknowledgment of spiritual power as a stigma of weakness, that the humility which is essential to the acceptance of divine power is incompatible with strength of manhood and self-determination. That was in large measure the doctrine of Hitler and is today the philosophy of Communism. I hope there are not many who adopt such a philosophy of life.

Sunday, April 4

There are some who seem to feel that their liberties are circumscribed by the acceptance and acknowledgment of spiritual forces and that they are much freer and better off to make no profession of faith whatever. Considered in the light of a deterrent to wrongdoing, perhaps they are right, but such a concept is really an abandonment of the underlying principles of righteousness and good character.

Then there are those, constituting perhaps the largest portion of that group within the Church who seem ashamed of the gospel of Christ, who are just too weak to stand up under all circumstances and conditions for the right and the truth as they know it to be. Some of these are our so-called intellectuals, who persuade themselves that they suffer something of a loss of caste in the sophisticated world in which they move by plain, unequivocal acknowledgment of the Lord's supremacy and our dependence on him. How they come to persuade themselves that a lesser order of intelligence is required to comprehend and acquire the eternal and transcendently beautiful and vital truths and concepts of life, human behavior and destiny coming through revelation, than the findings of science, I do not understand. Both are important, all a part of God's wise provision for humanity. Why disparage either?

There is one type of thinking with which I have some sympathy, and that is for the man who is hesitant to make professions who has not acquired the strength to live up to them. He falls, however, not so much in the category of those ashamed of the gospel as of those who have not had sufficient conviction of the truth to bring to them mastery of themselves and their habits.

Now while I may not have pointed out all of the factors and circumstances which give rise to this state of being ashamed of the gospel, I should like to pass to the more important and positive aspects of my theme by asking the comprehensive question, "What is there about the gospel of Christ to be ashamed of?"

The gospel of Christ is revelation. The Savior himself was a revelation, coming to earth to reveal to men in the flesh the Father, his personality and his attributes. Christ himself was in no sense an outgrowth of his times and environment. He came in shocking contrast to the philosophies and practices prevailing at the time, as is being pointed out so impressively by our current speaker [Hugh Nibley] on the Sunday evening radio hour of the Church. The gospel was restored in the latter days through revelation. Few people acquainted with the life and history of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and the circumstances under which the restoration took place, will honestly contend that the great work he initiated could have come about on his own initiative and personal capabilities. Revelation is the foundation of the gospel of Christ. Why be ashamed of it? Would it make anybody happier to ascribe the origin of the gospel to the rationalizing of men? Such a position would surely rob it of its authority and vitality. Why should any Christian wish to do that? He may not be a Christian. That is within his right of election, but if he is a Christian, how can he be ashamed of revelation?

Priesthood is an essential component of the gospel plan. Why should men be ashamed of the priesthood? In granting the priesthood to man, the Lord has dignified and honored him as perhaps he could have done in no other way. The priesthood is the power by which the worlds were created, and is "... without beginning of days or end of years." (Alma 13:7.) It is the specific delegation of the authority of the Lord to administer the ordinances of the holy gospel, and it is the requisite investiture of a man to receive his highest reward in the life to come. It is the kindest, most charitable, most consider-over-all function of the Church is to bless its members and all of God's children. All of its purposes are altruistic and Christlike. It constitutes his kingdom set up in the earth to fulfil the high destiny he has set for it. All of its agencies strive through devoted leadership and faithful members to reach these great ends.

It endeavors to create a brotherhood among men in fraternities of the priesthood who exemplify the oneness for which he prayed with his own disciples before his departure. This fraternity sufficiently extended in the world will bring peace. To bring peace to the human soul and all mankind is a major objective of the gospel of Christ. Who is ashamed of this noble aspiration? Who is ashamed to be identified with such a lofty cause? I wish I could answer: Few Christians and none within the Church of Jesus Christ. I am afraid that answer would not be accurate, but I express the earnest hope that as the years go by and the designs and purposes of the Lord become more apparent, the number of those who are ashamed of the gospel of Christ will rapidly diminish. I take the liberty of holding out a promise to Christian men everywhere and to their wives and children: If you will develop within yourselves a deeper appreciation for the benefactions coming into your lives through the ministry and gospel of our Lord, and if you will more freely acknowledge in the presence of all men his divine Lordship of the earth, a measure of peace and happiness will come into your hearts and souls which will enrich your lives, and the lives of countless others, and God will bless you and make you happy.

Then too, my brethren and sisters in the Church and kingdom of our Lord, I make this solemn declaration: If you are never ashamed of the gospel of Christ, if you will always pray to him and never defame his sacred name, if you will never make light of the Holy Priesthood and the ceremonies and ordinances of the gospel, a spirit of rebellion will never come into your hearts.

Your confidence in the leadership of the Church will grow and increase. Your relationships with your brethren and sisters will become more tender and sweet. You will grow in faith and in good works, and when your life's mission has been completed and you go hence to your reward, the Savior will greet you, as he has promised, with those glorious words, "I am not ashamed of you."

May that be our lot, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency of the Church has just concluded speaking. To the listening audience, I believe I neglected to tell you that the speaker who preceded the congregational singing was Elder Hugh B. Brown, member of the Assistants to the Council of the Twelve.

These conferences furnish us the opportunity to say thank you to the Tabernacle Choir and the members thereof, to the Chorister and Organists, and the Officers. Their devotion is commendable. They have been here since seven as you know, continuing week after week, and month after month, rendering service. So this is an opportunity, brothers and sisters, to say thank you. We do appreciate what you are doing.

We wish to express appreciation also to the Berkeley Stake for these beautiful calla lillies, which adorn the rostrum, and appreciation to the Tacoma Stake for 3,000 daffodils, contributed by the Puyallup Valley Daffodil Festival Committee for the beautification of this building during Conference.

We express appreciation to the city officials for their efficient care in directing traffic this morning. You all have noticed how efficiently they are handling that, and we wish them to know that we appreciate their cooperation,—the mayor, city council, and all who are contributing to the safety of the great congregations assembled, and that we may sense perhaps more definitely the size of the congregation

SECOND DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The Sunday afternoon session of the Conference was held at 2 o'clock p.m. in the Tabernacle. The Tabernacle Choir was in attendance and furnished the choral music for the session. President David O. McKay, who was presid-

President David O. McKay:

Members of the Church are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City in the third session of the One Hundred Twenty-Fourth Annual Conference of the Church.

For those who are unable to enter the building and there are thousands, apparently, we announce that these services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall over a public address system and by television. These services are also being televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5 in Salt Lake City and are being heard over radio through KSL over 23 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, California, Oregon, and Wyoming, the names of which stations have already been announced to the radio audience during this pause.

We desire to express our deep appreciation to these various radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts, and with our expression we desire to add the following from the Tacoma Third Ward, Bishop Preston Ricks: "Receiving telecast clearly. Thanks to you and station KTMT for making it possible."

Denver, in Colorado: "Inspired with first televised conference services. Picture excellent. Hundreds express gratitude for this blessing." Denver Stake presidency, by Alexander P. Thurston, senior member high council.

The music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We shall begin this service by the Choir singing "Lift Up Your Heads, O Ye Gates."

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Carl C. Burton, formerly president of the Great Lakes Mission.

"Lift Up Your Heads, O Ye Gates," by the Choir.

The Choir sang the selection, "Lift Up Your Heads, O Ye Gates."

Elder Carl C. Burton, formerly president of the Great Lakes Mission, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing "Shepherd Lead Me."

After the singing we shall listen to President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency.

The Choir sang the anthem, "Shepherd, Lead Me."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

I HAVE thought I might appropriately talk today about our Bible. What I want to say is of a technical and controversial nature, and I have written it out so that I might be sure to say what I want to say. What I shall say will have primary application to the New Testament.

As of today and outside the Roman world, which uses the Latin text, there are two principal Greek texts of the Bible used for English translation. We are today interested only in the text of the New Testament. The first of these is the "Byzantine" Greek text. Our King James Version is a translation of this text. The second is the "Alexandrian" text (as identified by some scholars), which is the controlling text of the translation found in the Revised Versions of the last three quarters of a century. There is a popular impression that these Revised Versions are merely corrected translations of the "Byzantine" Greek text. This is not the fact. Of these Revised Versions, the first appeared in 1881 (a British Version with American participation), the second in 1901 (an American Version, largely a duplication of the 1881 version), and the third in 1946-1952 (an amended American Version). In all these translations the "Alexandrian" Greek text controlled in certain great essentials.

The title page of the latest revision—the Revised Standard Version (New Testament, 1946)—in common with the other revisions, is not so fully revealing as it might be. As each of the others, it carries the impression that this is a further revision of the King James Version, whereas in fact it is rather a revision of the earlier revisions.

The "Byzantine" Greek text, which in translation is our Bible, the King James Version, is said to have been the generally accepted text in all non-Roman Christendom from the last half of the fourth century, till the middle of the last century.

This King James or Authorized Version, "as far as it is translated correctly," has been the version accepted by this Church since it was organized. The Prophet Joseph Smith undertook, under the inspiration of the Lord, to make a revision of the Bible—not a translation. This work was never completed, except as to certain portions appearing in the Pearl of Great Price. Since the work was not completed, the Church has never formally adopted it, save as to the parts in the Pearl of Great Price.

At this point, it ought to be observed that Bible critics may, for our purpose, be placed in two schools—Extreme Textualists and Sound or High Textualists.

The Extreme Textualists rule out the whole of the so-called miraculous elements of the Gospels—those events which lie outside the range of known laws of nature (as understood by these Textualists)—and brand all these elements as myths, legends, popular exaggeration, symbolism, allegory. One scholar has measured their thesis as follows: "The Gospels, as manipulated by the uncertain methods of this sort of criticism, seem capable of yielding a picture of any sort of Jesus that the critic desires." (Hastings, Encyclopedia, vol. 4, p. 320a—1928.)

The Sound or High Textualists admit the miraculous element but seem sometimes to treat it somewhat gingerly.

We have now to do with the Extreme Textualists, in considering these various revisions of 1881-1885, 1900-1901, and 1946-1952.

Before going farther it might be well briefly to note that, out of over four thousand known Greek manuscripts (in large part fragments), the Extreme Textualists pin their faith primarily to two Greek Codices, Sinaiticus (discovered in a convent on Mt. Sinai by Tischendorf in 1844) and Vaticanus (brought to the Vatican at Rome as early as 1481). These are claimed to be the two oldest known vellum manuscripts. Tischendorf exploited Sinaiticus; Westcott and Hort, Vaticanus, using Sinaiticus as a supporting text, along with Alexandrinus, sent as a gift from the Patriarch of Constantinople to Charles I of England in the year 1628. Westcott and Hort prepared a new Greek text from these and a few others that supported their readings (principally C and D). A third primary source of recent criticism is the Chester Beatty Papyri—in Greek—discovered in 1931 in Egypt. These have been exploited by Dr. Kenyon who affirms they are "the most important Biblical discovery since that of the Codex Sinaiticus" (Tischendorf). Thus first Tischendorf, then Westcott and Hort, then Kenyon have each had his favorite manuscripts which each interprets and uses to the maximum to develop in text form his Extreme Textualist views.

The Byzantine Greek text—which is the basis of our King James Version, and the Sinaiticus—Vaticanus text existed side by side apparently for almost the first eight hundred years; they appear to have been in virtual competition. Then the church as a whole adopted the Byzantine text which became the ruling text from that time till the challenge of it in the middle of the last century. During all this time, the Roman Church had its own Latin text—that developed into the Vulgate.

Modern criticism made its appearance at about the middle of the 1700s. Once begun, it steadily increased as time went on. At first it related primarily to the Old Testament; then the New Testament became involved, and while the whole Byzantine text—the Textus Receptus (in translation, the King James Version)—was brought under fire, the chief objective of the Extreme Textualist attack became the Gospels. By the end of the first quarter of the 1800s, the warfare against the “Byzantine” text was open, vicious, and unrelenting. It must be remembered that the attack of the Extreme Textualists pivoted upon the personality and character of Jesus of Nazareth and the accuracy and truth of his teachings, doctrines, and works.

For the first three Christian centuries, and following Simon the Sorcerer (whom Peter scathingly execrated for seeking to buy the Holy Ghost with gold—see Acts 8:17ff), heretics and heresies, great and small, sought to distort or wipe out the recognition of Jesus as Christ. Time buried the heretics and most of the heresies. But one heresy lived on, appearing now and again in the flowing centuries, usually in the dark corners of ecclesiastical discussions, but sometimes in the open. I refer to Arianism that nearly wrecked the Christian Church in the time of Constantine. It is an obscure and shifting doctrine that, shortly put, and in general terms, denies Godhood to the Christ. (Robertson, History, Vol. I, pp. 385 ff.; Hastings, Encyclopedia, sub voce “Arianism”; Neander, History, Vol. II, pp. 403 ff.; Schaff, History of the Christian Church, Vol. III, p. 620.)

While not now paraded, the doctrine lies behind the thinking and writings of those Bible critics who are grouped together as Extreme Textualists. To this group (as already intimated) must be charged the Bible revisions of the last three quarters of a century—the British, which the great body of the Christian Church refused to accept; the American, which had no better reception; and the recent (1946-1952) American revision (Revised Standard Version), which perpetuates the unacceptable changes of the two earlier revisions. The Greek manuscripts relied upon by the Extreme Textualists seem all to be tintured with Arianism, which had its birth in Alexandria, from which the text gets its name, Alexandrian.

The translation found in these various revisions, contains, on the one hand, many passages that in effect voice Arian or near-Arian concepts, and, on the other hand, omits many passages that contradict Arian doctrines. It is affirmed that the changes they have made run into thousands—5337 in the Greek text and 36,191 in the English translation. In a recent magazine, Allen Wikgren is quoted as having observed in The Interpreter's Bible, that of “some 180,000 words in the New Testament, alterations amounted to an estimated 30,000, or an average of 4½ per verse.”

For a century and a quarter, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has declared the King James Version of the Bible to be the word of God, with a reservation as to incorrect translations of the Greek text on which it was based. The Inspired Version of the Prophet, so far as finished, supports the King James Version in all essentials on this point of the Godhood of Jesus the Christ. With our belief in Jesus as the Son of God, the Only Begotten, this Church cannot accept any version that takes from Jesus the Christ any attribute of Godhood.

I shall call attention to a very few only (some sixteen) of the thousands of new renderings in these revisions, particularly the latest—the Revised Standard Version. They will show that this Church cannot accept any of these versions as setting forth the true record of God's word to men.

LITERATURE OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

In the first place, I must note that one of the virtues claimed by the Revisionists for their new work is that it consciously and deliberately sets about to destroy the New Testament as a book of supreme classic literature. They have fairly well succeeded. They say the English of the King James Version is of too much beauty and elegance, is in English too majestic and lofty for the writings of New Testament times. I merely ask, could any language be too great, too elegant, too beautiful, too lofty, to record the doings and sayings of Jesus of Nazareth, the Christ?

ELIMINATION OF WORD "MIRACLE"

I have already noted that the Extreme Textualists rule out the whole of the so-called miraculous elements of the New Testament and brand them as myths, legends, popular exaggeration, symbolism, allegory. To further this thesis of theirs, they have eliminated the word miracle whenever it occurs in the New Testament (except in some half dozen places) and have substituted for the word miracle the word sign. A miracle may be a sign, but a sign is not necessarily a miracle. This attempt to discredit or destroy miracles by changing the name we give to them seems puerile, yet over the years, if not corrected, it would leave its effect. We Latter-day Saints know that Jesus did perform miracles, that his ancient Apostles performed them, and that through the exercise of the Holy Priesthood after the order of the Son of God, those duly authorized perform miracles today. This is our testimony to the world. We cannot accept a Bible text that would take the miraculous out of our lives. This manipulation is a prop for Arianism.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH (Matt. 1:25.)

In this connection it should be noted that the Revisionists have so manipulated the account of the birth of Jesus, as recorded in Matthew, as to give ground for the contention that the virgin birth of Jesus is a myth. Matthew in our Bible says—speaking about Joseph: "And knew her not till she had brought forth her firstborn son."

The Inspired Version follows the King James Version.

The Revised Standard Version reads: "But knew her not until she had borne a son," which opens the door for a contention regarding Mary's virginity. We can admit no question on this point, which was made certain in the great vision to Nephi. (See 1 Nephi 11:18 ff.) The overwhelming Greek Manuscript authority (there are more than 4000 of them, mostly fragments) sustains the King James Version. This is a change that tends to take away the Christian concept of the birth of Jesus. This bends toward Arianism.

MESSAGE OF THE HEAVENLY HOST (Luke 2:14.)

In the King James Version, the message of the heavenly host to the shepherds, reads: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." The Inspired Version follows, without essential change, the King James Version. The Revisionists have changed this to read: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men with whom he is pleased!" Obviously, the Revisionists have changed the sense and scope of the message from a greeting and blessing to all men, to a message to a restricted few. Christ's mission was for all men. Scholars affirm this change first comes into view in the second century and disappears in the fifth. We cannot accept this mutilation.

"THE SON OF GOD" (Mark 1:1.)

Mark's opening sentence in the King James Version reads thus: "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." The Inspired Version follows the King James. So do the Revised Versions, but the Revisionists have a marginal note that casts doubt upon the phrase, "The Son of God," by noting that some authorities omit these words, but they do not tell us that these words are said to be all but universally recognized in the manuscripts and the writings of the Fathers.

At best, this doubt-raising marginal note,* unexplained, carries to the uninformed the idea that he has a legitimate choice whether he will accept or reject these words. There is, on the record, no chance for a justifiable choice. Here is an Arianism.

CHRIST THE CREATOR (John 1:3-4.)

In the King James Version John declares: "All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men." The Revised Standard Version substitutes through for by in the phrase made by him. The Inspired Version of the Prophet Joseph follows the King James Version in part, with a different rendering for the fourth verse: "In him was the gospel, and the gospel was the life, and the life was the light of men."

But the Revisionists have cast a doubt on these passages by a marginal note which adds an alternative reading which omits and contracts the passage to read: "Without him was not anything made. That which has been made was life in him." Scholars affirm that this is a known perversion brought in by the Gnostics in the second century. It is an heretical change.

This is another omission and change affecting the dignity and personality of Christ.

THE SON OF MAN WHICH IS IN HEAVEN (John 3:13.)

John quotes Jesus as saying to Nicodemus:

"And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." The Inspired Version follows the King James Version. The British revision of the 1880's and the American Standard Version (1900-01) print the passage substantially as in the King James Version, but add a note which says: "Many ancient authorities omit who is in heaven." However, the latest American revision (the Revised Standard Version) leaves these words out of the text and adds a note: "Other ancient authorities add who is in heaven." That is, here, as in other places, the doubt cast in the earlier revisions is made a certainty in this last revision, and the King James text is relegated to a note. Yet scholars tell us that the omitted words are found in every Greek manuscript in the world except five, in the Latin, Syriac, and other versions in number totaling ten, and in the works of thirty-eight Fathers, and are recognized by certain Extreme Textualists as "quite above suspicion." Here again is a change of Arian type, tending to belittle Jesus. We of the Church cannot accept this alteration.

THE LORD'S PRAYER (Matt. 6:9-13; Luke 11:2-4.)

In his great Sermon on the Mount, Jesus taught the multitude how to pray, having warned them against praying in vain repetitions as the heathen do, who "think that they shall be heard for their much speaking," because, said he, "your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him." Every Sunday School child knows, or should know, the Lord's Prayer found in our Bible. I shall not repeat it. I will repeat the form found in the last revision (the Revised Standard Version):

"Our Father who art in heaven,
Hallowed be thy name.
Thy kingdom come,
Thy will be done,
On earth as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread;
And forgive us our debts,
As we also have forgiven our debtors;
And lead us not into temptation,
But deliver us from evil."

*Dr. Scrivener, who was one of the scholars who made the Revised Version of 1881 and carried the Greek text through the press (he and Dr. Hort are characterized by Dr. Kenyon as "the two most learned textual critics then alive"—1881), made, in his great work, A Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament (3rd edition, 1883), the following observations about these marginal readings: "... the various readings recorded in the margin are nothing better than rejected readings, deliberately refused a place in the text, and set in the margin, if sometimes too lightly, yet always in a spirit of fairness to the unlearned reader of Holy Scripture." (Preface, p. ix.)

The British and first American revisions said, "but deliver us from the evil one," and there was a further slight difference between the two earlier texts.

We miss from the foregoing those great sanctifying words that ended the prayer: "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen,"—found in our Bible.

A marginal note in the earlier versions reads substantially as in the latest version: "Other authorities, some ancient, add, in some form, For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen."

Thus was eliminated from the Lord's Prayer that great commitment made by the Only Begotten in the Council of Heaven, as he countered the proposal of Satan, the record quoting the Father, "But, behold, my Beloved Son, which was my Beloved and Chosen from the beginning, said unto me—Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever." (Moses 4:2.)

The prayer as given in Luke has been considerably tampered with.

Scholars affirm the changes made in these prayers stem from the pen of Marcion, the heretic of almost 1800 years ago. The reliance for these changes is placed in the five manuscripts (out of the 4000) adopted by the Extreme Textualists and scholars say these greatly disagree as among themselves on this point.

The Church cannot accept a text so constructed, eliminating fundamental principles, as against the King James Version, supported, as it is here, by the Inspired Version.

THE INSTITUTION OF THE SACRAMENT (Luke 22:19-20.)

During the Last Supper in the Upper Chamber, Jesus instituted the sacrament. Luke's account thereof is as follows:

"And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me.

"Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you."

The British Revised Version text was in substance the same, but a marginal note said: "Some ancient authorities omit which is given for you" (following body) and "which is poured out for you" (following blood). (The King James Version says, "which is shed for you.")

The account in the last revision—the Revised Standard Version—reads: "And he took bread, and when he had given thanks he broke it and gave it to them, saying, 'This is my body . . .'" so omitting the final sentence regarding the atoning blood.

Here again the doubt that was cast in the first revisions by a marginal note, becomes in the latest revision the actual text, while the King James Version text becomes a marginal note introduced by the words: "Other ancient authorities add . . ." (quoting).

Thus the latest revision practically completely eliminates from Luke's account of the institution of the sacrament, the portion dealing with the atoning blood.

The accounts given in Matthew (26:26-29) and in Mark (14:22-25) are not substantially changed in the revisions from the account given in the King James Version. But this leaves the record where, so far as the general reader knows, he may make a choice.

We of the Church cannot go along with a text that thus deals with the elemental principle of Christianity. This, too, tends to Arianism.

CASTING OUT EVIL SPIRITS (Matt. 17:21.)

The King James Version records in Matthew that when the disciples questioned why they could not cast out an evil spirit from one afflicted, Jesus, having cast out the evil spirit, replied: "Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

This declaration of Matthew is omitted in all the revisions (including the latest), with a marginal note reading: "Other ancient authorities insert verse 21, 'But this kind never comes out except by prayer and fasting.'" This elimination has been made notwithstanding scholars say that, as of the time of the first revision (1881) it is vouched for by every known uncial manuscript (manuscripts written in capital letters) but two, by every known cursive (manuscripts written in a running hand) but one, by the Latin and other versions, and by the ancient Fathers.

The account of the same incident in Mark (9:14-29) is substantially as in the King James Version, except that the phrase, "and fasting," is omitted, with a marginal note giving the usual information about "Other ancient authorities add and fasting."

The Inspired Version follows the King James Version.

Here again the uninformed reader is led to believe he is justified in a choice, though in reality there is no justification for a choice. Fasting is an essential element in the exercise of spiritual powers.

THE SON OF MAN IS COME TO SAVE
(Matt 18:11.)

Introducing his parable of the lost sheep as recorded in Matthew, Jesus said, as recorded in the King James Version: "For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost."

The revisions omit this verse entirely from their text, but insert a marginal note in their conventional form, varied slightly in the latest revision—The Revised Standard Version—"Many authorities, some ancient, insert ver. 11 For the Son of man came to save that which was lost."

This verse has been eliminated, notwithstanding scholars tell us that, as of 1881, it was attested by every known uncial manuscript except three, by every known cursive except three, by the Latin and other versions, and by the early Fathers. The Universal Eastern Church has read it in their churches from the beginning.

Here also the uninformed reader feels, without justification, that he has a choice as to whether Jesus did or did not say this.

The Inspired Version of the Prophet follows the King James Version.

The omission of this verse seems clearly in the interest of the Arian doctrine.

Our Church could not accept this elimination.

THE AGONY IN THE GARDEN AND THE MINISTERING ANGEL (Luke 22:43-44.)

In Luke's record of Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane, he states Jesus prayed:

"42. Saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done.

"43. And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him.

"44. And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground."

All the revisions print these verses substantially as in the King James Version, but add their doubt-raising marginal note, in their conventional form: "Many ancient authorities omit ver. 43, 44,"—the verses regarding the strengthening angel and sweat of blood.

These two verses contain our sole record of this event found in the New Testament. Scholars affirm that as of 1881, these verses were witnessed by "the whole body of the Manuscripts, uncial as well as cursive, and by every ancient Version," and by "upwards of forty famous personages from every part of ancient Christendom," including the Fathers, "fourteen of them being as old, —some of them, a great deal older, —than our oldest MSS."

The justification offered for casting a doubt upon them is that they are "an early Western interpolation, . . . a fragment from the Traditions, written or oral, . . . an 'evangelic Tradition,' therefore, 'rescued from oblivion by the Scribes of the second century.'"

The Inspired Version, with a slight, unimportant change, follows the King James Version. Furthermore, the question is settled for us by modern revelation, for King Benjamin predicted this specific suffering (Mosiah 3:7) and the

Second Day

Lord himself recounted it in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph. (D. & C. 19:18.)

We cannot accept the elimination of any part of the record of this great moment of almost unbearable agony.

THE WORDS ON THE CROSS (Luke 23:34.)

After Jesus had been nailed to the cross, and it had been planted in the ground, Jesus prayed: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

All the revisions print these words, but add the customary doubt-raising marginal note, "Some ancient authorities omit And Jesus said, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Scholars writing in 1881 say: "And yet these words are found in every known uncial and in every known cursive Copy, except four; besides being found in every ancient Version," and upwards of forty of the Fathers, beginning with Irenaeus of the second century.

No other prayer offered by Jesus on earth brings us closer to his divinity than this plea for his crucifiers.

The Inspired Version of the Prophet gives the reading of the King James Version, but inserts in brackets following the words, "for they know not what they do," the words, "(Meaning the soldiers who crucified him)."

CHRIST'S SALUTATION TO THE APOSTLES IN THE UPPER CHAMBER (Luke 24:36.)

Luke's account in the King James Version reads, as to the appearance of Christ in the Upper Chamber the night following the morning of the resurrection: "And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you."

The Revised Versions (British, 1881, and American, 1901) print, but cast doubt upon the phrase, "and saith unto them, Peace be unto you," with a note reading, "Some ancient authorities omit and saith unto them, Peace be unto you."

In this passage in the latest revision (the Revised Standard Version), the Revisionists have again made good the doubt raised in the earlier revisions and have entirely omitted the phrase from the printed text, and print a marginal note: "Other ancient authorities add and said to them, 'Peace to you!'"

Yet our scholar of 1881 affirms: "And yet the precious words (and saith unto them, Peace be unto you) are vouched for by 18 uncials (with Aleph A B at their head), and every known cursive copy of the Gospels: by all the Versions: and (as before) by Eusebius,—and Ambrose,—by Chrysostom,—and Cyril,—and Augustine."

The Inspired Version expands the King James Version but does not in any way destroy the essential elements of the record.

We of the Church cannot surrender this passage.

CHRIST DISPLAYS HIS HANDS AND FEET (Luke 24:40.)

In his account, Luke follows the salutation, "Peace be unto you," with a passage reading as follows, in the King James Version: "And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and his feet."

The earlier revisions (British, 1881, American, 1901) add to this passage a marginal note (though printing the verse in their text): "Some ancient authorities omit ver. 40."

Once more, the latest revision—the Revised Standard Version—makes good the doubt raised in the earlier revisions, and omits this passage from the text and adds a marginal note reading: "Other ancient authorities add verse 40, And when he had said this, he showed them his hands and his feet."

Again the doubt cast by the earlier revisions has become the ruling text.

Our collator of the 1880's comments that the words are found in eighteen uncials, beginning with Aleph A B; in every known cursive; in all the ancient versions, and he names ten of the earlier Fathers who quote them.

The Inspired Version follows the King James Version in this passage.

This record regarding the resurrected body of Jesus is of the last importance. We cannot suffer the loss of this incident, nor admit a doubt on its testimony.

CONJECTURAL EMENDATIONS

Bishop Westcott and Doctor Hort, in their own built Greek text of the New Testament, introduced a number of changes—additions and omissions—for which they adduced no authority whatever. A very learned collator declares that these conjectural emendations are “destitute not only of historical foundation, but of all probability, resulting from the internal goodness of the Text which its adoption would force upon us.” Another collator likens the claims urged for these emendations as equivalent to a claim of revelation, and says: “If these distinguished Professors have enjoyed a Revelation as to what the Evangelists actually wrote, they would do well to acquaint the world with the fact at the earliest possible moment. If, on the contrary, they are merely relying on their own inner consciousness for the power of divining the truth of Scripture at a glance,—they must be prepared to find their decrees treated with the contumely which is due to imposture, of whatever kind.”

The Revisionists responsible for the Revised Standard Version—the latest revision—rather plume themselves upon the fact that they have kept but one “conjectural emendation” offered by Westcott and Hort. This is not quite accurate, but that point is immaterial. The emendation they affirm they retain is Jude 5.

The King James Version reads: “I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not.

The particular phrase of interest to the Latter-day Saint is found in verse 6

—“the angels which kept not their first estate.”

The English revision (1881) proposed:

“5. Now I desire to put you in remembrance, though ye know all things once for all, how that the Lord, having saved a people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not. 6. And angels which kept not their own principality, but left their proper habitation, he hath kept in everlasting bonds under darkness unto the judgment of the great day.”

The American Version (1901) was identical save for two words: how is omitted before “that the Lord,” and which is changed to that after “angels.”

The Inspired Version of the Prophet Joseph follows the King James Version.

The Revised Standard Version—which retains Westcott and Hort’s conjectural emendation—reads:

“5. Now I desire to remind you, though you were once for all fully informed, that he who saved a people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed those who did not believe. 6. And the angels that did not keep their own position but left their proper dwelling have been kept by him in eternal chains in the nether gloom until the judgment of the great day.”

No one with an understanding of the great truths announced in Abraham 3, would have eliminated “first estate.” The expression “nether gloom” may be good mythology (we do not know), but it does not describe any Christian concept.

This emendation sufficiently establishes the unreliability of the Revised Standard Version, so far as the Latter-day Saints are concerned.

We shall consider one more omission, perhaps the largest individual omission made in all the text, and certainly among the most important—

THE LAST TWELVE VERSES OF MARK (Mark 16:9-20.)

These tell that Christ first appeared to Mary Magdalene, who reported to the disciples, but they believed not; then of the appearance of Jesus to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus, who reported to the disciples, who still believed not; then of the appearance to the eleven who sat at meat, whom he re-proved for their unbelief and hardness of heart, and then commissioned them to go into all the world and preach the gospel, telling them of the signs that would follow the believer, with their powers to heal the sick; and finally of Christ's ascension into heaven sitting on the right hand of God, with the disciples scattering to preach to the people, "the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

Sunday, April 4

Second Day

It is in this section of Mark that there occurs that passage quoted by President McKay this morning, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

The earlier Revised Versions (British, 1881, American, 1901) print these passages as part of the text, but leave extra space between verses 8 and 9 of the text, so suggesting that something is wrong. They add this marginal note: "The two oldest Greek manuscripts, and some other authorities, omit from ver. 9 to the end. Some other authorities have a different ending to the Gospel."

The Revised Standard Version (again making the earlier doubt cast a near certainty in their text), omits these verses (Mark 16:9-20) from the text and prints them as a marginal note, beginning: "Other texts and versions add as 16:9-20 the following passage:" Then follow the verses named.

One collator (1881) says these verses "are recognized by every one of the Versions," are "attested by every known Copy, except two of bad character: by a mighty chorus of Fathers: by the unfaltering Tradition of the Church universal." And a second collator of the same era affirms that he defends these verses "without the slightest misgiving." Referring to the first noted collator, the second one says that the first "has now thrown a stream of light upon the controversy" in a tone of "one who is conscious of having triumphantly maintained a cause which is very precious to him."

The elimination of these last twelve verses of Mark would undoubtedly add comfort to the Arians. If this whole record could be discredited, their cause would be that much advanced. It is gratifying to note that the great scholar Scrivener thought his contemporary Burgon had successfully established their authenticity.

It is not opportune now to discuss almost innumerable instances from among the thousands of changes by the Revisionists. Many, many of them are on a par with those we have mentioned. Enough has been said to show that the Latter-day Saints may not safely accept the latest revision as containing for them the word of our Heavenly Father for his children, nor a dependable record of the work and mission of our Lord Jesus Christ. We must cling to the text that has guided us for a century and a quarter.

We will close by quoting a few sentences from Dr. Kenyon, who seems more than any other to be today, the leader of the Extreme Textualists—to be looked up to by the rest—and who is more tolerant of contrary opinions than some others. In the concluding paragraphs of his book, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (1948), he discusses the Revised Versions as compared with the King James Version, and while never surrendering the claim of superiority for the revisions, he does yield these concessions:

"More than fifty years have now passed since the publication of the Revised Version [British], and the dust of the original controversy has had time to die down. In less than that time the Authorised Version [King James] drove the Geneva Bible from the field; but there is no sign of a similar victory of the Revised over the Authorised. The general verdict is, we think, this. There is no doubt that the Revised represents, in the New Testament, a very superior Greek text."

This is the Extreme Textualist view, but not the view of the opposing school

—the High or Sound Textualist. Kenyon continues:

"There is no doubt that in very many places, especially in the prophetic and poetical books of the Old Testament and in the Epistles in the New, it makes the meaning clearer and represents the original more accurately. On both these grounds the Revised Version is indispensable for anyone who really wishes to study the Bible. On the other hand, it is universally felt that very many of the verbal changes introduced by the Revisers, especially in the Gospels (where they are more noticeable because of the greater familiarity of these books), are unnecessary and disturbing. . . . In the Gospels the sense of discomfort from the constant changes of the familiar words is too great, and the changes, where they do not rest on a change in the text translated, are unnecessary. . . . It is true that the Authorised Version [King James] has struck its roots too deeply into our language and literature, and is itself too great a monument of literary art, to be dispossessed without a preponderating balance of loss. We can no more do without the Authorised Version [King James] than we can do without Shakespeare and Bacon. . . . Both are now essential parts of our heritage; and the final verdict must be: The Revised for study, the Authorised for reading." (Kenyon, Our Bible, pp. 243-44.)

This may be the final verdict where there is not too much concern over Arian doctrines denying Godhood to Jesus, and other erroneous doctrines, but to the Latter-day Saint, the final verdict must be that no text that minimizes or denies the Godhood of Jesus, can be regarded as the word of God, no matter how old and respected the manuscript may be which sets out such views.

To the Latter-day Saint, Jesus was the Christ, the Only Begotten, the Son of God, a member of the Trinity. All our modern scriptures are to this point, and the true ancient scriptures will neither take away from, nor destroy this everlasting truth.

God grant to each and every of us this priceless testimony, I ask, in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the First Presidency, has just spoken to us. We shall now hear from Elder S. Dilworth Young, of the First Council of Seventy. He will be followed by Elder Antoine R. Ivins.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

ON TUESDAY, April 6, 1830, six men gathered in the home of the Whitmer family and organized the Church. I can remember with what surprise I learned for the first time, years ago, that it did not happen on a Sunday. Apparently the sixth day of April was more important than the day of the week. Joseph Smith, the Prophet, on the day of the organization of the Church, ordained Oliver Cowdery to be one of the Presiding Elders; Oliver Cowdery ordained Joseph Smith to be one of the Presiding Elders. Thus there were two presiding officers over four others.

Last night I sat with the assembled multitude who filled this building. Reports said there were in the neighborhood of nine thousand men here. If we should take all of the men who are presiding officers in the Melchizedek Priesthood, the stake presidencies who guide them in their work and the high councilmen who assist the stake presidencies in directing the efforts of the presidencies of quorums, and put them in this building, the group would be just about as large as the number here last night. In 124 years, the Church and its Melchizedek Priesthood has grown sufficiently so that officers would now fill this building. The bishoprics or officers of the Aaronic Priesthood are not included in the total.

I do not detect that Joseph Smith ever lacked confidence in the destiny of the Church. How much of our day he could see I do not know. I suspect the Lord showed him the ultimate end, if not all of the immediate steps. I always marvel that he did not waver as to what was going to be accomplished. He did not set a timetable, but the assurance is there for all of us to read, and to understand that the Church will fill the earth. We are now well on the way. We should not waver ourselves because it cannot be stopped. From the beginning with two officers we have grown until those presiding could barely squeeze into this tabernacle.

We have been a long time learning how to use presiding authority. Officers have been appointed by the hundreds and have not known what to do with their appointments. I believe there is, and has been going on for some time, a new awakening in the hearts of the men who handle the great organization of the priesthood. They are learning how to preside and to conduct their affairs so that the body of the priesthood is beginning to take its place.

I have on my desk a number of statistics which would bear out that thought. I should like to refer to just two of them which I think are important at this moment.

There is a quorum of elders in a city not far from here. (I shall not identify it.) The members of this quorum are composed largely of men who do shift-work; consequently their time is eaten into at the moments when they should be attending their meetings. That quorum of elders, under the direction of a president who seems to know how to do it, with the able assistance of two very splendid counselors, has had for the past two or three months, if the facts are reported correctly, fifty-five percent of his men attending the weekly morning priesthood meeting. He took sixty percent of them to the monthly priesthood meeting of the stake. He has them organized so that there is not a class in the Sunday School of his ward, but where one of the elders is assigned to sit there, with the lesson all prepared, ready to take part in case the regular teacher should fail to come or should need assistance.

The same thing is done in the other auxiliaries, in case they are needed. Such is the possibility of quorums of the priesthood if they recognize the need. The remarkable thing about it is that there is not a man who holds the priesthood but what if he feels necessary and wanted leaps to the cause.

Your job, brethren, is to make them feel necessary and wanted.

Another instance: There is taking part in a bit of work a large body of the Melchizedek Priesthood quorums from about 135 stakes. I estimate there are somewhere in the neighborhood of a thousand quorums. In one item, that of whether or not the presidents of the quorums and their counselors will visit their members often to encourage them, there has been an improvement of more than four hundred percent. Now, that is a statistic. I do not like statistics, but I would submit to you that when the president of a quorum, and his counselors, pick up their hats and their coats and with courage in their hearts and humility in their souls, leave their firesides to go out and find their brethren of the priesthood, to warm them up and make them feel necessary, that ceases to be a statistic but begins to approach what the Savior must have meant when he said, "Greater love hath no man than this. . . ." (John 15:13.) Surely they are finding their friends. If they will keep it up, the fruits of that action alone will activate their brethren until there will not be any necessity for doubling of positions in the various wards and auxiliaries of the Church. It will also have its effect upon the home. When the Church was organized with six members in 1830, it was prophesied that it would fill the earth. I should like to say this about a man and a wife and four children. They make six. Whenever any man in this Church takes his proper place in the home as head of that home, under the righteousness of the priesthood, and takes care of his family the way he should, raising his children to believe, to have faith, and to accept the principles, the ultimate destiny of that family, the final end to that man will be the same as though he had organized a church. In the final accounting, his place will be so high that his six will have swelled into a multitude. So we may, ourselves, brethren, do things which will duplicate for us, alone, what the Prophet has done so nobly for us all.

Well, that is using the priesthood. I have often wondered what would happen to a man who suddenly found himself without it. Many of us do not care much about it and let it go, but suppose we did not have it? Suppose we could not use it? Suppose we suddenly were told we could not exercise it? I had such an experience one time during World War II. My son had occasion to come home on a furlough from his army camp. It was during the time that conference was being held, and in obedience to the request of the government, the Church had ceased to hold its meetings in this building but was holding them in the Assembly Hall. Consequently, because of its size, admission had to be by ticket. Unless a man had a presiding position in the Church, he could not get a ticket. There was just not enough room to have anybody come but the stake and ward leaders. The Presidency of the Church in their kindness, thinking of these boys who needed an extra lift, saw to it that any boy who came home on a furlough could have a ticket and get in. I recall bringing my son down from Ogden and stopping at the south gate and watching him go through. As the guard let him pass and closed the gate in my face, I pressed up against the bars, watching him as he finally disappeared into the open door of the Assembly Hall. And then I think I knew what it means if a person suddenly cannot do what he would like to do in this Church, cannot associate with those with whom he would like to associate. I was completely cut off from my rights. I held the priesthood, but I could not exercise it. There were doorkeepers and attendants, and gardeners, and ushers there—but I was not allowed to enter. I turned away with the dreadful feeling of being left out. I hope I never have a similar experience again. It was a lesson to me of what could happen to me if I lost my rights. I do not want to lose my rights. I want to be able, when the time comes, to walk through that gate and meet my family and my loved ones and then go on to that destiny which is reserved for those who desire to be righteous. I believe I echo the feeling of everybody who holds the priesthood or who is the wife or child of one who holds such priesthood.

I can think of one scripture I should like to apply to you, you men who hold the priesthood and who preside over the priesthood, because without your active presidency, nothing much will happen. In this Church, men have been taught to wait until they are appointed to do something; men normally do not volunteer to hold office or perform service. That is a traditional method. So if you want these men to work, brethren, you must go after them, you must meet them, you must visit them, and you must make them feel necessary and wanted. Then watch them respond.

This is the scripture:

Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness. (D. & C. 58:27.)

May the Lord help us to do it, I pray, in the name of Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters: My wife once asked Father, "Do you ever get over being nervous when you speak to the conference?" And he said, "I haven't yet." And neither have I.

I seek an interest in your faith and prayers, that the testimony which I may endeavor to bear may be directed by the Spirit of our heavenly Father. We have listened to some wonderful testimonies today. I hope that mine may be in full harmony with what has been said.

There are many things for which I am truly grateful, especially the testimony that I have as to the reality of the Sonship of the Christ, that he lives, that he has done a wonderful service for you and me and that he has prepared the plan for us, which, if followed, will give us the joy for which the Book of Mormon says that man exists, and will bring us back into the presence of God with the ultimate possibility, if we attain to perfection, of Godhood.

There are many things requisite to that. President Richards referred to one of the most important of them today, and that is the family organization entered into with the approval and under the authority of the priesthood of God, sealed by a servant of God and under the holy spirit of promise.

It should be our purpose, brethren and sisters, as we approach this situation, to do it in all seriousness, understanding its tremendous potentialities and responsibilities, with a determination in our hearts that we will do everything we possibly can to make it a success and to enjoy in that relationship the Spirit of God, our heavenly Father.

One of my friends, one day, in talking to me, said, "You know, Antoine, if I were God, I would have done things differently," and I said, "How?" "Well," he said, "in the first place I would have fixed it up so that whenever a man married a woman, he would have been happy."

I prefer to think he was talking from observation rather than experience, but it is a fact that throughout the world a tremendously large proportion—too large a proportion—of the marriages that are entered into do not produce the desired happiness. In order to guarantee it there must be a proper foundation for it. I have been trying today to think of some of the foundation stones; and who should lay them, as well as when the laying of them should begin.

It seems to me that the purpose of the family relationship is to furnish bodies to spirits who are waiting the opportunity to tabernacle in the flesh. I have come to think that when we assume the obligation of offering such a tabernacle, we should be equipped, if possible, to produce a perfect one, and to that end our lives must be well-nigh perfect as to chastity and moral purpose.

I believe the foundation should be laid in the beginning by the parents who, when entering into marriage, should give due consideration to their anticipated children. Those of you who are beginning now, and those of you who are in the process of rearing families, should bear that in mind for it is incumbent upon you to lay the foundation stones for the happy marriages of your children, to teach them the responsibility of it, so that as they approach that age, an age when there are certain urges developing within the human body, that they should have a high moral and religious purpose and be able to dominate those impulses, bringing them under absolute subjection, so that when the time comes, the contracting parties can enter into the temple of God and make the promises that are made therein to each other, realizing that they have a right to do it. There is nothing that will tend to make a marriage happier than faith in each other, and there is nothing, I think, that will produce greater faith than the testimony of each to the other, of a pure previous life.

The physical dangers from the non-observance of the law of chastity can well be overcome, but I have never yet found anybody who could say that the moral effects of its infringement could be entirely overcome and forgotten. It is true that there is a law of repentance and forgiveness and all that, but how much better it is when we begin life in that capacity, if we do not have to invoke that law for that particular offense. I believe it is possible for fathers and mothers, if they set the example, and teach under the Spirit of God, to get close enough to their children to lay such a foundation.

After having laid the stone, then they must build upon it, and that building must be the reflection of a chaste, virtuous, honest, upright life on the part of the father and mother of the family. You know and I know that does not always exist, but it should always exist, when a family starts out.

Children should be taught that there is a greater likelihood of success if the contracting parties have community of interests. It may not always be imperative, I presume, that they should belong to the same church, but the chances are better if they do. It may not always be necessary that they have the same background, but the chances are better if they do, and the chances are always better if they do not rush into the union thoughtlessly, not understanding each other. Then they should be taught that there may be obstacles to surmount as they move along together in married life; that victory over these obstacles is what develops strength and power and ability. I do not know whether we would have been so much better off if He had made it so there would never have been any sorrow come into a family organization because I think that is one of the ways God has of testing us and mellowing us. When we survive them, when we can put our arms around each other in a mutual feeling of faith and of trust and reliance, then we develop from those obstacles. That, brethren and sisters, I believe, is our duty to our children, to teach them so that when they enter into this relationship they will be sweet and clean, with faith in God, realizing that the marriage they celebrate will not end with this life, but that it is to be for all eternity, and, consequently, it should be properly done and done under the inspiration of the Spirit of God. Then, I believe, it would always be safe.

But after having gone that far, brethren and sisters, we are not always safe. There are too many cases where older people fail. Many of the things which disrupt families are trivial in the extreme, and many of them come about, just because people cannot bring themselves to acknowledge that the things they do they ought not to do and to try to make adjustments for them with each other.

If we could, under the inspiration of our heavenly Father, find a few of the solutions as we grow older, it would be much easier for many of us. The court-records tell us that these things do happen. They ought never to happen in a good Latter-day Saint family.

Our efforts should be to so live that we will have claim upon our heavenly Father for his Spirit to help us over these rough places, so that the example we set to our growing children, and to their children, when they come along, will be one above reproach.

The family, we have been told, is the foundation stone of our society. It is not brought together just that we may enjoy each other's association here. As I have suggested, it has a higher, more spiritual purpose, and the relationships that are entered into in the family should always be directed by the Spirit of God. If that could be, we would always be happy in that relationship, and then we would have a solidarity in our organization that would astound the world.

Sunday, April 4

Second Day

I do not want to say more today, but I plead, brethren and sisters, for an effort on our part to so instill in the hearts and minds of growing children, who are our responsibility, a desire to make this the highest social relationship that there is, a grand, glorious religious privilege entered into with the approval of the priesthood of God, with a determination that nothing under heaven shall ever disrupt it.

God bless us in it, I pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER LEGRAND RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I FEEL humble, my brothers and sisters, as I occupy this position. I pray that I may enjoy the Spirit of the Lord for the few moments that I am here. Since our last conference, I have had the privilege, by appointment of the First Presidency, of visiting the islands of the Pacific, and now I think I can understand why Brother Matthew Cowley loved those colonies and people as he did, because I found the love they had in their hearts for him. It was while I was in New Zealand that I received the word of his passing. Those people truly love him, and as you travel through the Church and you feel the faith and the spirit of the members in whichever land you happen to go, be it in those lands, or in the Hawaiian Islands, or in Europe, you cannot help but be impressed with the words of the Apostle Paul, when he said:

For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.

There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. (Gal. 3:26-28.)

And that to me is one of the marvelous things about this Church, about which President McKay spoke this morning, when he told of the announcement the Lord made to the Prophet Joseph that a marvelous work was about to come forth among the children of men. The faith and the unity and the oneness that exists among the Saints of God wherever you find them, whatever their color might be, is a wonderful thing to me.

And another is the marvelous feeling of faith that the Lord plants in the hearts of the missionaries. I have seen missionaries in the field who would gladly have given their lives for the testimony of the truth that the Lord had given to them.

We had a missionary in our mission, who was on his second mission, and he told of when he was on his first mission. While at lunch, two men rode up on horseback and said, "Aren't you holding a meeting this afternoon?" and he said, "No, we hadn't planned on it." "Well," the man said, "there is a whole group over at the chapel waiting for you, and they expect you to come." So the missionary said, "We will be right over," and when they arrived they found a posse of men on horses with lasso ropes, and they said, "We are going to string you Mormon elders up to this tree." This missionary happened to be a bit witty, and he said, "Well, that is all right, but there is no hurry about it, is there? Come on inside, and let's talk it over," and before they got through, the leader of the mob took the two elders home with him. But there they were, facing even death, as it were, but there was no fear because of the marvelous Spirit the Lord has put into this work.

I have heard it said, I have never read it, that once the Prophet Joseph, when he appeared before the President of the United States, was asked the difference between this Church and other churches, and he said, "The difference is that we have the Holy Ghost," and then I thought of Peter before he received the Holy Ghost, how he denied the Christ three times during one night, and after he had received the Holy Ghost, you remember, when he was asked by the chief priests, if they had not commanded him not to preach Christ and him crucified in the streets of Jerusalem, and his reply was: "Whom shall men obey? God or man." (See Acts 5:29.)

I thank God that among the marvelous things in this Church is this wonderful spirit that binds the Saints together and motivates the members of the Church to be willing to sacrifice, in order to build the kingdom of God in the earth.

I would like to say a few words about another phase of this great and marvelous work that has appealed to me, and that is the fulfilment of prophecy. As I read the words of Isaiah, I read that the Lord has planned all of his work from the beginning, and he has permitted his prophets so to announce unto the people. That is why Peter tells us that,

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts:

Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

And so, today, we have the more sure word of prophecy, and as I read the prophecies of the scriptures and those of our modern prophets, I am sure in my own mind that there has never been a period in the history of the world when there were as many prophecies being fulfilled as there are today.

There will not be time to go into the details of what has transpired in the restoration of the gospel, in the gathering of the Saints to these valleys of the mountains, in the building of these holy temples. I think of the words of President Young when the cornerstone of this Salt Lake Temple was laid, when he made this statement:

"This morning we have assembled on one of the most solemn, interesting, joyful, and glorious occasions that ever have transpired, or will transpire among the children of men, while the earth continues in its present organization, and is occupied for its present purposes. And I congratulate my brethren and sisters that it is our unspeakable privilege to stand here this day, and minister before the Lord on an occasion which has caused the tongues and pens of Prophets to speak and write for many scores of centuries which are past." (Discourses of Brigham Young, p. 632, 1925 ed.)

Think of it! Some three thousand years ago, the Lord permitted Isaiah and Micah to see this temple, and they declared:

And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.

And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. (Isa. 2:2-3.)

Do we need any better evidence of the fulfilment of this prophecy than these great congregations that are assembling here to worship the Lord and to listen to the words of his prophets of this dispensation.

I think also of the words of Jesus, as he walked along the way to Emmaus with his two disciples, "But their eyes were holden that they should not know him," and then after listening to them tell of the events that had transpired in Jerusalem pertaining to the crucifixion of the Lord, he said: "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." And then he began with Moses and the prophets and showed them how that in all things the prophets had testified of him and what would transpire as part of his ministry and his labors. And then we are told that he opened the understanding of his Apostles, that they might understand the scriptures. (Luke 24:16, 25.)

And then we are told by Mormon that "... the eternal purposes of the Lord shall roll on, until all his promises shall be fulfilled." And then Mormon said, "Search the prophecies of Isaiah." And then he made known that in the day when these prophecies should be fulfilled, that it would be given unto the people to understand them. (Mormon 8:22-23.)

And as I read the prophecies of Isaiah, it seems to me that the Lord almost permitted him to live more in our day than when he was actually upon the earth, for so many of his prophecies deal with the latter-days and the things that are to transpire in this dispensation.

I think of the words of one of our worthy patriarchs, not so long ago. He was in his nineties, and one of his friends said, "Brother-so-and-so, wouldn't you rather pass on into the next world, where your wife is and so many of your loved ones, and so many of your friends?" And he rebuked him and said, "Not much. I have lived to see the Lord accomplish so much in this dispensation, I want to stay as long as I can and see him finish his work."

It would be an interesting thing were there time to consider the prophecies that are yet to be fulfilled, but I do want to say a word about what is going on over in Jerusalem and the Holy Land at this present time. So many of the prophets, and the Savior of the world, himself, and particularly when he visited the Nephites, have told of the day when the Jews would be gathered back to that land and how the Lord would fight their battles and how he would do a marvelous work among them. And when you read what is going on and see how they have become a nation today, it is a wonderful thing.

And then I contrast the prophecies with relation to their regathering and their rebuilding of their temple and their rebuilding of the waste places that have been desolate according to the prophets for many generations, with the prophecy of Isaiah with respect to the destruction of the great city of Babylon. You will remember at the time it was the greatest city in all the world. It is interesting to read the descriptions of it, with its beautiful gardens, and yet Isaiah announced that that city would be destroyed; he said that it would never be rebuilt, that it would never be inhabited from generation to generation, that it would become the abode of reptiles and wild animals, and that the Arabs would no more pitch their tents there. That was a declaration that the greatest city in the world would not only be destroyed, but it would also never be rebuilt.

No one would dare say that of any of our great cities today. Now, contrast that with the destruction of Jerusalem. The Savior said it would be plowed as an acre and not one stone would be left upon another, but all of the prophets declared it would be rebuilt, and not only that, but that her waste places should also be restored until it should become as the garden of Eden.

And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by.

And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited. (Ezek. 36:34-35.)

If you read your current magazines, such as the article that appeared in the March Reader's Digest about what is going on over there, how the men use the Bible to find where the springs and wells were, and the reservoirs and the iron mines, it is a marvelous thing, and that land is being rebuilt.

I could not help but think, as I read some of these articles, of how Brother Orson Hyde would feel today. He was sent there in 1841 by the Presidency of the Church to dedicate that land for the regathering of the Jews. At that time, it was a wasteland, with very few people there, and today they are going back by the thousands and by the hundreds of thousands.

I have in my heart a feeling that it will not be long until the Presidency of the Church will feel to open up the missionary work among these people, because the Savior indicated that the fulness of his gospel would be preached unto them in the latter days and not only that, but also in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph, he indicated that the gospel was to be preached, as President McKay pointed out, to all nations, to the Gentiles, first, and then to the Jews, so that the day will come when we will carry the message to them.

I have one specific little illustration of how it would appear the Lord is working with them I would like to refer to here today. First, I will read a few words from Zachariah, the twelfth chapter:

In that day shall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem. (Zach. 12:8-9.)

The Lord said he would fight their battles and that they should be strong, like unto David. When David went out to meet Goliath, no mortal man would ever have thought that in and of himself he could have conquered that great giant. David went forth, and when Goliath ridiculed him, saying, "Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves?" David replied: "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied.

"This day will the Lord deliver thee into mine hand," and by that same power, the Lord is today wresting this great land of promise and delivering it back unto his people. (See I Sam. 17:43, 45.)

A short time ago, when a committee was sent there by President Truman, they were told by Chaim Weizmann, the first president of Israel, that it was their belief in a "mystical force that would return the Jews to the land of Israel, that had kept them alive."

In the Jewish Hope, of September 1950, was an article by Arthur U. Michelson. I will not take time to read it, but he tells of a visit he made to Jerusalem, when he heard the experience of the Jewish army. They had only one cannon, and were facing the Arabs with their well-trained and equipped army, and so when they used this cannon, they moved it from place to place so the enemy would think they had many, and every time the cannon was fired, they would beat tin cans in order to make a lot of noise so that the enemy would think they had many cannons.

I want to read what he said about what happened when the armies of Israel were about to give up:

"One of the officials has told me how much the Jews had to suffer. They had hardly anything with which to resist the heavy attacks of the Arabs who were well organized and equipped with the latest weapons. Besides, they had neither food nor water, because all their supplies were cut off. . . .

"At this critical moment, God showed them that he was on their side, for

Sunday, April 4

he performed one of the greatest miracles that ever happened. The Arabs suddenly threw down their arms and surrendered. When their delegation appeared with the white flag, they asked, "Where are the three men that led you, and where are all the troops we saw?" The Jews told them that they did not know anything of the three men, for this group was their entire force. The Arabs said that they saw three persons, with long beards and flowing white robes who warned them not to fight any longer, otherwise they would all be killed. They became so frightened that they decided to give up. What an encouragement this was for the Jews to realize that God was fighting for them."

And then he told about another case when one man with a white robe and a long beard appeared, and they all saw him, and they gave up their arms. Now I do not know, but the Lord said that he would do something for the Jews in the latter days, and when he permitted the Three Nephites to tarry upon this land, he said:

And behold they will be among the Gentiles, and the Gentiles shall know them not.

They will also be among the Jews, and the Jews shall know them not.

And it shall come to pass, when the Lord seeth fit in his wisdom that they shall minister unto all the scattered tribes of Israel, and unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people, and shall bring out of them unto Jesus many souls, that their desire may be fulfilled, and also because of the convincing power of God which is in them. (3 Ne. 28:27-29.)

Whoever these persons were, they seemed to have "convincing power" sufficient to cause a whole army to surrender.

In permitting these Three Nephites to tarry upon the earth until he, Jesus, should come in his glory, he must have had in mind some great things for them to accomplish in bringing about a fulfillment of his promises. Whether it was they who convinced the army of the Arabs to surrender, I do not know, but this I do know: That what is going on in the Holy Land should convince one that the Lord is moving rapidly toward restoring the Jews to the land of their fathers and is giving them that land and redeeming it from its waste condition, as the prophets have foretold.

In closing, I give you the words of Isaiah. I believe the words of the prophets with all my heart.

The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: but the word of our God shall stand for ever. (Isa. 40:8.)

To me prophecy is one of the great evidences that there is really a God and that he is directing his work and will do so to its ultimate decreed destiny, and I bear you this witness in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters and friends: Humbly I acknowledge the great honor, privilege, and responsibility which is mine, as I look into your faces. I am grateful for this conference—thankful to the Lord that I am able to be here, to mingle with you, partake of this sweet spirit, and grateful to him that he has seen fit to call these general conferences of the Church and the quarterly conferences in the stakes of Zion.

I have in mind a desire to offer just a word of hope and encouragement and admonition this afternoon. I owe a great deal, as all of us who are gathered here do, to this great Church and kingdom of which we are a part. Throughout my life, I have felt very keenly my obligation to this, the Church and kingdom of God, and my gratitude to my heavenly Father that my lot has been cast with this people.

I wish it were possible for all of us to place our trusts completely in God and to keep his commandments fully. I wish we had the courage, the faith, and the strength of character so that we would in very deed place our trust in our heavenly Father and keep all of his commandments and do that which is right.

Many years ago, when I was a boy in my teens, a particular course of study in the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association made a deep and lasting impression upon my life. It was a series of lessons on the development of character. I have often wished that that course might be repeated. The first in the series was a group of lessons on courage. There is a rather interesting sidelight which I recall. In those days in our manuals, it was not uncommon to carry advertising, and I remember that on the lower front cover was an advertisement which read as follows: "Oldest, largest, best. LDS Business College. Day Sessions, $7.00 a month; Night Sessions, $4.00 a month."

It is not about the advertisement that I wish to speak, but on the flyleaf of that excellent course of study there appeared a few stanzas from a "Selected" poem under the caption, "Trust in God and Do the Right."

Courage, brother, do not stumble,
Though thy path is dark as night;
There's a star to guide the humble—
Trust in God and do the right.

Let the road be long and dreary,
And its ending out of sight,
Foot it bravely—strong or weary,
Trust in God and do the right.

Perish "policy" and cunning,
Perish all that fears the light;
Whether losing, whether winning,
Trust in God and do the right.

Some will hate thee, some will love thee,
Some will flatter, some will slight,
Turn from man, and look above thee,
Trust in God and do the right.

Simple rule and safest guiding,
Inward peace and inward light,
Star upon our path abiding,
Trust in God and do the right.

At the head of that first chapter appeared those reassuring words of Joshua, later used as a theme in MIA:

Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest. (Joshua 1:9.)

And then the Psalmist:

Be still, and know that I am God. (Psalm 46:10.)

It is a great blessing, my brethren and sisters, to have an inner peace, to have an assurance, to have a spirit of serenity, an inward calm during times of strife and struggle, during times of sorrow and reverses. It is soul-satisfying to know that God is at the helm, that he is mindful of his children, and that we can with full confidence place our trust in him. I believe that all the truly great men of the earth have been men who trusted in God and who have striven to do that which is right as they understood the right.

I have often read the words of Abraham Lincoln when he said, God rules this world, . . . I am a full believer that God knows what He wants a man to do—that which pleases him. It is never well with that man who heeds it not . . . without the assistance of that Divine Being, I cannot succeed, with that assistance I cannot fail.

And he offered similar admonition for the nations of the earth, as have other great Americans and great spiritual leaders. Said Lincoln:

It is the duty of nations as well as of men to own their dependence upon the overruling power of God, to confess their sins and transgressions in humble sorrow . . . and to recognize the sublime truth that those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord.

I thrilled, as I am sure you did, as our chief executive, newly elected, stood on that solemn occasion, at the time of his inauguration, and offered a humble prayer to the Almighty. In majestic simplicity President Dwight D. Eisenhower petitioned on that occasion:

Sunday, April 4

Second Day

... Give us, we pray, the power to discern clearly right from wrong, and allow all our works and actions to be governed thereby and by the laws of this land... so that all may work for the good of our beloved country and for Thy glory. Amen.

It is reassuring to see men in high places, in church, in government, in business—in all of the walks of life—who are not afraid to acknowledge their dependence upon God—who are not afraid to trust him—not afraid to try to do that which is right.

Yes, God is at the helm, my brothers and sisters. I know it, and you know it. Surely no group of people in all the world has greater evidence of that fact than do the Latter-day Saints. Even during the days of persecution and hardship, the Lord has continually encouraged us to trust in him, to keep his commandments, to do that which is right and then be unafraid.

We live in a world of fear today. Fear seems to be almost everywhere present. But there is no place for fear among the Latter-day Saints, among men and women who keep the commandments, who place their trust in the Almighty, who are not afraid to get down on their knees and pray to our heavenly Father.

I remember an incident in the life of the Prophet Joseph. God bless his memory! He had been persecuted with his people, driven, and at this particular time he was in Liberty Jail, incarcerated upon trumped-up charges. Finally, when it seemed as though he could stand it no longer, he cried out in the anguish of his soul, as recorded in the 121st section:

O God, where art thou? And where is the pavilion that covereth thy hiding place?

How long shall thy hand be stayed, and thine eye, yea thy pure eye, behold from the eternal heavens the wrongs of thy people and of thy servants, and thine ear be penetrated with their cries? (D. & C. 121:1-2.)

And you will recall, the word came back to him:

My son, peace be unto thy soul; thine adversity and thine afflictions shall be but a small moment;

And then, if thou endure it well, God shall exalt thee on high; thou shalt triumph over thy foes. (Ibid., 121:7-8.)

Then the Lord pointed out to this great man, this prophet of God, that all these things had been given for the purpose of gaining experience, of helping to build him for the great responsibilities that lay ahead of him. How sweet and reassuring are the words of the Lord on that memorable occasion as he counseled:

... know thou, my son, that all these things shall give thee experience, and shall be for thy good.

... therefore, fear not what man can do, for God shall be with you forever and ever. (Ibid., 122:7, 9.)

The Lord, speaking to his sons of this dispensation and the membership of his Church, gave the following admonition in another revelation:

Fear not to do good, my sons, for whatsoever ye sow, that shall ye also reap; therefore, if ye sow good ye shall also reap good for your reward.

Therefore, fear not, little flock; do good; let earth and hell combine against you, for if ye are built upon my rock, they cannot prevail.

... perform with soberness the work which I have commanded you.

Look unto me in every thought; doubt not, fear not. (Ibid., 6:33-36.)

You will also recall the admonition he gave to the early disciples of this dispensation, recorded in the Lord's preface to the Book of Commandments, the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

And they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them. (Ibid., 1:5.)

So among the Latter-day Saints, particularly, there should be no fears, even in a world where many people are concerned about atom bombs, the hydrogen bomb; where many are fearing Communism and some are talking fearfully of a depression. There need be no fear in the hearts of Latter-day Saints. People who live the gospel, who keep the commandments, who trust in God and do that which is right, need never fear because God speaks peace to the honest in heart through his Spirit. Said the Lord in the 11th section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

And now, verily, verily, I say unto thee, put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good—yea, to do justly . . . to judge righteously; and this is my Spirit. (Ibid., 11:12.)

On another occasion the Lord declared:

The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh. (Ibid., 1:19; italics added.)

Our heavenly Father is continually mindful of us. It is his "work and glory" to make the exaltation of man possible. The course which he has outlined is simple, yet able to make men's stature reflect confident living free from fear. Hear his words:

Let him trust in me and he shall not be confounded. . . . (Ibid., 84:116.)

So, my brethren and sisters, there may come persecution; there may come opposition; there may come reverses; there may come criticism and misrepresentation. Your motives may be questioned. You may be attacked. But if we place our trust in the Almighty and do that which is right, there will come an inner assurance, an inner calm, a peace that will bring joy and happiness to our souls.

In my office in Washington, in the Department of Agriculture, established by President Abraham Lincoln, I have in a small frame these words of the great Emancipator:

If I were to try to read, much less answer, all the attacks made on me, this shop might as well be closed for any other business. I do the very best I know how—the very best I can; and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won't amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right would make no difference.

And that is the spirit which should characterize the lives of the Latter-day Saints. "Do what is right, let the consequence follow," goes one of our favorite hymns. Shrink not from duty where it is made known. Keep the commandments. Trust in God and do the right.

In the early days of the Church, you may recall, the Lord frequently praised the elders for certain things they did, but oftentimes he would chastise as well, and in the 60th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, after giving a few words of praise, he said:

But with some I am not well pleased, for they will not open their mouths, but they hide the talent which I have given unto them, because of the fear of man. Wo unto such, for mine anger is kindled against them. (D. & C. 60:2.)

And so my brethren and sisters, as President Richards pointed out so beautifully this morning, let us never be ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Let us never be afraid to do what is right. Let us trust in God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man.

I know, and so do you who have testimonies of the divinity of this work, that without God's help we cannot succeed, but with his help we can accomplish anything he asks us to do. And we can do it with a feeling of assurance, of confidence, and with a spirit of serenity which can be a joy and blessing to all of us.

God help us to keep his commandments, to put our homes in order, to pray to God, to trust in him and do the right, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Sunday, April 4

Second Day

President David O. McKay:

Elder Ezra Taft Benson, of the Council of the Twelve, has just spoken to us.

The Deseret Sunday School Union Conference will convene in the Salt Lake Tabernacle at 7:00 o'clock tonight. All Sunday School workers should be in attendance. Others are cordially invited. We are informed by the Superintendent that provision will be made for overflow audiences in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall.

I am sure I express your feelings when I again say we are grateful for the excellent singing of our Choir. Their service is an inspiration to all.

To you who probably did not hear the appreciation this morning, these calla lilies are from the Berkeley Stake, the daffodils from the Tacoma Stake.

We express our appreciation to you ushers who have rendered such excellent service this day. To the public press, the reporters, for their fair and accurate report.

To the congregation for your responsive attention and your refraining from leaving your seats and moving around. It has truly been an hour of worship.

To the various radio and television stations, we wish to say that your assistance rendered here in our own city and state and in other states named throughout the sessions thus far, has been the means of permitting tens of thousands to hear the proceedings of this Conference.

Here are more telegrams. I think we should recognize the names: Brother Hickenlooper of San Francisco Stake, meeting in houses of worship there; Joseph B. Hone of Tacoma Stake; all expressing appreciation of the opportunity you furnished them; Joseph B. Clark and family representing 408 Quorum of Seventies in the Tacoma Stake; Bishop N. Ward Newby of the Seattle Third Ward and the bishop of the Fifth Ward in Seattle; Clark N. Marsh, Stake Missionary in San Leandro; San Francisco Stake High Council; Sister Graham who has expressed appreciation; the baby Stake High Priests Quorum in Phoenix; 247 Quorum of Seventy, Oakland; San Jose Second Ward Bishopric; 4th Ward Bishopric in the Denver Stake, Denver, Colorado; Dennis L. Lauper, High Councilor, Wilford D. Webb, member of the Oakland Stake; San Leandro Ward Bishopric; Ernest C. Haas, Glendale Stake. Thank you, brothers and sisters, we are happy that you have joined with us in the privilege to participate in the inspiring sessions of the Conference this day.

The streets are crowded. Let each one follow what they now call the Golden Rule, Do unto others as you would have others do unto you. Let us practice courtesy here in Utah, and set an example.

The Tabernacle Choir will now favor us with, "And Then Shall Your Light Break Forth," with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting. The benediction will be offered by Elder Rulon S. Howells, more recently released as President of the Brazilian Mission, after which this Conference will be adjourned until ten o'clock Monday morning.

The Choir sang as a concluding number, "And Then Shall Your Light Break Forth."

President David O. McKay:

It will be necessary to make some preparation for the meeting tonight, and the ushers and workmen would appreciate it very much if we vacate the building as conveniently after the benediction as possible.

At 7:30 tomorrow morning, in the Assembly Hall, there will be held an agricultural meeting under the direction of the Church Welfare Committee.

Elder Howells, recently released president of the Brazilian Mission, will offer the benediction and this Conference will be adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Elder Rulon S. Howells, formerly president of the Brazilian Mission, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 10 o'clock a.m., Monday, April 5.

THIRD DAY MORNING MEETING

The fourth session of the Conference convened at 10 o'clock a.m., Monday, April 5.

The choral singing for this session of the Conference was furnished by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses under the direction of Don L. Earl.

President David O. McKay:

We are assembled in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, in this the fourth session of the 124th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. These services, and all general sessions of the Conference, will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, 60 North Main Street, over a public address system, and by television. These services will also be televised over KSL TV, Channel 5, at Salt Lake City, and will be heard over Radio Station KSL of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over fourteen radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Arizona and Nevada, the names of which stations have already been announced to the radio audience.

We desire to express appreciation to these various radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts.

We called attention to a number of telegrams received yesterday from the members of the Church and others in the Northwest and from cities in California, which expressed appreciation for having furnished them the television privilege. Last night after adjournment we received two others which I think are worthy of mention: One telegram from a group of Lamanite members down in Phoenix. They express their gratitude for the privilege they had of joining you in these services. And the other, a telegram expressing the same appreciation from a group of our Chinese members in San Francisco.

The singing for this session will be furnished by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, with Don L. Earl conducting, and Alexander Schreiner at the organ. The Brigham Young University Combined Chorus will now sing, "Send Forth Thy Spirit," conducted by Elder Don L. Earl. The invocation will be offered by Elder Ray E. Dear Brethren:

The balance sheet, with supporting schedules, statement of revenue and expenditures, disclosing the financial condition of the Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the year ending December 31, 1953, has been reviewed.

The records appear to be adequate, and the accounting system carefully kept. Disbursement of Church funds is controlled through a comprehensive budget system. Receipts for the year were in excess of expenditures. The Church is in strong financial position, and free from debt.

Respectfully submitted,

divine."

I AM sure we have been uplifted this morning by the beautiful music which has been rendered through these fine people of Brigham Young University. If there should be any in the congregation this morning who had a feeling of discouragement, a feeling of frustration or insecurity, I am sure those thoughts were dispelled when you heard that lovely music, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning." That is the opportunity which is ours, my brothers and sisters, to enjoy the Spirit of God as we live each day and each hour of the day.

Yet, not to throw a negative thought into this lovely meeting, I would remind you that Satan would destroy that which we have heard and felt this morning. That is the mission of Satan in the world—to destroy faith, to destroy a testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ. How grateful I am that the gospel has been restored in its fulness—that we can enjoy the spirit, inspiration, and power of the Holy Ghost and of our Master today, as is true whenever there has been a generation of righteous people on the earth.

It is nothing new that Satan would endeavor to destroy. I believe it was Socrates back in 353 B.C. who declared: "Philosophy has struggled to find some substitute for the divine commandments and the surveillance of God." And today there are men who would deny that Jesus Christ has again appeared and spoken to his chosen servants and that there has been re-established in the earth the Church and kingdom of God.

As we read in history, we find that Satan endeavored to deceive Moses—Moses who was a prophet of God. Satan endeavored to have him believe that he, Satan, was Jehovah, but because Moses was a righteous son, a faithful son, living in obedience to the commandments, he had the power of discernment and was able to rebuke the adversary. The adversary, we are told, was very much discouraged and disappointed, and he wept bitterly.

Even our Lord and Master Jesus Christ, the great example to us all, suffered temptation. Satan knew that after he had fasted for forty days and forty nights there would be a physical weakness. He said: "If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread." The significant remark of Jesus to Satan was: "It is not good for man to live by bread alone but by every word of God." Still the Son of the Morning was not satisfied. He took the Savior to a high mountain and showed him in the twinkling of an eye the kingdoms and principalities and powers which he claimed he had a right to bestow if the Savior would but bow down and worship him, Satan. Again, the significant remark, "Get thee behind me Satan, for it is written thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." We are told he brought him to Jerusalem and set him on a pinnacle of the temple and said unto him: "If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written he shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." Jesus said unto him: "It is said thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." (See Luke 4:3-12.)

Do we need any other key today as Latter-day Saints? I believe not. We can live in obedience to the truths if we will seek that spiritual guidance which is ours, and that is the guidance that has been the influence in the development of man throughout the ages.

In 1929 it was my privilege to visit the laboratory of the great scientist,

Charles P. Steinmetz, that little hunchback German who came to this country as an immigrant boy. I shall ever be grateful for the privilege of shaking his hand. After his passing from this mortal existence I read a very choice statement which he gave to the world. He said: "Spiritual power is a force which history clearly teaches has been the greatest force in the development of man. Yet we have been merely playing with it and have never really studied it as we have the physical forces. Some day people will learn that material things do not bring happiness and are of little use in making people creative and powerful. Then the scientists of the world will turn their laboratories over to the study of spiritual forces which have hardly been scratched."

I am grateful that we have the Church and kingdom of God in the earth today. We have that spiritual strength and power, and I humbly pray, Latter-day Saints and people of the world, that we will come to realize that the only greatness that can be evolved is through the development of spiritual strength. Then the clouds of error will disappear, and we will allow the rays of light and truth divine to take precedence in our lives.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I WOULD be indeed ungrateful this morning were I not to acknowledge the blessings of my Heavenly Father to me and mine, and I do that most humbly.

I seek for the uplift of the spirit of this great conference and your faith and prayers in these next few minutes.

I could wish for no better background for the few thoughts I would like to express than the buoyancy of the wonderful youth representing our great Brigham Young University who have sung to us so inspiringly at this session of our conference.

May God bless us that we as a people may go forward in the spiritual strength which is rightfully ours, to proclaim the truths of the gospel and enjoy his spirit by doing a great missionary work. This is our responsibility. I bear witness to you that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that President David O. McKay is the mouthpiece of our Heavenly Father in the earth and those men associated with him in the Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve and the Patriarch are prophets of God. May we take their teachings and counsel and effect them in our lives that we may truly enjoy the spiritual strength and happiness which will bring the sweet peace that passeth understanding, I humbly pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The speaker to whom you have just listened was Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Council of the Twelve. We shall now hear from Elder Harold B. Lee, a member of the Council of the Twelve.

He will be followed by Elder Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of Seventy.

The text that I would like to consider for a few moments is in the nature of a question from a young Latter-day Saint youth at Fort Lewis military training camp, a son of a prominent Latter-day Saint family. His question was: "What is your concept of a Christ-like life? Please explain in detail the qualifications necessary for one to gain an exaltation in the kingdom of heaven."

I was intrigued by that question, and if the Spirit of the Lord is willing, I should like to make an answer to that young man within the time limitations this morning; and if the congregation here will pardon me, I will talk directly to that young man who may possibly be in attendance because I believe that his question is the question that is being asked by every serious-minded Latter-day Saint youth today.

Young man, your question is not unique. It is not different. It is the same question that has been asked by the honest-hearted ever since the world began. It is the question that was in the mind of Nicodemus, the master in Israel, when he came to the Savior by night, and the Master discerning the purpose of his coming, explained to him what was necessary in order for him to enter or even to see the kingdom of God.

It was the same question asked by the zealous Saul of Tarsus on that memorable occasion while on his way to Damascus when he was blinded by the light; he heard a voice speak out of heaven; humbled as only one can be humbled in the presence of a great spiritual experience. In answer to the Lord's rebuke, the humble Saul asked, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" (Acts 9:6.)

It was the cry of the sinful David who, amidst his pleadings and his sufferings, gained the knowledge of the course which he must pursue, in order that his soul would not be left in hell. It was the same thing the Jews asked on the day of Pentecost: "What must we do to be saved?" (See Acts 2:37.)

To answer your question fully, and that of these others to which I have made reference would require a full explanation of the plan of salvation given in the gospel of Jesus Christ. While yet in your youth, you have done well to ask that question, young man, to seek counsel as to your course in life, for every soul who lives has the possibility, as you have, of an exaltation in the celestial kingdom.

I wish you could have been here to the general priesthood meeting on Saturday night, but maybe you were. I wish you could have repeated under President McKay's direction the first Article of Faith, "We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in His Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost," and then listened intently to every word as you repeated with President McKay the thirteenth Article of Faith: "We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men. . . ." But I would have you this morning think of another of the Articles of Faith in connection therewith because it has a particular significance in the answer to your question: "We believe that through the Atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel." (Third Article of Faith.)

A great philosopher has said the same thing in other words when he declared: "Every one of us, with the help of God and within the limitations of human capability, himself makes his own disposition, his character, and his permanent condition." (Emil Souvestre.)

May I give you in answer to your question the example of three youths who, faced with the stern temptations of life, met those tests and came through nobly and victoriously, despite the odds against them. I say I give you these examples in order that you may learn and recognize three of the great dangers which confront youth today.

The first, an example of a young girl, whom I met when I was asked to address a group of young girls a few years ago over at the Lion House where they were being shepherded under the direction of the great Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association. At the close of our meeting this lovely girl took me aside, and from her purse she unfolded a picture of a handsome young soldier. Underneath the picture was something about love, and his name signed. I asked, "Well, what does this mean?" Tears were swimming in her eyes. She replied, "I met that young man here in an army camp. He was not a member of the Church. He was clean and fine, and he had the ideals I had longed for in a companion, all except one thing, he was not a member of the Church. And when he proposed marriage to me, I said, 'Only will I be married when I can be married in the house of the Lord because love means something more than just a thing that pertains to this life. It is an eternal thing, and I want to be married in the temple.'"

Well, he reasoned with her, he pleaded with her, he scolded, and then he became angry; and finally after repeated efforts to break down her religious objection to a marriage out of the temple, he finally left her. It was now time to go overseas, and she cried her heart out the night he left thinking that maybe she had made a mistake because her heart had gone out to this fine young man.

During a long ocean voyage over to Australia where he was to be stationed and from where he was to go into combat, he began to think about this young woman. He began to think that he had been a little hasty in his judgment about her religious convictions. Perhaps it was her religion that had made her the fine girl that she was. With that on his mind, he began to seek companionship with our Latter-day Saint men. He finally met a Latter-day Saint chaplain there and became associated with the Latter-day Saint boys of the camp and began to study the gospel. On her birthday he had sent her this picture attached, and behind the picture was a slip of paper which proved to be a certificate evidencing the fact that he had been baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In the letter which accompanied the picture, he had said, "I am preparing now to live worthy so that when I come home, I can be ordained an elder and together we can be married in the house of the Lord."

There, young man, is the first thing that you must think of, if you would have an exaltation in the celestial kingdom. Marriage is eternal, and there was a youth who realized the foundation on which she must build if she were to have a fulness of eternal happiness.

The second example is that of an impetuous young man. One morning he was confronted by his mother with rather a startling statement. His mother said to him, "Son, last night I had a premonition. I had a feeling that you are going to be faced with a grave temptation by a certain woman who is setting her cap for you. I warn you to be on guard." And this youth brushed it aside in his characteristic way, "Oh, Mother, you are silly; nothing is farther from the fact. She is a fine woman." And the mother replied, "Well, be careful, my son." Within thirty days from the time of his mother's warning, that youth stood face to face with the temptation about which his mother had been warned.

Youth, if you want to be guided by wisdom, stay close to your parents. Listen to the counsel of your father and your mother and lean heavily upon the experience of their lives because they are entitled to inspiration in the rearing of their family. Young man, may I plead with you to keep yourself morally clean? Revere womanhood. May I remind you of what you repeated some years ago as a slogan in the MIA. It was a quotation from a portion of a message of the First Presidency particularly to servicemen in military service during some of these strenuous, difficult times through which you and others like you have lived. This is what the First Presidency wrote: "How glorious and near to the angels is youth that is clean. This youth has joy unspeakable here and eternal happiness hereafter. Sexual purity is youth's most precious possession. It is the foundation of all righteousness. Better dead clean, than alive unclean."

Honor your name, young man. You have come of an illustrious family. Not to maintain the high standards which the Presidency have suggested would not only be a blight upon you, but a blight upon that great family name you bear, and a blight upon the Church for which your forefathers and ancestors sacrificed their lives to establish.

dency said something of great importance to the girls about the purity of life. This is what the Presidency wrote in that inspired prayer: "We pray for the daughters of Zion. May they be preserved in virtue, chastity, and purity of life, be blessed with vigorous bodies and minds, and with great faith. May they develop into true womanhood and receive choice companions under the new and everlasting covenant for time and for all eternity in thy temples provided for this priceless privilege and purpose."

Young man, should you find companionship with a beautiful young girl, will you remember that quotation, and will you take occasion during your courtship to read to her that most vital message from the prophets of the living God in our day to warn her also against one of the besetting sins of this world in which we live?

May I now give you the third example to suggest a third danger? The story of this incident comes from the testimony of the wife of a mission president who just returned from one of our Communist-dominated countries. A young girl attending a school in that country one day was abused by her teacher when he learned of her identity as a Latter-day Saint girl, having faith in a living God. As a punishment to her he demanded that she sit down and write fifty times, "There is no God." This little girl, shaken by the punishment imposed by that teacher, went home and talked it over with her mother. Her mother said, "No, my girl, you must never write, 'There is no God.' You go back and tell your teacher you know there is a God and you can't lie." And the girl went back and faced this teacher, and he said, more angrily than ever, "You go back and write that and write it a hundred times, 'There is no God,' or I warn you that something terrible will happen to you."

The mother and daughter prayed nearly all night that night, and then next morning they fasted and went together to the room of that teacher. They waited for him to come. The time came for school to convene, and he didn't show up, and the principal, seeing that they were waiting, came to them and asked, "Are you waiting for your teacher?" She said, "Yes, we are waiting for him." "Well, I am sorry to tell you that he suffered a heart attack and died suddenly this morning."

Something terrible did happen, but it wasn't to that young girl. It happened to a man inspired with satanic motives.

Young man, I would warn you, along with the others of your age, to be forewarned of the threats to your faith. I warn you against the man-made philosophies and the doctrines which would destroy that faith in God basic to exaltation in the celestial kingdom.

If you remember those examples, young man, and live worthy of your name, the marvelous rewards of our heavenly Father will be yours. Listen to what the Lord promised:

Verily, thus saith the Lord: It shall come to pass that every soul that forsaketh his sins and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face and shall know that I am. (D. & C. 93:1.)

And after you begin to understand that, then, young man, go to the 76th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants, in some respects, one of the most glorious visions that has ever been given to mortal man. Read from the 50th to the 70th verses of that great vision, and you will have understanding in better words than I can give you today.

My son, go and have your patriarchal blessing, for there under inspiration your patriarch will give you, as someone has said, "paragraphs from the book of your own possibilities."

And now after this brief conversation with you, my young brother, may I close it by a little quotation from a great thinker who said this:

The highest of all arts is the art of living well. Beyond the beauty of sculpture and painting, of poetry or music, is the beauty of a well-spent life. Here all can be artists. Every man can be a hero.

Obedience to that divine command, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," (Matt. 5:48) will ally man with God and will make of earth a paradise.

God bless you, my young friend. Keep on thinking the serious thoughts and asking those serious questions, and in time, as you keep your eyes fixed upon the stars to guide you on and on and upward, you will reach your objective—an exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our Heavenly Father, which I pray for you and all youth of Zion, and all the world if that were possible, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I VERY humbly pray for the blessings of the Lord to be with me as I address you.

I take the privilege because of having been twice president of the alumni of Brigham Young University, to express my appreciation for this fine chorus, for the great institution that God has established. It represents so much of our heritage, the sacrifice of our fathers and mothers. God bless the youth that they may treasure this glorious opportunity. Hold high the standards of this Church at Brigham Young University. May the Lord bless you to grow in spirit and in truth.

I have a friend far away, stationed at Shanghai, China, very much discouraged. He went to see if there was a Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Shanghai. He was weary, wanting to find someone with whom he might talk about his religion. He went to the United States consul. The consul sent a clerk to review the records. "No, we haven't any Mormons here."

"Well, try Latter-day Saints." They did.

"Sorry, young man, we have no one affiliated with that Church here in Shanghai."

He went back to his barracks. On the bunk he saw a large package, and there were eight fellows sitting there. Something of this type generally arouses curiosity on the part of soldier boys, and they suspected very seriously that probably there was some candy or goodies in the package, and they had come to enjoy the festivities with the young man.

He took his time in opening the package, which, of course, was his privilege. Finally he snipped the string and opened it. A lovely white napkin was unfolded, and in it, a Book of Mormon. The title was printed in large letters on the outside cover.

The fellows began to drift back to their bunks, but one chap sitting near said, "Book of Mormon." The young man quickly turned to his friend and said: "What do you know about it?"

"Why, I am a Mormon. I can show you where there are a couple more."

My friend, when he first opened the package and saw the Book of Mormon, grew silent for a moment and then he said, "Hello, Mother." He was back home again. He knew who had sent the book.

I am happy to say to youth everywhere, prayerfully study the word of God. This is one of the greatest opportunities we have, and I hope you will take the opportunity of it now before that hunger comes in the after years. Do it now. Make it a part of today and tomorrow and the next day. Here at this conference we have enjoyed the guidance of the living oracles, and we are greatly blessed, but now, also enrich these words by being a student of the word of the Lord.

Third Day

Another humble suggestion I would like to make is, live and enjoy the gospel. Live it, you have often heard, but also enjoy it. Reflect it in your life to the man who lives over the fence, works in the office, in the shop, wherever you may go. Reflect the joy and the happiness of living it. The man and the woman who live the gospel of Jesus Christ are our greatest exponents. They are our greatest missionaries.

I received a call not long ago from the general hospital in Los Angeles, while staying in Los Angeles at one of the hotels. On the other end of the line a young man said: "Brother Kirkham, I am back from Korea, having just landed in an airplane. I will be operated on at eight o'clock this morning. Won't you come and be with me?"

"Yes, at eight o'clock I will be there."

He was prepared for the operating room. The doctor said to the nurse as they were moved forward, "Take his pulse, will you please? I see his eyes are closed. He may have gone. I have been preparing him quite seriously."

In a moment the young man opened his eyes and said, "Doctor, I am not gone. I was just saying a prayer that God would guide your hands, that you would operate with great skill, and that I would be blessed."

For an hour and eighteen minutes he was on the operating table; then they took him back to his room for rest and recuperation. I went down to meet my friends coming for me. The doctor passed by the door of the waiting room of the hospital and called me out and said, "I know you were seriously interested this morning with what happened, but to me this was just another operation at the hospital. I am here nearly every day, but I want to say a word to you, and I know you will be interested. When that boy opened his eyes and said, 'No, I am not gone. I was praying for God to guide your hand,' I felt as I went to do my work that there was a special spirit that was upon me. It was beyond my ordinary skill. The boy had sent a message in prayer, and the answer came to help me. I am not sentimental, Mr. Kirkham, about things like this, but I wanted to tell you that this morning was a great event in my life."

Yes, to live and enjoy the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ in that moment when we need it so badly, when life calls us to a great task at a deciding moment, may we be prepared by good living to speak freely and frankly to the Lord and enjoy his holy blessings.

May I add one word further. Share these blessings. It is not quite complete unless we give to someone that which God has graciously given to us. Share the blessings.

Just two days ago on the elevator in our general office, I met a young man just home from a two-year mission. He said, "I want you to meet my mother. Mother, this is Brother Kirkham." Then he turned to me and said, "Mother is going on a mission. I just came home, and we have been working it out. Of course, you know Mother is a widow. We have a little country store, but we have been working it out. Now she is going, and we are very happy."

Yes, prayerfully study the word of God. Live and enjoy the gospel. Share its blessings, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of Seventy will now speak to us.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

FEW WEEKS ago, there came to Salt Lake City, thirteen students from different parts of western Germany. They had been sent to the United States by their government, and while in this country, they became the guests of the different cities they visited, and the railroads gave them free transportation. They were impressed with Salt Lake City, and their few hours here visiting the centers of interest and meeting some of the people was to them a memorable thing. One of the young ladies remarked that they did not like the large cities for the people seemed to have little interest in them. They had words of gratitude for the manner in which they were received and the spirit of brotherhood that they experienced here in Salt Lake City. One of them said: "Tell us about the United States and particularly of your city here in the mountains." They were promised a letter to be sent to them in Germany, and I am taking this opportunity of reading it to you.

Our government of the United States is, as you know, one of the youngest nations of the world's history. The government was organized in 1789, under the supervision of the first president, George Washington. There were thirteen divisions called states, which had been settled by people from England, Germany, France, Italy, Spain, and the Scandinavian countries. The dominant people were English. Most of them had a profound belief in religion and morality, which ideals were expressed in their civic documents like the Constitution of the United States. It was a period of great and wise men, and among them were families from your native land. The noted German soldier, Baron Von Steuben, was an officer in Washington's army, and the name of Hyam Solomon will ever be remembered for his giving his entire fortune to the American cause at the time of the terrible suffering at Valley Forge. Your own forefathers had not recovered from the terrible times of the Thirty Years' War when they turned to America. In Germany there were intense poverty, suffering, and religious persecutions in the eighteenth century. America had been settled along the Atlantic coast, when and from the mass of human misery came your forefathers who settled largely in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia. They brought with them a love for the arts and music and adapted themselves to the new world.

Children of your fathers entered our schools and universities and came to understand our American civic and political life. In this country, you have preserved your arts and music and literature and great schools of philosophy. Your Immanuel Kant was known by our earliest educators. The Germans have come to know the fundamentals of the Constitution of the United States. If you were attending our schools, you would learn that the opening statement of the Mayflower Compact is: "In the name of God, Amen." And a little later you find the words: "... for the glory of God and advancement of the Christian faith." Americans have always promoted the ideals of the Christian faith. Among our noted documents of history are the Articles of Confederation, which begin with these lines:

Whereas we all came to these parts of America with one and the same end, namely, to advance the kingdom of our Lord, Jesus Christ, and to enjoy the liberty of the gospel in its purity.

Then I have pride in calling your attention to the first meeting held in Virginia known as the General Assembly of Virginia. To this meeting came many of your German people, possibly there were some of your own forebears. In the account of the first meeting of the Virginians, we have these lines:

Monday, April 5

Third Day

... for as much as men's affairs do little prosper where God's service is neglected, all the burgesses took their places in the choir till a prayer was said by the Reverend Mr. Buche, a German minister, "that it would please God to guide and to sanctify all our proceedings to his own glory."

Finally, read the Declaration of Independence, which acknowledges the Creator as the source of life and liberty, relies upon "the protection of Divine Providence," and is written in a spirit of reverence, with an appeal to the right as established by God. You see our fathers always in this civic and political life, acknowledged the leadership of God and sought humbly to follow him. Take your Bible and read the 127th Psalm:

Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

Here in America, men were free to believe as they wished. The history of the United States has largely been a history of religious beliefs. In fact, the American people are naturally believers in God, the eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus, the Christ.

After the lapse of the ages when a new world of discovery and invention had changed man's social outlook, and the way of living had been recreated in the world, it was natural that someone should come forth to look to God for a revelation of his holy word. Many stouthearted followers of the Holy Bible looked toward the new day. In 1620, Pastor John Robinson, in bidding the Pilgrim Fathers good-bye as they left the shores of Holland for far-off America, said to his congregation of faithful men and women:

If God reveal anything to you, by any other instrument of His, be as ready to receive it as ever you were to receive truth by my ministry; for I am fully persuaded, I am very confident, that the Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of His holy word. . . . I beseech you to remember it is an article in your Church Covenant that you be ready to receive whatever truth shall be made known to you from the written word of God.

During the French Revolution, Michelet wrote in his history of France:

The world is waiting for a Faith to march forward again, to breathe and to live. But never can a faith have a beginning in deceit, cunning, or treatise of falsehood.

Soon after these words were written, there was born on the frontier of the United States "a new Faith to march forward again, to breathe and to live." A young boy walked into the woods one day—a boy not hungering for food, but for God, and like the shepherds of old, he felt he must go "... even unto Bethlehem." (Luke 2:15.)

The youthful prophet was Joseph Smith, who knew that what the world needed first, and to the end, was God. Not God in the heavens alone and in the past, but God here, and ready by the man "whom he hath ordained" to repeat and enlarge the work given to the world eighteen hundred years before. Joseph Smith had that divine discontent, which gave him the certainty that whoever opens his heart to the Savior of mankind receives life, and light, and strength.

From the day that the Prophet announced his divine calling until his death, he wrote and spoke the revelations of God and became the clarion of a new day. He awakened a new eagerness in the hearts of men. He met the problems of the ethical and religious conditions of mankind and gave anew the way from the material world to the kingdom of God. The finer elements of life were restored to primacy. Human conduct was won to better issues, which are the cultivation of righteousness in the entire life and activity of mankind.

The coming of John the Baptist, and later of Peter, James, and John, resulted in the establishment of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, for these holy men had restored the priesthood of God, and the divine work of these latter days was begun for the redemption and salvation of mankind. The plight of the world at that time was its lack of vision, its loss of the principles of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. With the restoration of the gospel came a spiritual conviction, a dynamic knowledge, which has been woven into the very lives of the Latter-day Saints. Man's relationship to his heavenly Father has become known. There is a new vision of the kingdom of God, the purpose of which is to culminate in the reign of righteousness upon the earth. This is the prevalent note in the restored gospel. God reigns in heaven and in earth. He is the divine King of nations.

Out of our faith, we find everything that is holy and pure and of good report. The morning of the first Sabbath day after the arrival of the Pioneers in this valley, Saturday, July 24, 1847, divine services were held, and the people were seated in a circle out in the sagebrush, and nearby were the waters of a lovely stream. Gratitude to God was expressed in song and prayer, and the words of Isaiah were read by Apostle Orson Pratt, who gave the sermon:

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!

Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion. (Isaiah 52:7-8.)

The Latter-day Saints believe and know honestly that Adam came to earth sent of God, from heaven. He held the priesthood of God and became the first teacher of the gospel to his descendants. The divine ideals as taught by the Father of us all were held sacred, and from that time to the days of the Messiah upon the earth, the truths of God were planted in the hearts of his children. Maurice Maeterlinck, in his book, The Great Secret, says that what we read in the oldest archives of wisdom gives only a faint idea of the sublime doctrines of the ancient teachers. The older the texts, the more pure, the more awe-inspiring are the doctrines they reveal. They may be merely an echo of sublimer doctrines. We come down to the age of the prophets. Says a noted historian:

How fitting it is that Malachi should seal up the book of the Old Testament prophecy by such a clear statement of the coming of the Lord, the Messenger of the Covenant, the Son of righteousness, and thus give the last prediction of him, with whom the evangelists begin their gospel history.

Hugo Munsterberg of Harvard University, a noted German, wrote, in his Psychology and Life, something of the past glory of the sacred words:

There is a truth, a beauty, a morality, which is independent of psychological conditions. Every straightforward man, to whom the duties of his real life are no sounding brass, speaks with a sound voice to the psychologist: "There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

By the power of the Holy Priesthood which Joseph Smith received from heaven, he established our true relationship to God. Out of this grows the salvation of man—his true immortal life. The nations all bear witness to the need of a light that is not of man. We can give our word to the world that the forces which are to make the world what it ought to be are now within it. We are to study more deeply and constantly the divine truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We must know the history of the Church of which we are members. We must understand the meaning of the priesthood of God, which has been given to us. We must know the divine teachings of the Holy Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price. How beautifully do they teach the words of Shakespeare:

Monday, April 5

Third Day

What a piece of work is man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! (Shakespeare, Hamlet, Act II, Sc. 2.)

What a directive purpose the Prophet Joseph Smith gives us in the words as found in the 88th section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

... seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning, even by study and also by faith.

Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing; and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God. (Verses 118-119.)

From the beginning of the history of the Church, Joseph Smith organized schools of learning. He became a student and a member of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew classes established in the Kirtland Temple. He established the University of the City of Nauvoo, encouraged the building of the Seventies' Hall of Science. From these institutions came the wonderful schools of learning in Utah.

In 1851, the first extensive library was brought by ox teams to this state. It had been purchased in New York City by Dr. John M. Bernhisel and was a wonderful collection of books. There were the works of Shakespeare, Milton, Bacon, Homer, Juvenal, Lucretius, Virgil, Euripides, Sophocles, Plato, Montaigne, Tacitus, Spenser, Herodotus, Goldsmith, and many others of the great masters of the world's best literature. The library received copies of the New York Herald, New York Evening Post, the Philadelphia Saturday Courier, and the North American Review. Of the scientific works there were Newton's Principia, Herschel's Outlines of Astronomy, and Von Humboldt's Cosmos. The treatises on philosophy included the works of John Stuart Mill, Martin Luther, John Wesley, and Emanuel Swedenborg.

The pioneers were always striving to understand the arts and sciences, for they sensed keenly the power of all truth. They knew the human constants—hunger and labor, seedtime and harvest, love and faith—which entered into their lives from the very first. They built the Tabernacle which you visited. They continued establishing schools and colleges and established a theater in the wilderness which in time became recognized by the artists of the London stage as well as the famous dramatists of America. Mr. M. B. Leavitt has written in his Fifty Years of the American Stage:

Sweeping as the statement may seem, I do not believe that the theater has ever rested on a higher plane, both as to its purpose and its offerings, than at Salt Lake City, the Capital of Mormondom.

Utah today has become a great state. Ellsworth Huntington of Yale University, has recently written in his book, entitled, Civilization and Climate:

The proud position of Utah is presumably the result of Mormonism. The leaders of that faith have had the wisdom to insist on a thorough system of schools, and have obliged the children to attend them. The "Gentiles" have in self-defence, been forced to do equally well, and the result has been admirable. Whatever one may think of Mormonism as a religious belief, it must be credited with having accomplished a remarkable work in spreading a moderate degree of education almost universally among the people of Utah.

Count Hermann Keyserling, the noted German philosopher and historian, came to Salt Lake City a few years ago and afterwards wrote in his Travel Diary of a Philosopher, these words:

The Mormons have achieved a civilization hardly attained by any other people. In barely half a century they have changed a salt-desert into a garden. They are, moreover, admirable citizens, law abiding, honest, and progressive.

All the religious denominations of the world have been welcomed to Utah. One of our Articles of Faith says:

We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.

Wherever the Mormons have settled, this has been the attitude of the Church toward all denominations and peoples. In an ordinance relating to religious societies passed by the city council of Nauvoo, we have these words:

AN ORDINANCE RELATING TO RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES

Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Nauvoo, that the Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Latter-day Saints, Quakers, Episcopalians, Universalists, Unitarians, Mohammedans, and all other religious sects and denominations whatever, shall have free toleration and equal privileges in this city; and should any person be guilty of ridiculing or abusing or otherwise depreciating another in consequence of his religion, or of disturbing or interrupting any religious meeting within the limits of this city, he shall on conviction thereof before the Mayor or Municipal Court be fined or imprisoned at the discretion of the Mayor or Court.

You are now to be conducted to our central place of worship, the Tabernacle. Elder Zimmerman, my brother in the priesthood of God, will conduct you there and will tell you much about the building. Professor T. E. Tallmadge, Fellow American Institute of Architects, says in his Story of Architecture in America:

Up and down the Atlantic Seaboard, through the Western reserve, along the Gulf of Mexico, up the Mississippi, and over the plains, the Greek Revival spread. I have noticed that the famous Tabernacle built in Salt Lake City by that extraordinary man, Brigham Young, has the tell-tale Greek profiles in its mouldings and cornices.

In some of our early-day buildings we find no lack of knowledge and appreciation of the fine arts. You may recall how you Germans had been influenced by the Greeks in your fine architecture. I recall a number of great buildings notable in architectural history where the Greek influence is plainly seen. I may mention the old Museum and the Brandenburg Gate in Berlin, and in Vienna, the Parliament House. As you listen to the music of the great organ which was built by a noted organist in Pioneer days, it gives me pride to tell you that the Tabernacle is now known as one of the greatest symphony halls in the world. As early as 1875, our people heard the music of Beethoven and Bach, and picking up a program of Easter Choral Services in 1949, we find that Jesu, Priceless Treasure of Johann Sebastian Bach, together with the Requiem of Johannes Brahms, constituted the program. The great Brahms Requiem is not a mass for the dead but rather an ode to the departed.

This is just to tell you that the Latter-day Saints have been lovers of the classical music as well as of all the arts and literature since the Church was organized. Many a time, the people have in worship sung with the choir: "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place, O Lord of Hosts."

May I say in conclusion, my fellow students, that the Mormon people have expressed their love of God by their constant faith and prayer which have resulted in great love for all peoples wherever they live on the earth.

I pray that you students may have a prosperous and happy journey throughout America and that you may return to your homes in peace and safety. May God ever bless you.

President David O. McKay:

President Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of Seventy has just addressed us.

Our concluding speaker will be Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

SHORT time ago, in company with Brother J. Leonard Love of the welfare committee, I had the opportunity of attending a stake conference at Snowflake, Arizona. While there, we were invited to a dinner which was being held for the Aaronic Priesthood boys of the stake. It was a memorable occasion. The program was delightful. Several beautiful numbers were given, one of which was a solo by a young boy who had a clear soprano voice. It was a solo which brought back to my mind a number of wonderful memories. That young man stood up before those four hundred or more boys and sang:

A "Mormon" boy, a "Mormon" boy,
I am a "Mormon" boy;
I might be envied by a king,
For I am a "Mormon" boy.

That song was written by Evan Stephens, and as it was sung, I remembered that as a boy I sang this song also; and I had the opportunity of singing with a large boys' chorus here in this Tabernacle under the direction of Evan Stephens. I learned to honor him then, and I loved this song. Let me read to you a little more from it:

My father is a "Mormon" true,
And when I am a man,
I want to be like him, and do
Just all the good I can.
My faults I'll try to overcome,
And while I life enjoy,
With pride I'll lift my head and say,
I am a "Mormon" boy.
A "Mormon" boy, a "Mormon" boy,
I am a "Mormon" boy;
I might be envied by a king,
For I am a "Mormon" boy.

About this time my father was my Sunday School teacher, and a little later he became the instructor in our deacons' quorum. I used to honor him as I sang this song. I also remembered my heavenly Father, and the command which the Savior gave us to strive to become like him. And then as I would sing this song, not only would I have gratitude to my earthly father, but to my heavenly Father, also, and I would sing, "I want to be like him, and do just all the good I can."

As I listened to that boy in Snowflake sing this song, I thought how often it is that our boys and our girls, when they get into junior high and possibly into senior high, feel as if they are growing up and must put away childish things. It is true that they must put away certain childish acts, but other things which are taught them in childhood are so very important and so basic that all through their lives they must remember them. The message of this song by Evan Stephens is one of them.

A "Mormon" boy. . . .
I might be envied by a king,
For I am a "Mormon" boy.

And then there was another song that I loved very much as a young lad. It carries with it another glorious lesson which our young people should remember even though they begin to grow up in those high school years. The song to which I refer is one written by Eliza R. Snow. You remember that Sister Snow wrote, "O My Father," "How Great the Wisdom and the Love," and some others of our most beautiful hymns. But she knew also how to write for young people. In this beautiful song she placed the ideals of the Church in the language of children, and had them sing it in the hope that as they grew up they would not abandon the ideals of which she spoke, but would allow them to become steadily more important in their lives. I hope every one of you continues to sing it, and to hum it over as you go along the street, and that you remember the great lessons she wrote into it:

In our lovely Deseret,
Where the Saints of God have met,
There's a multitude of children all around;
They are generous and brave;
They have precious souls to save;
They must listen and obey the gospel's sound.

All of you know those words. Aren't they glorious? And isn't it stimulating music which has been written to these words? But listen to some of the more important things Sister Snow taught to young people in their childhood, hoping to establish in their hearts by song the high standards that are so vital and important to these boys and girls as they grow up and accomplish the things that Brother Lee has referred to here this morning:

That the children may live long
And be beautiful and strong
Tea and coffee and tobacco they despise,
Drink no liquor, and they eat
But a very little meat;
They are seeking to be great and good and
wise.

When I was in school one time, I accompanied the class to Provo and went through the institution down there for the mentally afflicted. We saw one young man there who had a queer tendency in that he always wanted to be striking himself on the head. I remember as students how we thought this man was so to be pitied because he didn't have any more sense than to strike himself on the head. As we were talking about that one day, I thought of this song:

That the children may live long,
And be beautiful and strong,
Tea and coffee and tobacco they despise,
Drink no liquor, and they eat
But a very little meat.

As young people we talked about it, remembering this man who wanted to strike himself on the head. One of the students then said, "Well, which is crazier, to be batting yourself on the head all the time, or to be taking things into your body that would poison you? Which is worse—to poison your body and defile it, to make yourself intoxicated so that you don't know what you are doing, even losing your self-control, or to bat yourself on the head? Which is the crazier of the two?

Now think in terms of modern science. Think how doctors are discovering, despite the arguments of all the tobacco companies, to the contrary, that you do tend to develop cancer of the lung through cigarettes. Which is crazier, to bat yourself on the head with a stick, or to bring into your body these things that will destroy your body? Which is crazier?

Drink no liquor, and they eat
But a very little meat;
wise.

I ask you young people, is there anything childish in this song when you really think about it? Can you see anything childish in this injunction to avoid these stimulants, these narcotics, these intoxicating things, which not only affect your body adversely but will also destroy your spirituality and your faith in God, if you allow them to?

That the children may live long
And be beautiful and strong,
Tea and coffee and tobacco and liquor and all these other evil things they despise!

And then there is the next stanza:

They should be instructed young
How to watch and guard the tongue,
And their tempers train, and evil passions
bind;
They should always be polite,
And treat ev'rybody right,
And in ev'ry place be affable and kind.

I have thought a great deal about that at different times. I am sure we should be instructed young. I recall that Solomon said that if we are properly taught when we are young, we will not depart from those important things when we grow up.

We should watch and guard the tongue. I used to think this meant only profanity, and that is extremely important, because one of the great commandments is that we shall not profane the name of God. He will not allow us to go free if we do profane his holy name.

But the more I think of the things that Brother Lee so beautifully discussed here this morning, the more I am convinced that Eliza R. Snow was inspired in guiding the young people to watch and guard the tongue against speaking of evil and demoralizing things which put evil thoughts in the minds and sometimes lead to evil acts which are themselves destructive of the very soul; including evil stories and evil remarks about the opposite sex. "They should be instructed young how to watch and guard the tongue, and their tempers train." And that is so important.

I, too, get letters from young people. I got one the other day from a girl who wanted to know, Is it wrong to pet? She said, frankly, "I don't know. Will you tell me, is it wrong to pet?" And I wrote back to that girl and told her that petting is one of the most pernicious things that ever came into the world, and that when young people pet they lay the foundation for the destruction of their morals. In fact petting is in and of itself a partial loss of virtue, and when any young people pet, they to that degree lose their chastity. The Lord said that when anyone looks upon others to lust after them, they have committed adultery with them already in their heart.

They should be instructed young,
How to watch and guard the tongue,
And their tempers train, and evil passions bind;
They should always be polite,
And treat ev'rybody right,
And in ev'ry place be affable and kind.

Nothing childish in that, is there? Shouldn't we, as we grow up, even through high school and college and into mature adulthood continue to sing "In Our Lovely Deseret"?

And then this last verse which every one of us should remember, particularly as young people, because it will help us to keep on the right path:

They must not forget to pray,
Night and morning, ev'ry day,
For the Lord to keep them safe from ev'ry ill,
And assist them to do right,
That with all their mind and might,
They may love him and may learn to do his will.

As I have studied that song and the philosophy expressed in it by this glorious poet, I begin to understand what in my boyhood I did not understand: why it is that a Mormon boy might be envied by a king.

And now because I have some realization of what Sister Snow wrote in this song, I can understand that you girls of the Church, every one of you, might well be envied by a queen, if you will but live up to the principles of the everlasting gospel.

And every boy in the Church truly might be envied by a king because he himself is kingly by reason of the righteousness, the cleanliness, the faithfulness of his life.

May every boy and girl experience that joy is my humble prayer, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve Apostles. The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses will now favor us with "And the Glory of the Lord," conducted by Elder Don L. Earl. The benediction will be offered by Elder Lorin F. Jones, formerly President of the Spanish American Mission, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The singing for this session has been furnished by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses under the direction of Elder Don L. Earl; Elder Alexander Schreiner is at the organ. These singers will be with us again this afternoon. "And the glory of the Lord" will now be rendered by the Chorus.

The Combined Choruses sang an anthem, "And The Glory of the Lord,"

after which the benediction was offered by Elder Lorin F. Jones, formerly president of the Spanish American Mission.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

THIRD DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened in the fifth session at 2 o'clock p.m., Monday, April 5.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses furnished the choral music for this session. Crawford Gates conducted the signing and Alexander Schreiner was at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

This is the fifth session of the 124th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. To the radio audience listening in, we are pleased to announce that the Tabernacle is crowded as heretofore in sessions held during this Conference. To those who are unable to gain admittance to the Tabernacle, we announce that overflow meetings are held in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, where a public address system and television are operating.

These services are also being televised over KSL television, channel 5, and will be heard over radio station KSL and by arrangement through KSL over eleven radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, Nevada, Colorado, and Wyoming, the names of which stations have just been announced to the radio audience. We desire to express our appreciation now as we have heretofore, to these stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts.

The singing for this afternoon's session will be by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, with Crawford Gates conducting, and Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We shall begin these services by the Combined Choruses singing, "Come, Come, Ye Saints," arranged by Elder Crawford Gates, and conducted by Elder Gates.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Waldo M. Andersen, formerly President of the Northern States Mission.

The Chorus sang the hymn, "Come, Come, Ye Saints," (arranged by Crawford Gates).

Elder Waldo M. Andersen, formerly president of the Northern States Mission, offered the invocation.

Singing by the Chorus, "How Blest Are They."

President David O. McKay:

Our first speaker this afternoon is Elder Richard L. Evans, of the Council of the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Eldred G. Smith.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

HERE are always overwhelming feelings on these occasions. Two of those that rise to the top at this time are inadequacy, and gratitude for fellowship with you and for any part in the Church.

I recall reading a statement that President McKay is reported to have made, as he alighted at the airport of one of the large South American cities on his recent tour: that "there are three beautiful things in the world—love and friendship and brotherhood." They are all in evidence here and help to feed and sustain us and to send us away encouraged and enriched.

I am mindful of the glorious principles that have been enunciated here, which, with others, make this a most satisfying gospel to feed the human soul. Some of these are: faith, repentance, the assurance of forgiveness with proper repentance; the eternal continuance of personality, of individual identity; the assurance that we may have everlasting association with those we love; testimony; the knowledge that no man stands between us and our God; the assurance of eternal plan and purpose; continuous revelation; free agency; and the fact that this is an inclusive message and opportunity and gospel and Church, and not an exclusive one—that its blessings are to all men who are willing to partake of them, and are not reserved to a special few predestined by our Father in heaven to have the blessings and benefits. It is his purpose to save all his children and to exalt all his children, not merely to warn and turn them away, but to labor with them in love and in patience, and to bring them back into his presence, if they will.

A great man has been in our midst here for a few days, one of the notable men of medicine, Sir Alexander Fleming, whom we have had the pleasure in this community of meeting and hearing on one or two occasions. He told the story of how, in working in a laboratory in a London hospital back in 1928, he observed the action of an accidental mold that had drifted into his laboratory from some source and which had an arresting effect on some germ colonies that were in the culture in one of his petri dishes. His statement, as he recorded it in his diary, was this: "I was sufficiently interested to pursue the subject. The appearance of the culture plant was such that I thought it should not be neglected." Thus, penicillin was discovered and put to immeasurable human benefit.

"I was sufficiently interested to pursue the subject." Well, with a mold so common, so accessible, one wonders why someone did not see it sooner, why someone did not "pursue the subject" sooner. That the world should go so long without such a discovery from such a common and available source would seem to be but a further indication that there is ever before us an infinity of undiscovered things and that opportunities are limitless, and that "revelation" of this kind is continuous, as is direct revelation from our Father in heaven.

The songs of birds that are all around us, we often do not hear. Two enterprising scientists not long ago made some "visual recordings" of bird songs with an audio-spectrograph, so that the human eye could "see" the music that the birds were making, but the human ear could not hear it as it reached above the range of "normal" human hearing.

Who knows what unseen and unheard things may be all around us? There are limitless possibilities; there is infinity before us, and revelation must be continuous.

Sometimes we wonder why others cannot see some of the things that we see. Sometimes we wonder why we cannot see some of the things that they see. There may be many reasons for this. We differ in our experience; we differ in our perception; we differ in our preoccupation. Some of us have our thoughts fixed on one thing at one time, and some on another. But there are great things to be discovered if we will have ears to hear and eyes to see and be sufficiently interested "to pursue the subject" as was this great man of medicine.

There may be things that some of us do not see—as Peter and Paul, seemingly did not always see the same things—but they both loved the gospel; they both lived for it, and both were willing to die for it. There are some great fundamentals and requirements and commandments on which there can be no doubt and no differences, of which the Lord has spoken definitely. Beyond this, some, such as Sir Alexander Fleming, see some things that some of us do not see.

As to free agency: mercifully and wonderfully that was settled in the heavens a long time ago when Lucifer challenged it. It is one of the great and glorious principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I recall a comment reported to have been made by President Clark to a graduating class last spring, in which he said, in substance, that Lucifer must have thought that God was very "old-fashioned." Lucifer was proposing some very different ways of doing some things. It seems that he would have done some things in a much more "efficient" manner, if you will put "efficiency" in quotations. He would have delivered all our Father's children back to him—but in a strait jacket!

The only kind of "efficiency" that the Lord God is interested in for us is that kind of efficiency which contributes to and promotes the development and growth of his children in helping them choose for themselves the great things and the right things, the right way of life—for the eternal salvation and exaltation of their souls. And I would say today, keep faith in freedom. Avoid the principle of compulsion.

And now for a moment or two, may I yield to the temptation to speak another thought or two to these young people who are here from Brigham Young University, to these others who are here in this congregation, and beyond here, to all who will hear or read, and to all those of this generation, whom they represent, following along the lines of the moving and impressive instructions of Brother Lee and Brother Petersen this morning:

It is apparent that man has acquired the power to destroy the works of man. The instruments of destruction are ever more fearful with each passing day. But man has not acquired the power to destroy the works or the plans or the purposes of God. All of us at times have our fears. All men have their fears, their uncertainties. But may I say to you: Go ahead and live your lives. You are not alone in life. The Lord God is there and ever accessible to you.

This is no time for panic. Our Father made us in his image. He sent us here. He looked out at what he had made during the creation, and he saw that it was very good. It was good, and it is still good. He intends happiness for us, and it is not only our privilege but also our duty to be happy, and we shall be if we have the courage to live as we ought to live and to be what we ought to be.

Be honest, clean, chaste, humble. Keep your lives well-balanced. Always reserve some of your time and means to the things of the spirit and to the service of your Father in heaven as well as to the things of the mind and the things of physical sustenance. Work, study, and pray. Keep an open mind to truth; keep the faith; live so as to have a quiet conscience. The rewarding way of life is to keep the commandments. The hard way of life is to live contrary to conscience and contrary to the commandments.

We are in this world, and I do not know anything to do about it except to make the most of it, to live good and useful and purposeful lives, and to find joy in the opportunity that the Lord God has given us until the time comes to leave this life, which will be swiftly and soon enough. There is no running away from life, no running away from ourselves. We can run away from where we are, but not from what we are or from who we are; and all we have to do is to live a day at a time to the best of our ability. The weight of the future is not on us except as it comes moment by moment.

In the words of Thomas Carlyle, "The crash of the whole solar and stellar systems could only kill you once." There is no point in living in fear, in panic, or in apprehension. Endure to the end, keep faithful, for he who made us and gave us life and who keeps creation in its course will not forsake us. And though we have acquired the instruments for destroying the works of man, if we should be so foolish as to set them loose, yet the power and the purposes of God as concerning us and all his creations are constant and ever surround us with their protection and their peace, if we will be partakers of these things.

Monday, April 5

God lives. He has eternal plans and purposes for his children. Jesus is the Christ. The gospel has been restored, and despite all the answers we do not know and all the areas where there may be differences of opinion, we know all we need to know for our everlasting salvation and exaltation and happiness—if we will use what the Lord God has given us. Truth will triumph; justice will be done; and there will be no good thing lost in the life of him who will live as best he knows how to live and will partake of these things which our Father has prepared for us.

May I close with the testimony of a beloved friend, who is not with us, Dr. John A. Widtsoe. In one of the closing sentences of his book, In a Sunlit Land, in which he looked back on his life as a scientist, as a convert, as an educator, as an Apostle, and as a great and humble servant of men and of God, as a man who had seen much of life from many sides and who had come forth from it all with a sweet and simple faith—on the last pages of this book he wrote these words which he left for the record of posterity:

During this long life, I have had occasion to test, time and time again, the verity of the foundations of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The answer has always been the same: Joseph Smith told the truth. (In a Sunlit Land, pp. 243-244.)

I leave this with you as a witness of my soul this day, to you a choice and blessed generation of youth. God bless you and be with you; go forth and live your lives; rely on him; keep sweet and humble, and his blessings and guidance will be with you. May he bless you in all your decisions, I pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder Richard L. Evans. Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church, will now speak to us, and he will be followed by Elder Bruce McConkie.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

WISH to express my gratitude for the prayer that was offered at the opening of this session, and I pray that I shall receive my share of the answer to that prayer.

Truly, these are great gatherings, gatherings of a faithful people, seeking spiritual food to buoy us up and give us courage and strength to carry us along the way a little farther.

In my mind I see a parallel in these gatherings to the young man who asked the Savior,

Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?

And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

He saith unto him, Which?

Jesus enumerated a number of things to do and he answered,

All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?

Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasures in heaven: and come and follow me.

But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions. (Matt. 19:16-18, 20-22.)

Nevertheless the young man had been keeping the commandments. We who are members of the Church are also the more righteous who are trying to keep the commandments.

The young man went away sorrowful. I wonder how many of us do a similar thing when we leave these conference sessions. President Smith called our attention to the fact that the Lord is pleased with the Church collectively but not individually.

The instructions from the Lord and from the prophets of all times comes down to us: "Say nothing but repentance unto this generation." (D. & C. 6:9.)

And such counsel is found in most of the addresses given at these conferences, and when we, who are trying to keep his commandments, are taught repentance, do we accept it as only something for the other person—the sinner—or as something done once as a prerequisite to baptism and then not needed any more?

After a spiritual feast such as we have in these sessions, it is natural to want to share with others what we have received, and surely we should do so. But do we accept the instructions for ourselves and put them into practice, each for his own benefit first?

As long as we are not perfect, we are in need of repentance, for all improvement comes as a result of repentance. Each should take daily inventory of himself and try to do better each day. Repentance is a daily affair.

Do we have pride to overcome? The Lord says, "Be thou humble; and the Lord thy God shall lead thee by the hand." (Ibid., 112:10.)

One of the greatest pitfalls that we must watch is the pride of self-righteousness. Are we ever guilty—when we devote so much of our time and our efforts to activities in the Church—of being lifted up in the pride of our own importance?

There was a discussion recently between a member of a stake board and a ward officer over a roadshow that had just been presented. The stake officer was highly indignant because the daughter of the ward leader had a speaking part while her own daughter was only in the chorus.

Are we always wholeheartedly glad when others succeed, or is our praise lacking in sincerity—given grudgingly, or not at all?

Are you so self-righteous that you have neighbors on all sides of you who do not attend Church or are not members of the Church and you do nothing to assist them?

Another common fault for which many of us may have cause for repentance is repeating a bit of gossip we have heard. Whether it be true or not is beside the point. If it is not kind, it does not bear repeating.

Are you willing to forgive? Remember, in the Lord's prayer, Christ prayed, "Forgive our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

Do you refrain from passing judgment, or do you condemn others for the faults you see in them?

Understand, I am not condemning anyone. I just say, "If the shoe fits, wear it."

We become so involved in our various Church activities that sometimes we think we have "arrived," as it were—that we have no need for repentance. Leave that to the poor sinner.

Carlyle uttered a great truth when he said, "Of all acts, is not repentance most divine? The greatest of faults is to be conscious of none."

There are those also who are conscious of their mistakes, yet they do not try to change their habits.

The film we saw at the priesthood meeting the other night was a good example which shows that there are many of these people.

I have heard some say that they have been told that because of their past acts they cannot receive the blessings of exaltation anyway, even if they went to the temple, so why try?

They liken themselves to the prodigal son who returned only to be a servant. If one procrastinates the day of repentance until the day of his return to the Father, surely he cannot expect anything other than to become a servant.

Monday, April 5

Third Day

However, had the prodigal son repented earlier and regained his wealth and his birthright, he could then have returned to the father without being a servant. Likewise, if a man repents and restores his rights to the blessings, surely he shall receive all he has earned. "Repentance becomes more difficult as the sin is more willful; . . . as the time of repentance is procrastinated, the ability to repent grows weaker." (James E. Talmage.)

Alma tells us,

Behold, he sendeth an invitation unto all men, for the arms of mercy are extended towards them, and he saith: Repent, and I will receive you. (Alma 5:33.)

He says, "All men"; not just a few who are selected, but he says, "Repent, and I will receive you."

If you just stop and think of it, how wonderful the mercy of the Lord is. All manner of sin, except murder and blasphemy, can be forgiven through repentance. If we will try to do his will, his arm of mercy is outstretched toward us.

Not one of us is perfect now, but we are here to attain perfection. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5:48.) So as we overcome our weaknesses, and our sins, we grow and draw nearer our aim of perfection.

Let us not be so self-righteous that we think that we have no need for repentance, for the Savior himself preached repentance to the more righteous who were spared from the great destruction at the time of his crucifixion. At that time, on this hemisphere there was darkness for three days and great destruction; many cities and all their inhabitants were destroyed. Then the voice of the Lord was heard declaring that the more wicked had been destroyed, and the more righteous had been saved. To the righteous that were spared he declared as he might well say to us here today:

O ye house of Israel whom I have spared, how oft will I gather you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, if ye will repent and return unto me with full purpose of heart. (3 Nephi 10:6.)

Then a warning—

But if not, O house of Israel, the places of your dwellings shall become desolate until the time of the fulfilling of the covenant to your fathers. (Ibid., 10:7.)

Yea, verily I say unto you, if ye will come unto me ye shall have eternal life. Behold, mine arm of mercy is extended towards you, and whosoever will come, him will I receive; and blessed are those who come unto me. (Ibid., 9:14.)

And ye shall offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And whoso cometh unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, him will I baptize with the Holy Ghost. . . .

Behold, I have come unto the world to bring redemption unto the world, to save the world from sin.

Therefore, whoso repenteth and cometh unto me as a little child, him will I receive, for of such is the kingdom of God. Behold, for such I have laid down my life, and have taken it up again; therefore repent, and come unto me ye ends of the earth, and be saved. (Ibid., 9:20-22.)

May the Lord's blessings be upon us, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

AY I INVITE your attention to a comparison between the Church of Jesus Christ, as it was organized and perfected in New Testament times, and the self-styled Christian churches that exist in the world today? In order to do so I shall take the liberty of raising a number of queries, and shall assume that each of us has a sufficient working knowledge of the New Testament to recognize the basis upon which each query rests.

Where in the world today will we find a church that has as its official title some combination of the names of Christ, according to the New Testament pattern?

Where is there a church whose ministers claim divine authority in the real, complete, and actual sense that it was claimed by the ministers among the primitive Saints?

Where is there a church which claims the Melchizedek and Aaronic orders of the priesthood as these were had anciently?

Where is there a church in which we will find the ordinances practised that were practised among the primitive Saints?

Where do we find baptism by immersion for the remission of sins performed under the hands of a legal administrator?

Where do we find a people who lay hands on the head of every baptized convert for the present bestowal of the Holy Ghost; or who, when there are sick among them, call in the elders of the church, that they may anoint them with oil and pray over them, that the prayer of faith may heal the sick and God may raise them up?

Where is there a people that has the New Testament ordinance of baptism for the dead?

Where is there a church that has the same organization that existed among the primitive Saints, that has Apostles and prophets, pastors, evangelists, and all the rest?

Where is there a people that believes that there should be Twelve Apostles holding the keys of the kingdom, presiding over and directing all of the affairs of the Church and kingdom, and that such group should continue until there is a unity of the faith?

Where is there a church that believes that God has set some in the Church, first Apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers; after that miracles; then gifts of the spirit, healings, tongues, helps, and governments?

Where is there a church that professes to have all of the doctrines that were taught in New Testament times; that believes that God our heavenly Father is a personal being, in whose image man is created; that has an understanding that Jesus Christ is his Only Begotten Son and is a Being in the express image of the person of the Father?

Where is there a people that has a real, intelligent, and scriptural understanding of the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ, that knows that because of that transcendent act all men will be raised in immortality and those who have believed and obeyed the gospel law, both in immortality and unto eternal life?

Where is there a people that knows that the plan of salvation, based on the atoning sacrifice of Christ, consists in having faith in Christ, in repenting of one's sins, in being baptized under the hands of a legal administrator, in receiving the gift and guidance of the Holy Spirit, and then in enduring in righteousness unto the end?

Where is there a church that believes that the gospel is preached to those in the spirit world, that they may live according to God in the spirit, and be judged according to men in the flesh?

Where is there a people that believes in the literal resurrection from the grave, in the fact that all men will stand before the judgment bar of Christ, and having been judged according to the deeds done in the flesh, will be awarded a place in a kingdom of glory, in either a testial, a terrestrial, or a celestial kingdom?

Where is there a people that believes that between the first and second comings of Christ, there was to be a complete, total, universal falling away from the faith once delivered to the Saints?

Where is there a people that believes that in the last days there was to be an era of restoration, a time of restitution, in which God would give again all things that he had spoken by the mouths of all his holy prophets since the world began?

Where is there a people that believes

Monday, April 5

that this restoration of the gospel was to be effected by angelic ministration, and that the gospel so restored was then to be carried to all the peoples of the earth?

Where is there a people that believes that in a day subsequent to New Testament times, the kingdom was to be restored to Israel and the scattered remnants of that people gathered back to the lands of their inheritance?

Where is there a people that actually believes that signs will follow those who accept and obey the gospel law, that professes to have among the membership of the church the working of miracles, the ministering of angels, the gifts of the Spirit, and all of the powers and graces that were had anciently?

Now we might multiply questions on all of these matters, but I submit to you that every essential, identifying characteristic of the New Testament Church can, with intelligence and propriety, be outlined under one of these six heads: name, authority, ordinances, organization, doctrines, and gifts of the Spirit. And I submit to you further that there is only one Church in all the world that so much as claims to have every essential identifying characteristic of the Church organized and perfected by Christ and his Apostles anciently, and that one Church is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Now, may I say by way both of testimony and of doctrine, that you and I are living in the era of restoration. We are living in the times of restitution. The heavens are no longer sealed. The voice of God is heard again. The kingdom is established on earth, and that kingdom is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and it has again every grace and right, power, privilege, and authority that the Almighty ever gave to the Saints in primitive times.

And now we are nearing the end of the world. The time is not far distant when the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ, and if you and I live worthily and walk as most of us already know we should, we will be entitled to receive an eternal inheritance in his eternal world.

In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Bruce R. McConkie of the First Council of Seventy, has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Elder ElRay L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve, and he will be followed by Elder Clifford E. Young.

ELDER ELRAY L. CHRISTIANSEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I HAVE always enjoyed listening to that beautiful little song, "The Prayer Perfect," and I am thinking just now of the last few words in that song:

And with all the needy, O divide, I pray,

This vast treasure of content that is mine today.

As we sit here, brothers and sisters, we are blessed with vast treasures of content, knowing full well and having the assurance that God lives, and that this is his Church and kingdom; knowing that if we will keep the commandments of the Lord, that we may go back into his presence; that we may reach out and bring our loved ones and our friends this same blessing. This brings a great measure of contentment. But we must not rest contented, for the Lord has placed upon our shoulders the responsibility, not only of perfecting our own lives, but also of teaching to all the world this gospel. That has been emphasized in this conference. In addition to that, he has given us the responsibility of identifying our dead kindred, of placing their names in the temples and there receiving ordinances as proxies for them.

There are those, even among us, who belittle and minimize this part of the gospel plan. There are many in the world who believe it not at all, yet it is true, and it is indispensable to the welfare and the salvation, both of the living and of the dead! Since God is just, his divine plan of salvation includes the means and the power by which those who have died without a knowledge of the gospel may hear it and, if they will, may accept it and receive that which has already been mentioned in this conference; namely, the great gift of immortality and eternal life.

For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. (1 Peter 4:6.)

Inasmuch as God is a just God, the same principles, the same ordinances, the same conditions that apply to the salvation of the living apply also to the salvation of the dead—even that of baptism, which we know is indispensable for our membership in the Church and kingdom of God. The Lord has said,

Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. (John 3:5.)

That means he must be baptized and receive the Holy Ghost.

Now, when the Savior said that, he made no exceptions. There was no distinction between the living and the dead. All were included; all must meet this prerequisite for membership and citizenship in that kingdom.

Wilford Woodruff, seventy-eight years ago tomorrow, said something about this, when he made this significant statement:

God is no respecter of persons; he will not give privileges to one generation and withhold them from another; and the whole human family, from Father Adam down to our day, have got to have the privilege, somewhere, of hearing the gospel of Christ; . . . They have to be preached to in the spirit world. But nobody will baptize them there, therefore someone must administer to them by proxy here in the flesh, that they may be judged according to man in the flesh and have part in the first resurrection. (Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, p. 179.)

And then a few years later this great man said this: "We have got to enter these temples and redeem our dead. . . . This is the great work of the last dispensation, the redemption of the living and of the dead."

Now, this is a tremendous task, a stupendous assignment. I feel sure, however, that as we work with the means and powers that we have and do our utmost toward this great work of redeeming the dead, that the Lord will, as he has done in the immediate past, provide additional ways and means and improved facilities by which this work can be better accomplished.

It is for a good reason that he has placed this responsibility upon us. It teaches us unselfishness. It teaches us love of others. It teaches us to be Christ-like and even become, in reality, saviors upon Mount Zion.

Another reason that he has placed it upon our shoulders is to provide through us the necessary ordinances for those who have passed on. My brothers and sisters, we cannot escape this assignment on behalf of the dead!

Now in order that the righteous dead may receive by proper authority the ordinances that are necessary for the blessings of immortality and eternal life, the Lord long, long ago promised the world that he would send from his presence one who possessed the authority and the keys to begin anew this work upon the earth. The promise was made through Malachi, the prophet, when he said,

Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord:

And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. (Mal. 4:5-6.)

Monday, April 5

Third Day

Now, the Prophet Joseph Smith said that this word turn should be understood to mean bind or seal the hearts of the children to their fathers, and vice versa. I like the words of Moroni to the Prophet Joseph in regard to this. Said Moroni:

Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers—as they have done in a most marvelous way.

If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming. (D. & C. 2:1-3.)

The literal fulfilment of this promise has been made in our day! If we turn to the 110th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, we will find that the Prophet Malachi's prediction has been literally fulfilled: that Elijah has come. On April 3, 1836, when Joseph and Oliver were in the Kirtland Temple, after certain ceremonies, including the sacrament, had been taken care of, they retired to the pulpit; and the veils being dropped, they bowed their heads in solemn and silent prayer, and then they declared that after arising from this prayer, that

The veil was taken from our minds, and the eyes of our understanding were opened.

We saw the Lord standing upon the breastwork of the pulpit, before us; and under his feet was a paved work of pure gold, in color like amber.

His eyes were as a flame of fire; the hair of his head was white like the pure snow; his countenance shone above the brightness of the sun; and his voice was as the sound of the rushing of great waters, even the voice of Jehovah. . . . (Ibid., 110:1-3.)

The Lord told them that their sins were forgiven; that he had accepted that house, the temple in Kirtland, as the work of their hands; that it should be only the beginning of such things, and that

. . . the hearts of thousands and tens of thousands shall greatly rejoice in consequence of the blessings which shall be poured out, and the endowment with which my servants have been endowed in this house.

And the fame of this house shall spread to foreign lands; . . . (ibid., 9-10) and the Savior told them this was only the beginning of the blessings which shall be poured upon the heads of the people all over the world.

We have seen, in part, the fulfilment of that.

After this vision closed, Moses appeared to them and committed to them the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth. This was followed by the visitation of Elias who committed the gospel of Abraham, then they declared that:

After this vision had closed, another great and glorious vision burst upon us; for Elijah the prophet, who was taken to heaven without tasting death, stood before us, and said:

Behold, the time has fully come, which was spoken of by the mouth of Malachi—testifying that he [Elijah] should be sent, before the great and dreadful day of the Lord come—

To turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse—

"Therefore," (And this is the important thing). . . .

Therefore, the keys of this dispensation are committed into your hands; and by this ye may know that the great and dreadful day of the Lord is near, even at the doors. (Ibid., 13-16.)

Thus, my brothers and sisters, has the fulfilment of Malachi's prophecy come to pass in this time of ours? He has come, and the powers that were given to Joseph have been extended to others, so that the people of the whole world might, if they will, be blessed, and so that all of the ordinances of the gospel might be administered to in power and in righteousness.

Now, I know that men say, and they have said to me, "We do not believe this." But the disbelief of a million men does not change the fact! The restoration of this priesthood will, as has been predicted, save the earth from being utterly wasted at the coming of the Lord, otherwise his purposes would be thwarted; and we are told he has said that his purposes and his designs will not be frustrated, but only the designs and the purposes and the acts of men will be brought to naught.

We must not assume that the mission of Elijah and the powers that were given by him are confined only to the dead, for the living also must receive these same ordinances and have them performed if they would have exaltation and eternal life in the celestial kingdom of heaven.

How wonderful it is to see the young people—all people, come to the temples of the Lord in great numbers and receive their blessings. How fitting it is to see the parents and the grandparents come with their children. This is the ideal way, for if we are going to be together as families in the next life, it has always seemed to me that we should get some practice in getting together with our families under such circumstances in this life.

The obligation of the Latter-day Saints is three-fold:

1. To prepare themselves to go to the temple and receive their blessings and to teach their children to live so that they may be worthy and have a desire to go.
2. To gather the records of our dead and place them in the temples.
3. To go to the house of the Lord and there give our services occasionally to those who have passed on without a knowledge of the gospel.

Only by so doing can we perfect ourselves and receive the fulness of joy here and hereafter!

The Prophet Joseph has said that we should not procrastinate in this work. I know that many are active in it, many are anxiously engaged in it, but the majority of us are unconcerned. We must not leave it to Aunt Martha or someone else to identify our dead and to go to the temples; we must not assume that it has been done; it is our individual obligation to do this work! The Prophet has said that the Saints have not too much time to save and redeem the dead and to gather together the living relatives, and that is important, that they may be saved also. "They have not too much time," he said, "before the earth will be smitten and the consumption decreed falls upon the world." (See Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 330.) So, before that day comes, while the day lasts and before the night comes when no man can work, let us rejoice in this great restoration and participate in it to our joy and to our satisfaction. May we do this, I pray humbly, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

LAST FRIDAY the General Authorities met with the mission presidents who had been serving in this country and in Central America. It was an inspiring meeting, and they who were there expressed their gratitude and appreciation for the privilege of coming here to the headquarters of the Church and meeting with their brethren and reporting their labors, feeling the spirit of testimony as expressed by their associates and by all who were privileged to speak in the meeting which was held in the temple.

Then we have had our brethren who have offered prayers or spoken, express their gratitude for the privilege of being in attendance at this conference. We, ourselves, have partaken of that spirit, grateful to the Almighty that we are here, that we can sit under the sound of the voice of the prophets of God and of the other General Authorities as they have spoken and listen to their counsel, and partake of their spirit. We are grateful for this privilege and blessing.

Monday, April 5

You people who are listening in and who are watching on television are also grateful. Yesterday this latter privilege was extended wider than ever before in the history of the Church, and I know we were all thrilled as we heard President McKay tell of the extent of these televised and broadcasted services.

But this raised a question in my mind, as did our meeting with the mission presidents. I thought of some of our mission presidents over in the old country who are working faithfully, who are devoted to this work, giving of their time and their means, faithful to their trust, and yet they could not be with us.

I thought too, of the thousands of Saints, in the islands of the sea, and in the old country, and even in this country, who cannot partake of the spirit of these services because they are not able to be here or to come within the radius of television or of the radio, and yet they are just as anxious as we, and they are just as devoted as we. The Lord will not forget them. He will in his own way bless them as they learn of these services; as they read the testimonies of these meetings, they will partake of the same spirit, perhaps not so potently as we; but the Lord will bless them, and they too will share with us because he will not leave them alone.

Brother Christiansen has been telling ing us of our obligations to those who have gone, of the revelations of the Lord that the hearts of the children shall be turned to their fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to their children, for "were it not so the whole earth would be wasted at his coming." In listening to Brother Christiansen we have been impressed with the magnitude of this work, and we have been given an insight into the mercies of our heavenly Father.

As we are permitted to enjoy the blessings of being here and are made aware of the blessings and privileges that come and will come to us through the atonement, we cannot help being made aware of and be concerned with the thousands of God's children who, through no fault of their own, are not blessed as are we.

I was in the home two weeks ago of one of our brethren where there is a little girl who is deficient, a little child who never will have the opportunity in this life to fulfil the purposes of the Lord for which she was placed here, unless God shall intervene with a miracle and heal her little body and her mind. Her mind apparently through some physical pressure and through no fault of her own, nor is it through any failure of her parents to do the will of the Lord, is not able to grasp the things that you and I are able to grasp, and thus she will go through life underprivileged, not physically only, but lacking in the expression of her mental powers. It is not her spirit that is injured, but her body, and the body is the medium of expression of the spirit in this life; and when the body is injured either in birth or before or afterwards, and as a result the spirit cannot give expression to a normal life here, then we speak of such as being defective, and handicapped.

And there are thousands of such everywhere. I wish you could go with me to our state training school in Utah County and see the hundreds of little children and men and women who are thus afflicted. As I have observed these, the question has arisen in my mind, "What is the answer to this problem of these underprivileged children, these people who are not blessed as are we?" And I come back to the same conclusion that as those who are not here will also sometime share in the blessings that we are enjoying in these meetings, and as those who do not know the law will be judged without the law, even so will the Lord grant to these who are not privileged, his blessings so that nothing will be withheld from them if it is through no fault of their own.

The Lord has said that those who live without law shall be judged without law, and by the same token those who are not privileged to have the blessings in this life that you and I have who are mentally and physically able and strong, they also shall ultimately receive blessings from our heavenly Father, and through the atonement of Jesus Christ, blessings that are withheld from them through no fault of their own shall not be withheld from them.

The Book of Mormon prophet has told us that the atonement is an infinite atonement. This means that there is no limit to its blessings and privileges, and these blessings and privileges will be extended to all who have not received them in this life. What these afflicted ones lose in this life will be made up to them in the life to come.

And so I am grateful with you, my brethren and sisters, for the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is not narrow in its application. It is unlimited in its privileges and blessings to all of God's children who will to do right when once they understand. For those who are mentally deficient, through no fault of their own, someday these pressures will be lifted. The healing power of the Almighty will come to their bodies, just as it will come to ours, and as it came to the body of the Savior; and their spirits, which are the offspring of God, will have the privilege of inhabiting bodies, their own bodies that will be healed and free from pressures and affliction so that there will be no limit to the possibilities of their spirits, their minds, and their souls.

Now these are blessings that are ours. They are a part of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and just as the gospel provides for those who will not have the privilege, and who have not had the privilege, of hearing it in times past, and who may not in the future, just as the gospel will be ultimately made possible for them through the great vicarious work, the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ, so through this infinite atonement will there come blessings to those who now are deficient and from whom are withheld blessings that you and I enjoy.

May the Lord help us to appreciate these things. To me this is one of the great blessings of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is one of the great revelations that have come down through the Prophet Joseph, as expressed by the prophets in the Book of Mormon. We do not understand the processes, as we do not understand the processes in many things, but that does not make the fact untrue. It is as real and true as are many of the things that are apparent to us today.

May the Lord help us to understand these things better than we have in the past, and may he give comfort to the hundreds and thousands of mothers whose hearts are bleeding because of the deficiencies in their children, deficiencies that have come through no fault of the parents or no fault of the child, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve, will be our next speaker.

ELDER ADAM S. BENNION

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS: Tomorrow I shall officially celebrate my first birthday. The only thing now I can tell you for sure is that one year does not make much difference in your feelings as you face this undertaking. But it has been a wonderful year—the most challenging, the most enriching, the most satisfying year in my life. I come to you with a new witness, blessed beyond any hope I ever had. I come to you with the assurance that leaves no doubt in the soul.

Each week end we have gone out to some stake to meet the people who constitute the membership of this Church. It is a singular thing that you are not in a stake thirty minutes but you feel as if you might have been born there—as if you had lived there all your life. The people of this Church are a wonderful people, and I express my gratitude for their thoughtfulness, their hospitality, their friendliness, and their kindness. I am grateful, too, that we are remembered in their prayers, and I want to assure them that they are remembered in ours.

I have been sitting here today thinking that this great audience in the kindness of soul that I know is yours, might this day and this night remember in your prayers three wonderful women, among the many, who may stand in need. These three I know about.

Brother Lee in the eloquence of his witness did not confide in you the sorrow that is in his heart. Sister Lee lies critically ill as the result of a fall and a broken hip. Knowing her as we do, I bid you good people to remember her in your prayers.

There stands alone today, the little woman who has gone around the world and stood at the side of Elder Matthew Cowley, one of the finest witnesses this Church has ever had. May God put it into your hearts to remember her.

The third woman is the wife of our beloved President. This heroic soul, who carried on through thirty-five thousand miles, with all kinds of traveling, day and night, and who never flinched, has given out of her devotion the reserve of strength which is the difference between full enjoyment of health and the struggle to bear up against the load that comes to the helpmate of one whose burden is so tremendous. And so, out of the love that I know you bear both of them, I am sure you will remember them, that there shall be built back into their bodies the strength that was spent on that, one of the greatest missionary trips ever taken.

It is good to be with you. This has been a wonderful conference. To come into this Tabernacle and listen to these testimonies is to know in your heart that this is God's work. I bear you that witness.

Last October, I made the suggestion that perhaps you could have an unusual Christmas in '53 if you read a chapter from the New Testament each day between that conference and the Christmas holidays. I want to thank those who have written in their letters, some of them signed by entire families. I am grateful to your children who caught the spirit of your suggestion. It has been wonderful to me—so much so that I am going on with that reading. I do not mean to replace it or substitute for it, but I resolved when I came into this calling that, among other things, I would read into two fields very fully:

1. The New Testament, and try to catch the spirit of Him in whose service we are engaged; and,

2. The history of our forefathers through whom we have received the blessings of the restoration of this glorious gospel.

And so in the spare time—that we do not have—I have been trying to find a few minutes regularly for Church history. I want to commend it to you.

And all the time I have been reading, I have come to two convictions, and they constitute the burden of what I want to say this afternoon. As you read the history of the pioneers, it becomes increasingly clear with every page that you read, that they endured adversity and hardship. They could stand persecution; they could bear up under abuse; they could recover from the infliction of all kinds of harmful hatreds. That record is clear. The question before our generation is: Can we and our children endure prosperity and ease?

I have not the time this afternoon to compare the two struggles. I sometimes wonder which is the harder. It sounds very much easier to slide along in complacency, with everything that we need. But such a course has never yet been the route followed by God's chosen people.

To go in upon any scene in Church history fully would take more time than I have, and yet I want you to pause with me all too briefly at five spots along the way. As you read the history, you become impressed first that God was moving his people west all the time; from New York to Salt Lake City, his hand was in their moving; and as he moved them, he seemed to be preparing them for that greater trek which was still ahead.

The second conviction that must attach to any such reading is that Satan at every turn in the road was trying to block the program. You remember, from the very beginning, when the Prophet went out to the Sacred Grove to pray. . . . Let me quote:

After I had retired to the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me, and finding myself alone, I kneeled down and began to offer up the desire of my heart to God. I had scarcely done so, when immediately I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such an astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction.

But, exerting all my powers to call upon

God to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment when I was ready to sink into despair and abandon myself to destruction—not to an imaginary ruin, but to the power of some actual being from the unseen world, who had such marvelous power as I had never before felt in any being—just at this moment of great alarm, I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me.

It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me I saw two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name and said, pointing to the other—"This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" (Joseph Smith's Own Story in Pearl of Great Price, 2:15-17.)

From that moment of assurance the Prophet Joseph knew in every fibre of his being that his destiny would be fulfilled in the earth.

Let us make a second pause just for a few minutes in Jackson County to catch the spirit of the expulsion of our people.

At the order of Lieutenant Governor Boggs the state militia marched into Jackson County and disarmed the Mormons. Concerning the brutalities that followed, B. H. Roberts writes: "The Colonels in command—Pitcher and Lucas—were known as the bitter enemies of the Saints. . . . From such a militia, officered by such men as Pitcher and Lucas, the Saints could hope for no protection. . . . The agreement made by Colonel Pitcher, to disarm the mob was never executed; but as soon as the brethren had surrendered their arms, bands of armed men were turned loose upon them. . . . The men who had made up the rank and file of the militia on the 5th of November, the next day were riding over the country in armed gangs threatening men, women, and children with violence, searching for arms, and brutally tying up and whipping some of the men, and shooting at others. The leaders of these ruffians were some of the prominent men of the county; Colonel Pitcher and Lieutenant Governor Boggs being among the number. The Priests in the county, it seems, were determined not to be outdone by the politicians, for the Reverend Isaac McCoy and other preachers of the gospel were seen leading armed bands of marauders from place to place; and were the main inspirers of cowardly assaults on the defenseless."

Throughout the first two weeks of November, 1833, men, women, and children fled in confusion from their burning homes. Lyman Wight gave testimony in court that "one company of one hundred and ninety—all women and children, except three decrepit old men—were driven thirty miles across a burnt prairie. The ground was thinly crusted with sleet, and the trails of these exiles were easily followed by the blood which flowed from their lacerated feet."

Before the Jacksonites ceased their wholesale depredations, they had killed Andrew Barber and wounded several other brethren; had burned 203 homes and one flour mill; had driven the owners—twelve hundred in number—northward to the bleak bluffs of the Missouri River, where the refugees in wind and rain made camp, awaiting their turn to ferry the river barrier into Clay County, seeking needed protection and shelter.

Elder Parley P. Pratt leaves this vivid picture of the exiles along the Missouri River: "The shore began to be lined on both sides of the ferry with men, women, and children; goods, wagons, boxes, provisions, etc., while the ferry was constantly employed; and when night closed upon us the cottonwood bottom had much the appearance of a camp meeting. Hundreds of people were seen in every direction, some in tents and some in the open air around their fires, while the rain descended in torrents. Husbands were inquiring for their wives; wives for their husbands; parents for children and children for parents. Some had the good fortune to escape with their families, household goods, and some provisions; while others knew not the fate of their friends, and had lost all their goods. The scene was indescribable and, I am sure, would have melted the hearts of any people on the earth, except our blind oppressors." (Joseph Smith, History of the Church, 1:426-440; B. H. Roberts, Missouri Persecutions, pp. 105-107.)

Did we have the time this afternoon, I should ask you to go into Carthage Jail with me, where I have stood, stirred by the bloodstains on the floor, to ponder the deaths of the Prophet Joseph and his brother, Hyrum; the inspired friendship and faith and trust of Willard Richards and John Taylor. But tarry with me just a minute and try to imagine the impact of the martyrdom:

"He has jumped the window," shouted the rabble, and they rushed pellmell downstairs. Willard Richards, hurrying to the window, looked down upon the Prophet, surrounded by frenzied men. He then started for the stairway, but a distressed call from John Taylor stopped him, "Take me." Happy that John was not dead, Willard dragged him from under the bed and into another room. While hiding him under an old mattress, he admonished gravely: "If your wounds are not fatal, I want you to live to tell the story." Brother Richards expected to be shot momentarily.

The excited mob, believing that they had killed all four of the prisoners and hearing a shout, "The Mormons are coming," fled from Carthage in terror, followed by most of the frantic citizens. It was this false cry, no doubt, that saved the lives of Willard Richards and John Taylor.

To report the terrible disaster and to obtain aid George D. Grant and David Bettisworth hurried on horseback toward Nauvoo. Within three miles of the city they were stopped by Governor Ford and his staff, who carried them back to Carthage. After warning the remaining citizens of the town that the Mormons would be coming, he and his men galloped off at midnight for Warsaw. He later testified that he fully expected that Carthage would be laid in ashes before morning.

On the morning after the martyrdom, Willard Richards and a few friends, having dressed as best they could the bleeding wounds of Elder Taylor at the Hamilton House, put the bodies of Joseph and Hyrum in two boxes, which they placed on two borrowed wagons and started for Nauvoo, the "City of Joseph."

Describing the sorrowful scene of that tragic day, Dr. B. W. Richmond, a non-Mormon reports that the two wagons were met near the temple grounds by a "vast concourse of citizens. The officials formed around the bodies, while the masses silently opened to give them way, and as the mournful procession moved on, the women broke out in lamentations at the sight of the two rude boxes in the wagons, covered with Indian blankets. The weeping was communicated to the crowd, and spread along the vast waves of humanity extending from the Temple to the residence of the Prophet.

The groans and sobs and shrieks grew deeper, and louder, till the sound resembled the roar of a mighty tempest, or the low, deep roar of the distant tornado." (D. H. C., VII:102-112; Andrew Jensen, Historical Record, pp. 572-576; B. H. Roberts, Rise and Fall of Nauvoo, pp. 330, 312, 404-456.)

Pause four is a brief glimpse at the exodus across Iowa, February 1846:

On February 22, 1846 a raging blizzard, leaving twelve inches of snow, struck the Mormon pioneers huddled in their temporary camp at Sugar Creek, Iowa. Following this terrible storm, the weather turned frigid, "12 below Zero," even sealing the great Mississippi River from shore to shore. On one of these nights nine babies came into camp, born under almost every variety of frontier camp life imaginable. Eliza R. Snow tells of one birth that occurred in a rude improvised shelter, the sides of which were formed of blankets fastened to poles stuck in the ground. The owner of the hut had peeled bark from cottonwood trees and had made a sort of a roof covering through which the water leaked, but helpful sisters held pans over the newborn child and its mother.

It was during these adverse conditions that an unknown camp poet penned this prayer:

"God pity the exiles, when storms come down—

When snow-laden clouds hang low on the ground,

When the chill blast of winter, with frost on its breath

Sweeps through the tents like the angel of death!

When the sharp cry of child-birth is heard on the air,

And the voice of the father breaks down in his prayer,

As he pleads with Jehovah, his loved ones to spare!" (Edward W. Tullidge, The Women of Mormonism, pp. 307-309; Memoirs of John R. Young, Utah Pioneer, 1847, p. 14.)

And for pause five, let us live all too briefly with the handcart companies of October 1856:

Contrary to the anticipation of these poorly clad people, the fall and early winter of 1856 were unusually stormy and merciless. A winter blizzard broke upon Willie's Company at the Sweetwater, and it struck

Martin's group that was struggling across the alkaline waste lands above the last crossing of the Platte.

The frigid, two-day storm, covering the country with more than a foot of snow, smashed tents and wagon covers. Ten, twelve, and sometimes as many as fifteen deaths came in a day. Shallow graves were scraped out. At night packs of marauding wolves howled or fought at the burial places. From all appearances these two companies were doomed to perish on the eastern slopes of the Rockies, three hundred miles from Zion.

When the storm subsided, the companies made a fresh start, but moved only a few miles a day. It was under these trying conditions that two horsemen, riding ahead of the rescue parties from Salt Lake City, met Willie's Company October 28, 1856 on the Sweetwater River.

John Chislett, a member of Willie's Company, expressing his overwhelming joy, exclaimed:

"More welcome messengers never came from the courts of glory than these two young men were to us. They lost no time, after encouraging us all they could to press forward, but sped further to convey their glad news to Edward Martin, the fifth handcart company, who had left Florence about two weeks after us, and who it was feared were even worse off than we were. As they went from our view, many a hearty 'God bless you,' followed them."

Dan W. Jones, one of the rescuing party, gives a distressing picture of Martin's company: "The train was strung out for three or four miles. There were old men pulling and tugging at their carts, and children, six and eight years of age, struggling through the snow and mud. As night came on the mud and snow froze to their clothing."

After Martin's Company had lost almost one fourth of its number in "Martin's Ravine," it moved forward to the Sweetwater River—a hundred feet wide, waist deep, and filled with floating ice. At the sight of this barrier, many Saints sank by their carts. In this helpless condition they were found by three sturdy young men who had pushed ahead of the supply wagons. These brawny rescuers heroically waded the river and began carrying the sick and feeble across. This human fording continued back and forth, trip after trip through those chilling waters until every person and his cart had been safely landed upon the opposite shore.

Third Day

President Young, upon learning of this valorous service, wept freely. And while reporting it to the Saints in General Conference, predicted: "That act alone will insure David P. Kimball, George W. Grant, and C. Allen Huntington an everlasting salvation in the Celestial Kingdom of God, worlds without end."

With the coming of 104 relief outfits from Salt Lake City, the emigrants abandoned their carts. Those who were unable to walk were loaded into the wagons. Death from freezing and exposure, nevertheless, continued daily. Before the last survivors arrived in Salt Lake City, Sunday, November 30, 222 of these valiant pioneers had found graves by the roadside. (Joseph Fielding Smith, Essentials in Church History, p. 489; Levi Edgar Young, Founding of Utah, p. 148; Solomon F. Kimball, Life of David P. Kimball, p. 9; Roberts, Comprehensive History, IV:100-107.)

Under the spirit of achievements like these, it is inspiring to hear these fine young people of Brigham Young University put their hearts, as well as their voices, into "Come, Come, Ye Saints."

How fitting it is to be able to turn to that classic volume of President Clark's To Them of the Last Wagon and The Pioneers for a tribute and a challenge.

One thing in common all these peoples had in their search for freedom to worship God—a schooling in hardship, persecution, sacrifice, that burned out from their souls the dross, leaving in them only the pure gold of loftiest character and faith, fully tried, tested, refined. God has never worked out his purposes through the pampered victims of ease and luxury and riotous living. Always He has used to meet the great crises in His work, those in whom hardship, privation, and persecution had built characters and wills of iron. God shapes His servants in the forge of adversity; He does not fashion them in the hot house of ease and luxury. (The Pioneers, p. 41.)

In living our lives let us never forget that the deeds of our fathers and mothers are theirs, not ours; that their works cannot be counted to our glory; that we can claim no excellence and no place, because of what they did; that we must rise by our own labor, and that labor failing we shall fall. We may claim no honor, no reward, no respect, nor special position or recognition, no credit because of what our fathers were or what they wrought. We stand upon our own feet in our own shoes. There is no aristocracy of birth in this Church; it belongs equally to the highest and the lowliest. For as Peter said to Cornelius, the Roman centurion, seeking him: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons:

"But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." (Acts 10:34-35.) (To Them of the Last Wagon, p. 28.)

What of us? Can we keep and preserve what they wrought? Shall we pass on to our children the heritage they left us, or shall we lightly fritter it away? Have we their faith, their bravery, their courage; could we endure their hardships and sufferings, make their sacrifices, bear up under their trials, their sorrows, their tragedies, believe the simple things they knew were true, have the simple faith that worked miracles for them, follow, and not falter or fall by the wayside, where our leaders advance, face the slander and the scorn of an unpopular belief? Can we do the thousands of little and big things that made them the heroic builders of a great Church, a great commonwealth? (The Pioneers, p. 45.)

Confident, as I am, that the blood of the pioneers still flows in the veins of their grandchildren and great-grandchildren, I give you in witness the young men and women of this chorus. I have already caught of the spirit of these youths at their university. I give it as my judgment, that called upon to face Carthage, or the trek across the continent, they would heroically meet both challenges. I honor this new generation.

On the fifteenth of March I was in Los Angeles. There had gathered there some 1600 fine young people, and the next night we had a thousand at San Diego. Then it was that I learned that 1700 grand young people, every morning of the school week, go from three to twenty-three miles to attend a seminary class that meets at seven o'clock in the morning, for which work they get no high school credit. The young girl, Janie Kimball, who pinned an honorary seminary pin on me, was given that privilege because her father had driven her fifteen miles every morning and then had driven her back to her high school, and she had not missed a class all year. She reported to me they might have to miss high school, but they never would miss the class where they learned the word of the Lord.

To you parents, as you dream dreams for the children you cherish, may I offer these suggestions:

1. Make sure that your children know our pioneer story. Let it not be said in any Latter-day Saint home that the children grow up in ignorance of the achievements of their forebears. Both you and they will stir to the materials in the books already quoted in this address and in such other publications as:

Family Journals and Diaries

Major Howard Egan, Pioneering the West
Autobiography, Parley P. Pratt

William Clayton's Journal

Leaves from My Journal—Wilford Woodruff
The L.D.S. Church, Its Doctrines and Achievements, to be published—by Carter
E. Grant.

2. Give them responsibility; let them do some work. It is an ungracious thing for the lovely daughter who is studying the piano to be led to believe that she cannot do any work which might interfere with the softness of her fingers. God bless her. Her hands will take care of themselves. Nature will do that, if she will do a little something to take the bend out of the back of the mother who has been caring for her these many years. Give your children tasks to do. The Pioneers were never made on an easy trail. They gloried in hardship, and the parent who would spare his child in the interest of kindness, does the unkindest thing possible to a child when he saves him from work and responsibility.

3. Be careful about what your children do at night—what their program is, who their companions are—and have them in at a reasonable hour. Try to see that they go with young men and women who inspire them to higher ideals, rather than with those who make the rounds at glittering night spots, rich in temptation and low in appeal.

The Pioneers survived hardship and adversity. With careful training our children will endure prosperity and ease and will grow up in the spirit of this chorus today to be an everlasting honor and credit, not only to themselves, to their families, and to the Church, but to their Father in heaven. May they do so, I pray humbly, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve, has just spoken to us.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses have furnished the music this afternoon and this morning. We commend this group of young people for the service they have rendered this day. We would like to say to them that the greatest joy that comes to the human heart is found in the happiness that we give to others and in the service that we render our fellow men. We hope, young folks, that the happiness that you have awakened in the hearts of thousands this day will come back into your own, and God bless you in all the service that will be offered to you to render in your future lives. "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." You will find your joy in making others happy. God bless you.

These Choruses will sing, "The Hallelujah Chorus," under the direction of Elder Crawford Gates.

The benediction will be offered by Elder J. Orval Ellsworth, formerly President of the Central States Mission, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

A meeting devoted to the work of the stake and foreign missions will be held in the Tabernacle this evening at 7:00 o'clock. Mission Presidents in attendance at the General Conference, all stake mission presidents, and stake missionaries, and the presidencies of stakes are requested to attend this meeting. An invitation is extended, also, to members of High Councils, bishoprics, presidents of seventies' quorums, and general boards of auxiliary organizations.

To the members of the choirs we should like to say that there will be a reception for you and others in the Church School System, immediately after this meeting in the Lafayette Ballroom in the Hotel Utah in honor of the Administrators of the unified Church School System, including the Administrators of the Brigham Young University, Ricks College, L.D.S. Business College, McCune School of Music, and the Juarez Stake Academy, and also the Directors of all Latter-day Saint Institutes of Religion. Parents and students are also invited.

Singing, "Hallelujah Chorus," and after the benediction, this Conference will be adjourned until tomorrow morning.

FOURTH DAY MORNING MEETING

The sixth session of the Conference was held in the Tabernacle at 10 o'clock a.m., Tuesday, April 6.

The choral music for this session of the conference was furnished by the Singing Mothers, Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen, conducting and Frank W. Asper at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

We are assembled in the great Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City in the sixth session of the One hundred Twenty-fourth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

As heretofore announced, these services will be broadcast to the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall over a public address system and by television. They will also be televised over KSL-TV Channel 5, and by arrangement through KSL over twelve radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Arizona and Wyoming, the name of each of which was just announced during the pause.

Because of some who may be listening in, we desire again to express our appreciation to these various radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts. Cards and telegrams are still coming in expressing appreciation of those who listened in Sunday over the television in the Northwest and California.

You are happy, I am sure, to recognize our Singing Mothers, who will furnish the music for this session and this afternoon, Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting and Brother Frank W. Asper at the organ. We shall begin this session by the Relief Society Singing Mothers singing, "O Lord Most Holy." The invocation will be offered by Elder John B. Matheson, formerly President of the East Central States Mission.

The opening selection was by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, "O Lord Most Holy."

Elder John B. Matheson, formerly president of the East Central States Mission, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

"O Savior of the World" will now be sung by the Relief Society Singing Mothers. Following the song, we will hear from Elder Kimball of the Council of the Twelve.

---

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I HIS HAS been a glorious conference. It pleases me greatly to notice that at each succeeding conference there is a larger sprinkling of Japanese and Chinese brothers and sisters; of Hawaiians and other islanders; of Indians, Mexicans, Spanish-Americans and others. It makes me very happy indeed, and I wish to address my remarks this morning in behalf of those minorities.

Recently there came to my desk a letter, anonymously written. Generally the wastebasket receives all such messages, written by people who have not the courage to sign their statements. But this time I saved it. It reads in part as follows:

I never dreamed I would live to see the day when the Church would invite an Indian buck to talk in the Salt Lake Tabernacle—an Indian buck appointed a bishop—an Indian squaw to talk in the Ogden Tabernacle—Indians to go through the Salt Lake Temple—

The sacred places desecrated by the invasion of everything that is forced on the white race. . . .

This letter now goes into the fire also, but it gives me the theme for the words I wish to say today.

If Mrs. Anonymous were the only one who felt that way! However, from many places and different directions I hear intolerant expressions. While there is an ever-increasing number of people who are kind and willing to accept the minority groups as they come into the Church, there are still many who speak in disparaging terms, who priestlike and Levite-like pass by on the other side of the street.

It would be a delightful step forward if our newspapers and periodicals and our writers and speakers would discontinue the term buck and squaw and substitute "Indian men and women" or "Lamanite brethren and sisters."

Their ancestors and ancient prophets foresaw this day and knew that this people would be reviled and disparaged.

In the letter quoted, there is the suggestion of a superior race! From the dawn of history we have seen so-called superior races go down from the heights to the depths in a long parade of exits. Among them were the Assyrians, the Egyptians, the Babylonians, the Persians, the Greeks, and the Romans. They, with more modern nations, have been defeated in battle, humiliated and crushed in economic life. Is the implication of Mrs. Anonymous justified that the white race or the American people is superior? John the Baptist, in forceful terms, rebuked a similar self-styled superior group:

O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance:

And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. (Matt. 3:7-9.)

The Lord would have eliminated bigotry and class distinction. He talked to the Samaritan woman at the well, healed the centurion's kin, and blessed the child of the Canaanitish woman. And though he personally came to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel" and sent his Apostles first to them rather than to the Samaritans and other Gentiles, yet he later sent Paul to bring the gospel to the Gentiles and revealed to Peter that the gospel was for all. The prejudices were deep-rooted in Peter, and it took a vision from heaven to help him to cast off his bias. The voice had commanded: "Rise, Peter; kill, and eat," when the vessel descended from the heaven containing all manner of beasts, reptiles and fowls. Punctilious Peter expressed his life-long prejudices and habits in saying, "Not so,

Tuesday, April 6

Fourth Day

Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean." Then the heavenly voice made clear that the program was for all. "What God hath cleansed," it said, "that call not thou common." Peter's long-sustained prejudices gave way finally under the power of the thrice repeated command. When the devout Gentile Cornelius immediately thereafter appealed to him for the gospel, the full meaning of the vision burst upon Peter and he exclaimed, "God hath shewed me that I should not call any man common or unclean." (See Acts 10:11-28.)

And when those of the circumcised complained, Peter, now very sure, rehearsed the whole story and concluded with these memorable words:

Men and brethren, ye know that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.

And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us;

And put no difference between us and them. (Ibid., 15:7-9.)

"What was I that I could withstand God," he said in defense.

The gospel had been brought to the Jew or Israel, and now was to be taken to the Gentile. It was for all.

The Savior finally instructed his Apostles:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. (Matt. 28:19.)

And through the Prophet Nephi he

... inviteth them all to come unto him ... and he remembereth the heathen; and all are alike unto God, both Jew and Gentile. (2 Nephi 26:33.)

Then see how the Lord preserved the Bible through the dark ages and preserved the Book of Mormon gold plates through the same barren period so that both of these holy scriptures might be brought by the Gentiles back to Israel and fulfil the saying that "the first shall be last and the last shall be first." (See Matt 19:30.)

And now, Mrs. Anonymous, when the Lord has made of all flesh equal; when he has accepted both the Gentiles and Israel; when he finds no difference between them, who are we to find a difference and to exclude from the Church and its activities and blessings the lowly Indian? Have you read the scriptures, ancient or modern? Have you felt the magnanimity of the Savior, his kindness, his mercy, his love?

If the Lord were to acknowledge a superior race, would it not be Israel, the very people whom you would spurn and deprive? Do you carry in your veins as pure Israelitish blood as those whom you criticize? Do you find any scriptures, my critic, which would show that the Christ would exclude the Lamanite Israelites from the waters of baptism, from the priesthood, from the pulpit, or from the temple? Did not the Lord remove the Amalekites, Midianites, Canaanites to make place for the chosen Israel, and when centuries later he saw the impending destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, and when it was imminent that Judah and Israel were to be captured and exiled, did not the Lord send a righteous few, under Lehi, to find and colonize this American land, this choicest land under heaven? Did he not lead and teach and punish and forgive this same people through a thousand hectic years of varied experience and did he not reiterate frequently his willingness to forgive and his eagerness to bless this very people? Did not the Lord show special and preferred interest in his Israel? Did he not reserve for them alone his personal visits and ministrations? And did he not himself make a personal visit of many days to his Lehite people and say to them:

Ye are my disciples. . . .

And behold, this is the land of your inheritance; and the Father hath given it unto you.

And they [the Jews] understood me not that I said they [the Lehtes] shall hear my voice; and they understood me not that the Gentiles should not at any time hear my voice—that I should not manifest myself unto them save it were by the Holy Ghost.

But behold, ye have both heard my voice, and seen me; and ye are my sheep, and ye are numbered among those whom the Father hath given me. (3 Nephi 15:12-13, 23-24.)

Would those who scorn the Indian and deprive him of the blessings remember how the Lord loves his Lamanites and how he told his first leaders in this dispensation to

... journey among the Lamanites.

And it shall be given thee ... what thou shalt do. (D. & C. 28:14-15.)

Remember how he authorized them to build up his Church "among the Lamanites" (ibid., 30:6) and from the later Prophet, John Taylor, who said: "And now we must instruct them further and organize them into churches with proper presidencies, attach them to our stakes and organizations." (The Gospel Kingdom, p. 247.)

In the days immediately preceding the coming of the Lord, even the Lamanite Prophet Samuel felt the sting and smart of the caustic discriminations when he said:

And now, because I am a Lamanite, and have spoken unto you the words which the Lord commanded me, and because it was hard against you, ye are angry with me and do seek to destroy me, and have cast me out from among you. (Helaman 14:10.)

If Mrs. Anonymous would exclude the Indian from the temple, how could she justify the Lord's provision that they would assist in the building of the New Jerusalem with its temple?

O intolerance, thou art an ugly creature! What crimes have been committed under thy influence, what injustices under thy Satanic spell!

Charlotte Gilman wrote: "I ran into a prejudice that quite cut off my view." (From Stanza I of "An Obstacle.")

It was to a hypocritical and intolerant group to whom the Lord gave his classic parable,

... unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others:

Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican.

The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican.

I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess.

And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God, be merciful to me a sinner.

I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. (Luke 18:9-14.)

If it be so wrong for fraternization and brotherhood with minority groups and their filling Church positions and pews and pulpits of the Lord's Church, why did the Apostle Peter maintain so positively: "[God] ... put no difference between us and them." (Acts 15:8-9.)

And, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common." (ibid., 11:9.)

Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons:

But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. (ibid., 10:34-35.)

Did not the Lord know that in these times there would be many duplicates of Mr. and Mrs. Anonymous who might need the warning which he gave through his Prophet Moroni: "... Who will despise the works of the Lord? Who will despise the children of Christ? Behold, all ye who are despisers of the works of the Lord." (Mormon 9:26.)

The Prophet Mormon wrote:

Yea, wo unto him that shall deny the revelations of the Lord. ...

Yea, and ye need not any longer hiss, nor spurn, nor make game of the Jews, nor any of the remnant of the House of Israel; for behold, the Lord remembereth his covenant unto them ... according to that which he hath sworn. (3 Nephi 29:6, 8.)

Tuesday, April 6

Fourth Day

It is most evident that all of the many prejudiced ones fail to catch the spirit of the gospel and the teachings of the Christ as they hiss and spurn and scoff and criticize. The Lord said in Matthew:

Judge not, that ye be not judged.

For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: . . .

And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye. (Matt. 7:1-5.)

And again, the Lord said through Paul:

Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; . . .

And thinkest thou this, O man . . . that thou shalt escape the judgment of God? (Roman 2:1, 3.)

And again, through Moroni:

For behold, the same that judgeth rashly shall be judged rashly again; . . . he that smiteth shall be smitten again, of the Lord. (Mormon 8:19.)

I remember that the Lord was long-suffering with ancient Israel. For a long time he endured their pettiness, listened to their eternal complaining, revolted at their filthiness, groaned at their idolatries and their adulteries, and wept at their faithlessness; and yet finally forgave them and led the rising generation of them into the promised land. They had been the victims of four centuries of destructive background of servitude but consistent now with their continued faithfulness, every door was opened to them toward immortality and eternal life.

Here he has the Indian or Lamanite, with a background of twenty-five centuries of superstition, degradation, idolatry, and indolence. He has loathed their wickedness, chastised them, brought the Gentiles to them for nursing fathers and mothers, and (it would seem) has finally forgiven them. Their sufferings have been sore, their humiliation complete, their punishment severe and long, their heartaches many, and their opportunities reduced. Has he not now forgiven them and accepted them? Can we not now forgive and accept them? Ancient Israel was given forty years. Can we not allow at least forty years of patient and intensive proselyting and organizing among modern Israel before we judge too harshly?

What a monster is prejudice! It means pre-judging. How many of us are guilty of it? Often we think ourselves free of its destructive force, but we need only to test ourselves. Our expressions, our voice tones, our movements, our thoughts betray us. We are often so willing that others make the contacts, do the proselyting, have the associations. Until we project ourselves into the very situation, we little realize our bias and our prejudice.

Why will we, the prospered, the blessed, hiss? When, oh, when, will we cease to spurn? When will we who think we are free of bias, purge from our souls the sometimes unconscious prejudice we possess? When will we end our making game of these wanderers? When will we cease throwing our pennies disdainfully to them at the gate?

Mr. and Mrs. Anonymous: I present to you a people who, according to prophecies, have been scattered and driven, defrauded and deprived, who are a "branch of the tree of Israel—lost from its body—wanderers in a strange land"—their own land. I give you nations who have gone through the deep waters of the rivers of sorrow and anguish and pain; a people who have had visited upon their heads the sins of their fathers not unto the third and fourth generation but through a hundred generations. I bring to you a multitude who have asked for bread and have received a stone and who have asked for fish and have been given a serpent. (See 3 Nephi 14:9-10.)

dain, your despicable contempt, your supercilious scorn, your turned-up nose, your scathing snobbery, your arrogant scoffing, nor your cold, calculating tolerance. It is a people who, unable to raise themselves by their own bootstraps, call for assistance from those who can push and lift and open doors. It is a people who pray for mercy, ask forgiveness, beg for membership in the kingdom with its opportunities to learn and do. It is a good folk who ask for fraternity, a handclasp of friendship, a word of encouragement; it is a group of nations who cry for warm acceptance and sincere brotherhood. I give you a chosen race, an affectionate and warm-hearted people, a responsive but timid and frightened folk, a simple group with childlike faith. I point you to a people in whose veins flows the blood of prophets and martyrs; a people who have intelligence and capacity to climb to former heights but who need the vision and the opportunity and the assistance of the nursing parents.

These people can rise to the loftiness of their fathers when opportunity has knocked at their door a few generations. If we fully help them, they can eventually soar to greatness. The ungerminated seeds are waiting for the rains of kindness and opportunity; the sunshine of gospel truth; the cultivation through the Church program of training and activity, and the seeds will come to life, and the harvest will be fabulous, for the Lord has promised it repeatedly.

O ye, who hiss and spurn, despise and scoff, who condemn and reject, and who in your haughty pride place yourselves above and superior to these Nephite-Lamanites: I pray you to not despise them until you are able to equal their faraway folk who had such faith and fortitude and strength—until you have that faith to burn at the stake with the Prophet Abinadi. It is possible that the prophet's children may be among us. Some of them could be now called Lagunas or Shoshones.

I beg of you, do not disparage the Lamanite-Nephites unless you, too, have the devoutness and strength to abandon public office to do missionary work among a despised people and this without compensation, as did the four sons of Mosiah; until you too can walk away from the ease and luxury and the emoluments and power of kingship to hunger and thirst, to be persecuted, imprisoned, and beaten for fourteen years of proselyting endeavor as did their people, Ammon and his brothers, and as did the great Nephi who gave up the judgeship to proselyte. Some of their descendants also could be among us. Their seed could be called Samoans or Maoris.

I ask you: Do not scoff and ignore these Nephite-Lamanites unless you can equal their forebears in greatness and until you can kneel with those thousands of Ammonite Saints in the sand on the field of battle while they sang songs of praise as their very lives were being snuffed out by their enemies. Could you look heavenward, smiling and singing, while the bloodthirsty demons slashed your body with sword and scimitar? Perhaps the children of the Ammonites are with us. They could be called Zunis or Hopis.

Do not prate your power of speech or your fearlessness unless you too could stand with the Prophet Samuel on the city wall, dodging stones and spears and arrows while trying to preach the gospel of salvation. The very descendants of this great prophet are with us. They may be Navajos or Cherokees.

I ask you who sneer: Are you better mothers than those of the Ammonites? Those Lamanite women trained their sons in faith to the extent that they fought many battles and came home clean, full of faith. Are you training your sons as did they? Do your sons resist evil, grow to greatness, receive manifestations from the Lord? Do your sons praise your names and say, "We knew our mothers knew it. We are blessed of the Lord because we live his commandments as our mothers taught us." The posterity of these unparalleled mothers and these faithful sons may be among us and may be called Mayas or Pimas.

Fourth Day

I urge you: Do not mock in derision until and unless you, too, have children loved and fondled by the Lord of creation, children who are encircled about with fire and ministered unto by angels—children who prophesy unutterable things. Their children could be the Piutes or Mohicans among us.

Do not condemn and make game of these good Lamanite-Nephites until you have produced a superior people who compare with their ancestors who lived for nearly three centuries in peace and righteousness. Has our own nation ever exceeded a quarter century without war and commotion?

Let us not spurn these Nephite-Lamanites until we are assured that we, too, have the love of the Savior as did their people when the Lord stood in their midst and ordained them with his own hands, blessed them with his own voice, forgave them with his own great heart, broke the bread, poured the wine, and gave the sacrament himself to these upright folk; until we shall have the privilege of feeling the prints of the nails in his hands and feet, and the spear wound in his side.

And in these living descendants are all the seeds of faith and growth and development, of honor and integrity and greatness. They wait but for opportunity, encouragement, and brotherliness; and these will be redeemed, will rise and will become a blessed people. God has said it.

I love the Lamanites, the Indians, and all their cousins. I expect to see them rise and fulfil their destiny. I know that the prophecies concerning them will all be fulfilled.

May God bless the Lamanite-Nephite peoples, stir their hearts; bless the missionaries that are sent unto them; and help us, their nursing parents. And may God speed the day of their total deliverance. This I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Our next speaker will be Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS: I am very happy about the appointment of Elder George Q. Morris as a member of the Council of the Twelve. It has been a great joy and certainly a great pleasure for me to have been closely associated with him during the past few years. He is a man of faith, a man of splendid leadership, who is solid and sound in the doctrines of the Church, and who will be of inestimable help to the brethren who devise the policy of this great Church of which we are members.

God bless him in this great responsibility and give him the strength to do the work which will be required at his hands.

I have been abundantly blessed, as you have, by the spiritual uplift which has come to the Latter-day Saints during this conference. This uplift has emanated from the singing of the various choirs, from the fervent testimonies of the Lord's servants who have spoken, through the timely admonitions, and through the clarifying demonstrations of activities particularly as they have pertained to the missionary work of the Church. I believe that the paramount obligation resting upon the Church today is to proclaim the divine mission of Jesus Christ. His Church, while standing practically alone amongst all the Christian churches, is boldly declaring that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of mankind.

We must not fail in this very definite responsibility. There are many among the religious teachers of the world who are making compromises in this respect. It is not long since Colonel Ingersoll, the gifted agnostic, said, "For the man Jesus I have the highest admiration. I gladly pay to him the homage of my tears. But for Jesus as the Son of God, I will have nothing to do with him." I regret to say that many of the modern religious teachers have adopted the view expressed by this well-known unbeliever. Not long since I read again the Book of Mormon and found that on almost every page Jesus is declared to be the Son of God and the Redeemer and Savior of the world. This may also be said of the revelations given to the Church through the Prophet Joseph Smith as recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants.

What is there left, my brethren and sisters, if you eliminate Jesus as the Son of God? It is the foundation of our faith. Surely, no Church that is instrumental in destroying Christ's divinity has any right to be called a Christian church.

A few years ago, H. G. Wells was invited to write down the names of six men who stood, as it were, on the corners of history. He did not hesitate in writing the first name, which was Jesus of Nazareth, and then as if he wanted to apologize, he quickly remarked, "I am not a Christian. I am a writer of history," implying no doubt, that he had not accepted the deityship of Jesus Christ.

So the mission is resting upon you and me and the missionaries of the Church to proclaim in our messages that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and that he did in reality rise from the dead and appeared to his friends and disciples, and proved beyond any question of a doubt, that death is not the end, and that we are expected to obey his commandments which he has given through holy men, called prophets.

May we be qualified and anxious to discharge this important responsibility, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, the Lord. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Carl W. Buehner, of the Presiding Bishopric, will be our next speaker. He to whom we have just listened, is Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve.

Bishop Buehner will be followed by Marion D. Hanks, of the First Council of Seventy.

BISHOP CARL W. BUEHNER

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

Y DEAR brethren and sisters: Each general conference seems to be more inspiring than the last, and this is certainly no exception, from the outstanding priesthood meeting last Saturday evening to and including each session to this very moment.

I was grateful to raise my hand this morning and sustain these great men who comprise the leadership of the Church. I welcome with all my heart Elder George Q. Morris, whom I have learned to love over the years, as the new member of the Council of the Twelve. I also wish to extend my support and sincere best wishes to Elder Sterling W. Sill whom I have also known for many years and who I am sure will be a great strength to the Church.

My message this morning has to do with overweight and underweight. We are a great people to check up on each other. We have our plans, our schedules, our programs, and our organizations. I should like to suggest this morning that it might be a good idea to check up a little on ourselves. I know the first look I have of myself as I peek in the mirror early in the morning is really quite frightening, and then when I realize what the next fifteen or twenty minutes can do with the aid of a few common implements we find in the bathroom, such as a comb and brush (for those who need it), a razor, washcloth, toothbrush, etc., for the men; and for the sisters, some cold cream, a little rouge, face powder, and lipstick, the transformation brings confidence and courage to face the problems of another day. Then when you arrive at work, and someone greets you by saying, "Good morning, you look fine," you are so enthusiastic that you can conquer anything that comes your way. The day seems cheerful and bright.

I appreciate the fact that some of us have physical difficulties that require a doctor's check-up, and usually after a good physical check-up, we are informed that we have high blood pressure and that we are overweight and should reduce. This could easily be one of my difficulties. I have been supporting Brother Benson in his great plan of disposing of government surpluses and assisting him every way possible in that respect. I am also thoroughly converted to the welfare program in which we are admonished to put away a year's supply. No one has ever indicated that we should carry around a half a year of it and put the other half year's supply in the basement; but many of us do it just that way. I am sure our doctor would tell us that it is well to be converted to these great programs but that we would be healthier and much better off if we would put the full year's supply in the basement and get our blood pressure down.

Along with these physical habits and check-ups, I would like to suggest that we have a little spiritual check-up, and ask ourselves a few simple questions. I am appreciating, too, a great deal more the value of visual aids as we have observed them during this conference, and would like to suggest that we make a little chart, one that can be marked, and see just how good we are. In filling in such a chart, we might find some blank spaces. In other words, we might find that we are spiritually a little underweight. We might even be lightweight. Some of us might even be featherweights. A look at such a chart will indicate in some degree our spiritual activity and give us a check-up in that respect. May I suggest that we ask ourselves some of these questions:

Do I sustain the General Authorities of the Church?

Do I go to sacrament meeting and renew my covenants with my heavenly Father?

Do I have family prayer in my home?

Do I have THE IMPROVEMENT ERA in my home?

Do I study the gospel for fifteen minutes each day?

Do I have home evening?

Do I pay my ward maintenance?

Do I offer assistance to my bishop?
Do I do something to make my home happier?

Am I a good neighbor?

Do I fast each month and pay my fast offering to the bishop?

Do I contribute to the stake and ward building program?

Do I expose my neighbor to the gospel?

Do I pay my debts and live within my means?

Am I honest with the Lord in the payment of my tithes, and do I go to tithing settlement?

Do I do my ward teaching?

Do I participate in the welfare program?

Am I doing my research and temple work?

Am I taking advantage of the auxiliaries: the Relief Society, the Mutual, Sunday School, and Primary?

We might add to this list many other questions. If we could transfer some of the surplus weight we carry around in our physical bodies and add that weight to our spiritual lives (and I do not think we will ever become overweight in this respect), we will increase our weight and become better able to fulfil the responsibilities and obligations that the Lord expects of us and to carry out the counsel of the leadership of the Church.

We are all interested in security. I tell you, brethren and sisters, that no greater security can come to any member of the Church than to keep the commandments of our heavenly Father, especially those of tithing, fast offering, and aiding the welfare program. When I think of the great blessings promised to the membership of the Church from the payment of an honest tithing, I feel there is not a member of the Church who can afford not to pay his tithing. Likewise, great blessings come from fasting and prayer.

I remember not long ago being in a stake where I had given a little talk on the value of fasting and paying fast offerings. Near the end of the meeting, one of the brethren said, "Brother Buehner, I believe all you have said but would like to ask this question: What if after the fasting period is over you are so hungry that you don't only eat the meal you are entitled to but you literally eat the two meals you fasted?" I could not help feeling that this is very typical of us human beings. We are not going to give away anything that we can reclaim. I made these observations at the time. First, my advice would be that we should not eat three meals at the same time and undo the wonderful blessing that has come from fasting, but more important than this, I indicated, "I do not care how much you eat after the twenty-four-hour fasting period is over, just see that you do not eat the Lord's two meals." I feel sure this is good advice. The Lord has promised wonderful blessings from keeping the commandment of the fast.

Tuesday, April 6

Fourth Day

I feel I should not take more time. I love this Church. I love its devoted leadership. I admire and love you people. The world looks bright and happy to me. I am glad to be alive, and sincerely pray that the Lord will bless each and every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION D. HANKS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I REMEMBER a conference years ago in which someone following Bishop Richards spoke of the still small voice. I may fit that description today after this wonderful and energetic and lovely message from Bishop Buehner.

My heart is full of gratitude today for many things. I am very grateful for the rain, and for the lovely weather which preceded it, each of which is a blessing suited to our needs. I am very grateful that we may meet in this marvelous old building. I am grateful for the privilege of missionary service on these grounds for the past six years. One cannot have intimate acquaintance with these buildings day after day and not acquire in his soul an appreciation for them and for those who built them.

These buildings attract others, in addition to us. I remember the guide tour which was joined by a sweet woman from an eastern city. As we left this building she, who had come with some pre-conceived negative notions about Mormonism but had been touched by what she heard and felt here, turned to her husband and almost reverentially and with a tear in her eye said to him, but still with her notions, "George,

Well, it has been a great blessing these years to be able to tell such good people, and many thousands like them, that the people who did the work which we enjoy here today and each day, were not ignorant. They were people of courage and faith and dignity and initiative and integrity, who were always willing to give up conveniences and comforts but never their convictions; they were not ignorant people.

It has been a great privilege also to know, as we have learned to love these buildings and those who built them, something of other monuments which they left us, not so physically tangible, but infinitely more important. Last night as I walked through these grounds at a late hour—and I make a habit of that, I commend it to you, for these are beautiful and thoughtful and wonderful hours, in the early morning and late evening—I thought of the words reported to be inscribed on the tombstone of Sir Christopher Wren, the great British architect and builder. It is said that there is written on the tomb of this man who built more than fifty chapels in London, including St. Paul's, and was one of the great architects of his day, these words: "If you seek his monument, look around you."

I suggest to you that as Latter-day Saints it isn't very difficult to look around us and see the monuments left by those who worked here so well and courageously, and with such integrity, so long ago. In the moment or two available, may I suggest two or three of these other monuments which they made available to us: the monumental blessing, for instance, of truth and testimony, of spiritual knowledge, of freedom from the sins of the world; the monumental heritage of possibility for personal union with God, for peace in this life, and eternal life in the world to come; the monumental gift of great books of scripture, in which are written not only the lessons of life, but the great revelations of God to men. And with these and all the other monuments, they left us the monument of work, which they were willing and able to perform. O how we need to learn it.

With a knowledge of these monuments they dedicated to us, there comes the sober second thought expressed well by Goethe, the great German poet-philosopher, who said: "What from your fathers' heritage is lent, earn it anew to really possess it," which is to say that while these great blessings of monumental value come to us from our pioneer forebears, they are of such a nature that they may be really possessed only by him or her who is willing to really earn and merit them.

There was the day, and I recall it with pleasure, when a man came here, a man from the government of Israel, in fact he was a ministerial official of that nation. It happened to be late in the evening, and there weren't many people around, and I had a casual and very pleasant talk with him. He was a jolly fellow of the kind Brother Buehner has been talking about, a little bit corpulent and pleasant and humorous. He was a Jew of intelligence, with rabbinical training in fact. He asked many questions of interest about us and our faith, and I had the privilege of telling him as best I could of the great truths, monumental truths, that had come to us from God through our forebears. He invited conversation about our relationship, him and me, and I told him we were cousins in a real sense, that we both came from the family of Israel, and I identified myself as being of the lineage of Ephraim. He leaned back, gasped, and said, "Say again." And so we began to repeat, "Through Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and through Joseph to Ephraim, came the covenant blessings; many of us are of Ephraim."

"Well," he said, "I came to America to learn about agriculture. I came to Utah to learn about irrigation. I expected to learn many interesting things, but I never expected to find the lost sons of Ephraim."

He went away. He came back in the morning. He said, "Tell me again." So we told him, "From God to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and through Joseph to Ephraim come the birthright blessings." And we talked for some time, identifying his progenitors, his forebears, with ours, and he left figuratively, almost literally, holding his head in his hands with what he had heard. We have heard from him several times since, he bearing testimony in his own way of this, to him, new and marvelous story. And I thought how grateful I am for the monumental link left me which connects me with all dispensations past, which tells me who I am, whence I came, and what my destiny might be.

I am grateful for many other monumental truths. If it were feasible we might show you a file, full of letters from people of education, wealth, power, prominence, good character, reiterating, each of them in his own words, the simple story one of them told as he wrote, "I found in one hour on these grounds among your people more peace and faith and something to hang to than I had ever known before." Well, these are monumental blessings, but they come to us only as we individually earn them, which is the only manner in which we might really possess them.

May I suggest to you, as I conclude, one other little item which I think will be of interest. I mentioned the great scriptures, these books of truth and revelation, which God has given us. These too must be individually earned to be possessed. It would thrill you, and in a sense make you chagrined, as it has me, to learn the reaction of many great and good people to these scriptures. Let me read you two lines from two letters from a certain doctor from Tel-Aviv. He had had the Book of Mormon. He said, "The first reading has made this material precious for me in another sense. It deals with many problems occupying me, as every man concerned with his and mankind's destiny." And he writes a little later, "I would like to add that I have been deeply impressed by everything that I have read about you, and particularly as a Hebrew scholar, by the true continuation of the Bible spirit in the Book of Mormon."

Tuesday, April 6

I will read one other simple sentence from a lovely woman who picked up a copy of the Book of Mormon and who wrote this: "I am reading with greatest delight the blessed truths contained in that book. I never dreamed that the Book of Mormon was like that; in fact, I thought hard things about it and you, for I received my information from articles in secular magazines. I belong to another denomination, but," and get this, "how I rejoice to know the truth and drink in the precious words of men like Nephi and Mosiah and Alma"; and my heart rejoices, and I think to myself, how marvelous it is to be able to drink in the precious words of Nephi and Mosiah and Alma, and yet how many Latter-day Saints have lived and died without ever having known them.

God bless us to appreciate, to understand what the scriptures say. Hear the Lord's word recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants: "For what doth it profit a man if a gift is bestowed upon him, and he receive not the gift? Behold, he rejoices not in that which is given unto him, neither rejoices in him who is the giver of the gift." (D. & C. 88:33.)

God help us to appreciate the monuments around us. God bless us that we may have sense enough, faith enough, courage enough, to understand that there are marvelous truths that we might really possess, but which we must individually earn anew, if we would have them, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder George Q. Morris, whom you have just sustained as a member of the Twelve, will be our next speaker.

He to whom you have just listened is Elder Marion D. Hanks, of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER GEORGE Q. MORRIS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Y DEAR brethren and sisters: I am sure you know how one feels in this place and under these conditions. I have gained a more thorough understanding of one passage of scripture in the last few moments than I ever had before, which says that the Lord shall select the weak things of the earth to do his work. But I also must have faith, as he also says that those who are weak he will strengthen, and that the weak things of the earth shall rise and go forth and break down the mighty and the strong, which means that we trust in God. We are engaged in his work.

And I recall the passage in the Doctrine and Covenants where the Lord says through the Prophet Joseph Smith to Orson Hyde and to all the faithful elders of the Church:

Wherefore, be of good cheer, and do not fear, for I the Lord am with you, and will stand by you; and ye shall bear record of me, even Jesus Christ, that I am the Son of the living God, that I was, that I am, and that I am to come. (D. & C. 68:6.)

I bear that humble witness with all my heart. I am glad to place on the altar whatever I am and whatever I possess.

I know that this is the work of God, that he lives, that Jesus Christ is the Son of the living God, and that he lives, that he is very close to us, and that he directs our beloved President and Prophet, David O. McKay, and his associates, and that these are men of God. And I am very grateful to them for the kindness and consideration and patience they have shown toward me. I love them and I try to emulate their example. I am privileged beyond my power to express my gratitude for the opportunity of continuing my labors with them.

My mind naturally goes to my dear mother, to whom I pay tribute, than whom I can imagine no man or woman ever being more valiant than was she in her service to her God. She came as a girl fifteen years of age, a true believer in the gospel of Jesus Christ, to St. Louis, where her mother died, and she came on to Zion. At nineteen she had lost her husband and her first child, thousands of miles away from her home in England, in a wild, unbroken country. She entered into conditions that tested her soul, and would test the soul of any man or any woman, but she was valiant, uncomplaining, cheerful, and true under all conditions, and I thank God for her, and I know she is happy today.

I pay tribute to my dear wife, who through years of sickness has been forced to be absent from me at sea level and under a doctor's care. She has been lonesome but she has always stood by me through all these years when I put my Church work first, before my business and before my home. She has sustained me in it. And as I left her ten days ago in New York, sick in bed, she would not have it any other way, and she stands by this principle.

My mother taught me to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. I want to bear witness to you, my dear brethren and sisters, that that principle is true, that in this the Church of Jesus Christ, the Church of the living God, there is no other principle that we should follow, no other principle, except to seek first the kingdom of God and keep his commandments, and all else will be added. And I thank the Lord for the abundant and unexpected and continuing and unfailing blessings, temporal and spiritual, that he has given to me, beyond all my hopes and all my deserts, and I acknowledge his hand in these things. And I am glad to lay them on the altar for his service and for this work.

I do not feel that I should say more. My duty now is one of performance, but I do bear witness that this Church is the Church of Jesus Christ, set up by him, directed by him, a power for the salvation of the human family. And that this Church is equal to every situation that arises in the world, and if the world would accept it, it would meet every situation. This Church is an organized movement for world peace, if the world only knew it. This is the world peace movement, both for individuals and for nations, and there can be no substitute.

I thank the Lord for the love and confidence of my brethren with whom I am to labor. I love them and sustain them with all my heart; and I thank the people of this Church who have received me so kindly, for their kindness and their consideration. I want to pay a tribute to the men and the women throughout the Church who carry forward so faithfully and so well, this great work to the humble and duty-loving men and women, who forget themselves and lose themselves in their families, in their children, and in the Church. God will bless them, and they will enter into their celestial joy.

May God help us all to be true and give ourselves with all our hearts to his service, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Fourth Day

President David O. McKay:

We shall now hear from Elder Sterling W. Sill, whom you have just sustained as an Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles.

ELDER STERLING W. SILLAssistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

HERE HAVE been a number of circumstances that have combined themselves together this morning to produce in my heart great humility, accompanied by a feeling of inadequacy to discharge properly the responsibilities of this appointment. I pray that I might receive the necessary strength to fulfil those obligations. I am grateful for the confidence of the brethren who are responsible for this appointment. I also appreciate very much your sustaining vote. I promise the General Authorities of the Church, as well as the general Church membership, and Him whose name the Church bears, that I will do the very best I can.

Many times I have prayed to my Father in heaven that he would help me to do my work. I hope that I may pray more and more effectively that I may help him to do his work, and by that means express to him the appreciation that I feel for all of the blessings of my life.

I am very grateful for my wife and family. I am grateful for my parents, grandparents, and great-grandparents. As my great-grandfather marched with the Mormon Battalion to assist in the war with Mexico, my great-grandmother marched with her little family across the plains to establish herself and her posterity in this valley. The wagon containing her earthly possessions was drawn by a team of oxen. Before reaching her destination one of the oxen died. My great-grandmother lifted the yoke of the fallen oxen to her own shoulders and continued the march. I pray that I may draw from her strength and determination.

I appreciate the great opportunity of being a part of this Church, both for what it has meant to me in the past, and for what it will mean in the future. The real worth of a man is not in himself alone, but in what he stands for. It is an inspiring thing to me that the most humble of us may stand for the most important things. Joseph Smith was great because of what he stood for.

When Joseph Smith arose from his knees, after his first vision, and walked across the fields to his father's house, and went into the kitchen where his mother was working, and leaning against the fireplace for support, said in substance, "Mother, I have seen God," at that instant he did not know a bit more surely than I know or than you know that it is right to be honest, that it is right to be virtuous, and that all the other principles for which this Church stands are right. It is right to spend our strength in the service of our Father in heaven to help to bring about his purposes.

The great psychologist, William James, said that the greatest use of life is to spend it for something that outlasts it.

In a Sunday School class which I visited recently I heard a Sunday School teacher recount that thrilling story of creation, that "God created man in his own image," and I found myself wishing that I might have been there to have witnessed this great beginning, and then it occurred to me, as it has occurred many times since, that the creation of man is not something that was finished and done with in the Garden of Eden. The creation of man is still going on, and in a very real sense each of us is a creator—that is, the attitudes, the enthusiasms, the faith, the determination to serve God, that are so important to our eternal exaltation, are being currently created within us and in others.

It is more important to build a great character than to build a great skyscraper. We know that the worth of souls is great, but mostly we are not great for what we are, we are great for what we may become, and it is my hope and prayer in my own behalf that I may develop those qualities that will enable me to accomplish the duties of this assignment as is expected of me by my Father in heaven and those who preside over me in the Church.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I AM GRATEFUL, my brethren and sisters, to be back in this goodly land. I am very happy this morning to welcome into the circle of the General Authorities those who have been called of our heavenly Father to fill these important positions and sustained this day by the vote of the people. I can't help commenting with some pride that my father, as well as Brother George Q. Morris and his father and his mother, came from the old Fifteenth Ward. It seemed, as I grew up to manhood, that the Fifteenth Ward became a part of me although I never had the privilege of living in it, because I heard so much from the lips of my father concerning the wonderful families that lived in that ward. He always mentioned the Morris family, and Sister Morris, and what a lovely woman she was. Brother Morris's father was one of the great industrial leaders of the state and helped with others of our forefathers to make this state what it is. So I am happy to welcome Brother Morris into our Council this day. I have appreciated the associations that we have had with him in the past.

It has also been my privilege to work to a slight extent with Brother Sill, and my heart goes out to him in gratitude for his faithfulness and devotion to the work of the Lord, and I pray that the Lord will bless and sustain these wonderful men in the offices to which they have been called.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder Sterling W. Sill, sustained as Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles.

We will now hear from Elder Henry D. Moyle, member of the Council of the Twelve. Elder Moyle.

I have never before in my life been so grateful as I am this day for the blessings of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ, for my membership in the Church, and for what strength the Lord has given me to assist in helping his children here upon the earth. My labors this winter in the great countries of Europe have brought me close to the people. I have had the opportunity of visiting them in their towns and in their villages, seeing them in their homes, feeling of their faith and of their devotion, and understanding to some slight extent the difficulties that confront them in their daily lives, the manner in which they are still ostracized by their neighbors the moment that they join the Church and begin to proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ to their neighbors and friends and their families. My heart goes out to them, and above all else, a desire that I have within me to be of help to them. I feel now, as I have felt all winter, that every ounce of strength, every blessing that the Lord has given me, should be shared with those people. I would love to live among them and to ask the Lord to continue to bless me that I might have strength to impart unto them and to give to them the blessings that come from the power of the priesthood which has been restored in these latter days.

Tuesday, April 6

Never has the power of the priesthood been so bestowed upon me or felt in my presence, as it has been this winter, as we have gone forth to seek to bless the Saints in Europe. I have been impressed with the one attribute common to them all, and that was the fact that they wanted no pity. I wish you could all have been present in Berlin: Nearly a thousand people assembled there on a Sabbath morning with a beautiful choir, singing the hymns of Zion in German, so dear to my heart. We listened to the testimonies of those men, the expressions of gratitude in their hearts for that which they had, and when you looked around, you wondered really what they had to be grateful for, as compared with us. They have but one thing, the most priceless gift that our Father in heaven has given to man, the testimony of the divinity of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It has brought strength to their hearts; it has destroyed fear; and it has reconciled them to whatever their lot may be.

I had the privilege of shaking hands with some four hundred people who live behind the Iron Curtain. I heard their leaders say that they knew that they had a mission there to perform that was far greater than any mission that they could perform elsewhere in the world. They did not seek by migration to relieve themselves of the burdens, of the oppression, or of the persecution under which they live. All they prayed for was strength that they might withstand the same, and in overcoming their obstacles grow strong. I had one lovely sister say to me she was so glad that she lived where she did and had the opportunity to meet all of these oppressive circumstances of life because she knew within her very being that she was growing stronger, and she rather pitied those of us who had been born in the Church, considered in a way as though by so being we had been born in the lap of luxury and ease.

I tell you in that meeting in Berlin there was not a word of pity, not a word of complaint, nothing but praises sung and spoken to our Father in heaven for the blessings that he gave them, for the freedom that they enjoyed.

I might take you from Berlin for a moment down into Switzerland where circumstances are a little more favorable, but where still in some of the cantons we do not have the religious freedom that we would like. A little black-haired boy, not more than eight or nine years of age, came up to me after our meeting in Basel, and with fear and trembling he said he wanted to shake hands with me, and when he got hold of my hand, he looked up into my eyes with his big black eyes and he said, "Brother Moyle, would you come and administer to my father?"

When I went to that boy's home, I met a faithful mother, and an older brother. That mother threw her arms around me, and she said, "Brother Moyle, we have fasted and prayed, and especially this youngest son of mine, that he might have the courage that we older ones lacked to ask you to come to our home and bless our father who is so critically ill."

I tell you when I saw the faith of that boy, and the faith of that mother and of that son, and of the appreciation that they had for the priesthood of God, it touched my heart to the very core. It gave me a sense of humility I would like to keep all the days of my life. The Spirit of the Lord and his power were there present, and we blessed that good father and gave to that family the desires of their heart through the gift and power of our heavenly Father.

That instance could be multiplied many times in the experiences which we had this winter. I was so grateful that my good wife was with me. Those people seemed to feel as though they had been specially blessed by the presence of my good wife and the love and the affection that she bestowed upon these wonderful people.

I tell you, brethren and sisters, when the faith of Latter-day Saints is such that they can praise the Lord for the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the blessings which that has brought into their lives through their obedience to its principles, to the exclusion of practically all else in life, then we see, I am sure, reflected in their lives the image, the Spirit, and the power of our heavenly Father. God bless these people.

It was wonderful to meet with your missionary sons and daughters. I heard practically every elder in Europe, with few exceptions, bear his testimony, and the lovely lady missionaries likewise. The hours never ran too long but what we were thrilled by the devotion of these fine young men and women. I tell you it seems as though the difficulties that confront them, the problems they have to solve, make the missionaries stronger, too.

I have had a feeling this winter that greater than anything I did for others was the effect upon me of these wonderful contacts and associations. They have touched my life with a very great force. They have made me realize that God lives and that he hears and answers the prayers of his sons and daughters here upon this earth. I can say amen to all that Brother Spencer W. Kimball has said this morning—that the Lord is no respecter of persons.

I have been led to tell the people of Europe this winter, and I know it as I know that I live, that we have entered into a new era in the history of the Church, one brought about by two great circumstances, toward which we have been unconsciously laboring. The one circumstance culminated when President McKay gave to the Church six months ago a charge that everyone should be a missionary. He indicated the possibility of increasing the membership of the Church by at least 500,000 in 1954 if every family in the Church would accept that admonition and bring one soul into the Church during this year. The people of Europe have caught that inspiration. In place of inviting missionaries to come to their homes to eat, as has been the custom (sometimes I am afraid we have permitted these people to go to too great a sacrifice to feed our elders), now the missionaries are calling in their neighbors, and just like Brother [T. Bowring] Woodbury [at the special missionary conference] said last night, they are finding that it is a fine way to begin a cottage meeting in the home to give their neighbors a meal before they start to preach the gospel to them. That is what our people in Europe are doing. The work is going forward and will go forward as they continue to follow the admonition of our Prophet. They recognize it is part of their life, that President David O. McKay is the mouthpiece of our heavenly Father upon this earth, they look to him for guidance and direction. They know that by this missionary labor they can accomplish two things: They can first of all establish their own homes in these localities in Europe on a firmer basis, and in place of giving attention to emigration to this country, they give attention to preaching the gospel and disseminating that joy and happiness and assurance to others which has come into their lives.

The other great circumstance that has ushered into the Church a new era is the building of temples in Europe. How I thrilled to stand upon that ground, which is already hallowed by the dedication of a Prophet of God as the site of a temple to be built to the Most High and to there see the machinery and the men at work excavating for that great temple in Europe. I am sure that the one in England will be a like inspiration to those people to build up their branches. The men are preparing to receive the priesthood, that they may be worthy not only to go through the temple and receive the blessings of the Lord there in his house, but likewise to gain knowledge and wisdom, judgment, and discretion in matters that pertain to the priesthood so that they can preside over the branches and the districts of the missions abroad and relieve the missionaries whom we send forth to proselyte.

Fourth Day

It would do your heart good to hear some of those district presidents from behind the Iron Curtain tell you of the percentage of branch teaching that they are getting from the priesthood. They have a priesthood which has practically no contact with the Church. We cannot send into them literature; we cannot visit them; and it is on rare occasions, such as I was privileged to enjoy in Berlin, that they can come into Berlin and into the West Zone to attend our meetings.

I tell you when we get faithful men in Europe, supported by faithful women, to do their branch teaching and to help to sustain and to strengthen and to uphold the weaker members of those branches, a new era has entered into our great missionary work and into the mission fields of the Church. I am sure that there has been a different attitude toward us on the part of some new governments. I am grateful beyond measure to the government of West Germany that they have given to us a legal status equal to any of the churches of the world and have permitted us to become incorporated under their public laws and given us all of the advantages incident thereto. It would have filled your hearts with joy to have been present in Frankfurt when 704 faithful servicemen gathered from all over Europe and Africa, under military orders, some of them, to come there to attend. When one commanding officer heard such a convention was to be held again this year, with knowledge of what had transpired in previous years, he issued an order requiring their attendance and didn't leave it alone to the discretion of his men. That order carried some advantages that they had not enjoyed on previous trips to that conference in Frankfurt.

I say it would have thrilled you to have seen the faithfulness of these men and to have had them welcomed into that German city by the burgomeister, Dr. Leiske, a man whom I honor and respect for his Christian virtues and his integrity and his kindness to servicemen whom he knew to be Latter-day Saints. I had the pleasure of sitting with him at the banquet table and telling him that it had been my privilege over forty years before, under the presidency of President Thomas E. McKay, to serve as the presiding elder there in Frankfurt and to preach the gospel to his people. I wish the welcoming address which he gave us could be read by all Latter-day Saints, and I wish likewise that we will so live as a people here at home to merit the compliments that were paid us there by those who have been over here.

I must conclude my remarks. I want to say that I met many other public officials, including mayors of cities in Finland, public officials in Sweden, who had been here, and who welcomed us, who entertained us, and who bear for us a kindly invitation. And one great industrial leader, Mr. Eric W. Forsberg, of Sandviken, Sweden, the president and general manager of the Sandvik Steel Company, one of the most wonderful companies in Europe, that so refines steel that it becomes worth more than gold, entertained us, President Clarence F. Johnson, and a group of missionaries of the Swedish Mission, and sent his private cars to take us to our next appointment rather than to have us ride on the train. I say God bless these people.

Before we got through that day, he invited President Clarence F. Johnson to send his missionaries into the settlement in which the employees of that steel works live and said that he had hundreds of refugee Germans there, and that we could send in Swedish as well as German-speaking elders. He wanted the influence of the Latter-day Saints to be felt in his great organization.

God bless us all, I pray humbly, and make us worthy of the heritage which is ours, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve Apostles.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing, "I Will Exalt Thee, O Lord."

Let us pause a moment. Relief Society Singing Mothers—what that phrase radiates, that title. Singing Mothers, rendering relief to the Church. It is no wonder when they gather as a body that they inspire us as they do with their gracious inspirational singing. With all our hearts we say God bless you.

The closing prayer this morning will be offered by Elder John B. Hawkes, formerly President of the North Central States Mission.

The singing for this session, as I say, has been furnished by these Relief Society Singing Mothers with Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting. And how ably she conducts! The Lord surely blesses her leadership, and her ability. She has devoted her life to the training of musicians, inspiring others, hundreds of others with her ability as a great musician.

Elder Frank W. Asper has been at the organ.

Following the benediction by Elder John B. Hawkes, until recently President of the North Central States Mission, this conference will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang "I Will Exalt Thee, O Lord."

Elder John B. Hawkes, formerly president of the North Central States Mission, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

FOURTH DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 2 o'clock p.m., Tuesday, April 6th.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers, under the direction of Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen, furnished the choral singing for this session.

President David O. McKay:

Members of the Church are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah, in the concluding and seventh session of the 124th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

For those who are unable to enter the building, we announce that the services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall over a public address system, also by television.

As heretofore announced, these services are also being televised over KSL-TV, channel five, of Salt Lake City, and are being heard over radio through KSL, over twelve radio stations as just announced over the radio station. As there may be some listening in who have not heard our expression of appreciation of the service rendered by these radios, we express again deep appreciation for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts.

We are pleased to note the attendance this afternoon of prominent state officials, leaders in educational circles, and particularly to acknowledge the presence of Sir Alexander Fleming, native of Ayrshire, Scotland, world-renowned discoverer of penicillin, and famed British doctor, and also Lady Fleming. Dr. Fleming is Director of the Wright Fleming Institute of Microbiology in London. We are pleased, Doctor and Lady Fleming, to have you in our session, in our congregation this afternoon.

The music for this session will be rendered by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, conducted by Florence Jepperson Madsen, with Frank W. Asper at the organ. The Singing Mothers will now favor us with "Seek Ye the Lord." The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Sylvester Broadbent, formerly President of the West Central States Mission.

Tuesday, April 6

Fourth Day

A musical selection, "Seek Ye the Lord," was sung by the Relief Society Singing Mothers.

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Sylvester Broadbent, formerly president of the West Central States Mission.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang "In His Steps."

President David O. McKay:

When we realize that these mothers come in small groups from various, and in some cases distant, parts of the Church, and have had only one or possibly two opportunities to practice as a group, we marvel at the expression and inspiration that Sister Madsen succeeds in bringing out of this wonderful Singing Mothers organization.

It is said that honest confession is good for the soul. We will let President Clark now not make a confession but an acknowledgement for all of us of an oversight this morning.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

I am covered with chagrin about this, but I failed to present this morning one of the most important offices in the Church; having in mind what the Lord has said to us about the importance of records and the keeping of records, it is inexcusable that I should have looked over presenting this office. I have apologized to President McKay, I have apologized to Brother Joseph Fielding, I apologize to the audience.

It has been proposed that we sustain Joseph Fielding Smith as Church Historian and Recorder, with A. William Lund as his assistant. All those in favor of this proposal will signify it by raising the right hand. (Those present raised their right hands.) Those opposed by the same sign. (No hands raised.)

Thank you, brothers and sisters. The voting was unanimously in the affirmative.

President David O. McKay:

He is forgiven.

Our first speaker this afternoon will be Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson, of the Presiding Bishopric. He will be followed by Elder Milton R. Hunter.

BISHOP THORPE B. ISAACSON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

WITH THE STATEMENT, confession is good for the soul, just made by President Clark, I can truthfully tell you that I confess to you that I am nervous, frightened, and humble, and I hope this confession will be good for my soul.

President McKay, President Richards, President Clark, my beloved brothers and sisters and friends: As we have listened to this beautiful music today and the music in each session of the conference, it reminds me of the statement, "the song of the righteous is a prayer unto God." (See D. & C. 25:12.) The music has been a prayer unto our Father in heaven, and it certainly has mellowed our souls. I pray the Lord to be with me as I speak to you for a few moments.

We have had another great conference of the Church, certainly a spiritual conference. Our testimonies have been increased. Every meeting has been rich with the Spirit of the Lord. Truly, we have been fed the bread of life; and as we listen to these great sermons, these wonderful addresses, I wonder when we leave here today whether that will be the last that we will think of them. Would it not be well for us, when these addresses are published, to read them again, to spend an evening reading these marvelous addresses to our family? Certainly we recognize that we have listened to the word of the Lord, and it would be well for us, I am sure, if we read and re-read them. There are so many of our young people who do not get a chance to hear these conferences. I am sure they would thrill if they would read these addresses.

As one of the most humble among you, and one of the weakest, I have long since realized that if I try to do my work without the help of the Lord, I utterly fail, and I know without his blessing I am as nothing.

I sincerely trust that the radio and television audiences have been able to partake of the spirit of this conference. Certainly there has been a beautiful, sweet spirit here at every session. The spirit of worship, the spirit of reverence, the spirit of thankfulness and gratitude Lord has said, "When ye shall meet in has been here in rich abundance. The my name, I will be in your midst," (see Matt. 18:20; D. & C. 6:32) and that sweet spirit that we have felt here is the Spirit of the Lord.

If the Lord will direct me, I should like to say one or two things on the subject of faith, not from the scientific, technical viewpoint, but just practical, personal, simple faith; faith in God, faith that God lives, and I quote from the Doctrine and Covenants, section 50, verse 24:

That which is of God is light; and he that receiveth light, and continueth in God, receiveth more light; and that light groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day.

The Apostle Paul tells us without faith it is impossible to please God, and without faith it is impossible to accomplish anything of real value. (See Heb. 11:6.)

In the Doctrine and Covenants, section 14, verse 9, may I quote:

Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, who created the heavens and the earth, a light which cannot be hid in darkness.

Faith in Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

Faith in the mission of Jesus Christ—that mission was for the redemption of you and me and all mankind! How he loved the world! How he suffered and died that we might live and have eternal life, probably God's greatest gift to man. May we have faith in the mission of our beloved Savior, faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ, which has been restored to the earth in our day in its fulness.

Faith in the Prophet Joseph Smith, chosen of the Father and his Son Jesus Christ, to bring forth the restored gospel!

Faith in the mission of the Prophet Joseph! Faith that he actually saw God and his Son, and that he received visitations from heavenly messengers on many occasions! Faith in the life, the devotion, and the mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith!

Faith in the prophets of God since that time up to the present! Faith and knowledge that President David O. McKay is a true prophet of God! Faith that the First Presidency of the Church and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles and the Patriarch are prophets, seers, and revelators, and servants of God, our Father!

How would you like to have known Moses? How would you like to have known Elijah, Abraham, Peter, James, John, and some of the other great prophets? Oh, we read about them and sometimes we wish we had known these prophets. Have we the faith to recognize and realize that these prophets today are called of the same God who called the prophets of old? Have we the faith to recognize in them that they are special witnesses for Christ? Sometimes I wonder if we get so close to the forest that we cannot see the trees.

I bear you my testimony that I have felt and I know that these men are true prophets of God and that he does reveal his mind and will to them. As I have said before, I have watched decisions now for a number of years, and I want to tell you that the decisions they make are the decisions inspired of the Lord, and they are not their decisions, but they are the decisions of our Father in heaven.

I hope the membership in the Church can accept those decisions as inspired revelations and inspiration.

Faith in the power of the priesthood, the power of God, the power and authority delegated to men and boys to act in the name and in the place of our Father in heaven here upon the earth. How often have we witnessed the power of the priesthood and faith in the sparing of the lives of our loved ones, restoring them to their health, that they could be with us longer.

I want to bear you my testimony that I know that God does hear and answer prayers, and it is through the power of the priesthood and faith that many of our loved ones have been spared, that their health has been restored. I hope we will have the faith to accept this and not take it too much for granted.

Faith in each other! Paul in his writings uses this expression: "For we walk by faith, not by sight." (II Cor. 5:7.)

"I would rather walk in the dark with Thee,
Than walk alone in the light.
I would rather walk by faith
with Thee,
Than walk alone by sight."

Let your blessings come from faith more than by sight. This was evidenced by the words of the Master to Thomas, when he said,

... because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. (John 20:29.)

We need not walk alone nor stumble in the dark, because if our faith is right, it will light our way. Faith is a gift of God.

The brotherhood of Christ is beautiful to behold. Why? Because it is of God. We have witnessed it here, and we witness it in every session.

Jesus speaking said,

I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live;

And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. (Ibid., 11:25-26.)

That is the faith of the membership of this Church.

Faith in the principle of prayer! Where would we go and what would we do without the principle of prayer? A while ago I was thrilled as I attended a stake conference. A young man who was asked to give the invocation lived in an area where there had been considerable drouth. They were worried about moisture, and when he was called upon to pray, among other beautiful and appropriate thoughts, he prayed to the Lord for moisture. That boy had faith, faith in prayer, faith in God, and he was not afraid to ask the Lord for the blessings that they needed. Then, the next week, I was at another conference in the same area where they, too, were worrying about moisture, but during the week they had had considerable moisture, and this young man in his prayer, I do not recall whether it was the invocation or benediction, thanked the Lord for the moisture that had come to them, assuring them that their crops would be matured.

Many of our young people are not here, but I hope as parents we will teach them to pray, that they may be able to take their problems to their Father in heaven. I would feel very bad if I ever learned that my children did not pray for their father or their mother. I could assure them, as you can, that we pray for them constantly. Certainly, they can do no less than to pray for their parents. Fathers and mothers, do your children pray for you, or are they too modest? I hope the young people will be considerate of their parents. My father and mother have been dead a long time, but how I would like to shake hands with my dad and tell him how much I love him and feel the callouses on his hands and pick them as I used to when I was a kid, because he was a hard-working farmer and laboring man. But more than that, how I would like to see my mother, how I would like to put my arms around her and thank her for all she did for me. Do you think I would hesitate today to tell her that I love her? No, no, not if I had a chance. Sometimes young people do not take that opportunity when they have the chance.

Are your children disrespectful to you, parents? Sometime ago I heard a boy refer to his father as the old man, and then I heard him refer to his mother as the old woman. No, I would not speak about my father today that way, nor my mother, and I hope our young people will be taught not to address their father and mother in that way.

When Jesus was on the Mount of Olives with his disciples, he withdrew that he might go and pray in secret to his Father. His heart was heavy; his cross seemed unbearable. He wanted to be alone with his Father; the understanding between Jesus and his Father, the loving trust between father and child; we, too, can have that beautiful relationship as father and child.

Faith that we can receive comfort, strength, and blessings from our heavenly Father through the medium of prayer.

Recently I read these expressions on the subject of "Secret Prayer," and with your permission I should like to read them:

The soul with a broken heart, on bended knees, with head bowed reverently, cannot long remain in the shadows of the night of spiritual blindness. To pray in secret to our divine Father in heaven brings solace to the aching heart, companionship to the lonely, assurance to the oppressed, light to the wayward, power to the weak, strength to the strong, and the calm conviction that God, our eternal Father, lives and that Jesus is the Christ.

What a privilege to shut oneself away from the world and be with God alone in prayer. He knows us for what we really are and not for what we may appear to be. If we are righteous, he is happy. If we are sinful and we go before him alone, and there in the language of the heart tell him we love him and we want his help in doing right, his divine emotions well up within him, and in his unspeakable majesty and unqualified mercy he takes us in his arms, as it were, and we feel the warmth and the infinite love of his holy person. He waits patiently, but anxiously to breathe his divine essence into the human heart upon its contrite invitation. Oh, that all men could have this experience.

Secret prayer is the prayer of the heart. Its language is bathed in simplicity. We kneel before our heavenly Father, knowing that before, and as we speak, he knows our every weakness and our every secret desire. We pray to him in the light of this knowledge. There is no masquerade in secret prayer. (Author unknown.)

Youth, keep your faith in God. Do not allow the teachings of the world, despondency, or discouragement cause you to lose your faith in God and in his Son, Jesus Christ.

Men who lose their faith are of all men most unhappy. Youth, you will need great faith. You may not be required to pull a handcart across the plains, but your road may not always be easy, and you will need great faith in God to face the trials of life. Stay close to your Father in heaven and partake of his Spirit through the principle of prayer.

I bear testimony to you that I know God lives, and I know when I live righteously, I can feel his influence, and I know when I waver, the Lord is not pleased.

May the Lord bless us with great faith, that we may live close to him at all times, that we may remember the teachings of this conference, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson, of the Presiding Bishopric, has just spoken to us. We shall now hear from Elder Milton R. Hunter, of the First Council of Seventy. He will be followed by Elder Marion G. Romney.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

IT IS INDEED with humility, my brothers and sisters, that I occupy this position this afternoon. I humbly trust and pray that the Spirit of God will direct the things which I shall say.

If I were to ask you a question and if each of you could answer me individually, I wonder what your answers would be. The question is, What is there in all this world that you would rather have? In other words, if you had one wish, and if that one wish could be granted, what would it be?

I recall that when I was teaching students at the LDS Institute of Religion at Logan, on several different occasions I asked the college students the question which I have just asked you. Almost immediately and invariably those fine young college men would reply, "A million dollars," or they would say, "A Cadillac," or something else of a worldly nature. After due consideration of this problem, we always came to a united conclusion that material things of this world are not the most worth while. They are transitory; they are soon gone. Furthermore, material things do not supply complete satisfaction in life. Invariably our conclusion was that the spiritual things are the most worth while. They are eternal.

We always agreed finally with the great statement made by Father Lehi, wherein he said, "Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they may have joy." (2 Nephi 2:25.) I know of no other statement in any of our scriptures which expresses the principal purpose of man's existence more aptly than does that one made by Father Lehi.

I believe with all my heart that God the eternal Father wants his children on this earth to have joy, an abundance of joy. I believe, also, that he expects members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, we who have taken upon ourselves the name of Christ, to live an abundant, joyful, happy life. Our lives should be lived in such a way as to bring to us a fulness of joy today, tomorrow, next week, ten years from now, a hundred years from now, a thousand years from now, and even throughout the eternities. I want to remind each of us that God has placed within the reach of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ the possibilities of that joy, that perpetual and eternal joy, if we will just obey the laws that bring that joy into our lives.

Throughout the entire history of mankind, from the days of Adam down to the present time, throughout all nations and among all peoples, there has been a strong urge in the hearts of human beings to have pleasure, to have joy. They have tried every avenue available to man to satisfy that urge.

I suppose that the vast majority of people have felt that if they could accumulate a lot of wealth, then with that money they could buy anything they desired. In other words, they believe that an abundant life, a fulness of joy could be purchased with that wealth. Numerous people have struggled diligently to accumulate wealth, with the result that many of them have become exceedingly rich. Some of them have actually worshiped mammon. (Matt. 6:24; 19:17-26; Luke 16:8-14; 12:15-23.) Doubtless these people found that that wealth brought additional problems, troubles, and sometimes additional sins. In most cases such wealth and the love for it brought additional sorrow. They have found to their great regret that as the Savior said, "... a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth." (Luke 12:15.)

I recognize the fact that the possession of a certain amount of money is good.

The Lord wants us to have a certain amount of the material things; but in modern revelation he condemned in strong terms the selfish rich man, as well as the greedy poor man. (D. & C. 56:16-17.)

Other people have felt that they could satisfy that urge for happiness by indulging all of their physical appetites; for example, even some Latter-day Saints have felt that they could satisfy that inner urge for happiness by breaking the Word of Wisdom—by satisfying their appetite for tea, coffee, tobacco, and liquor. Certainly many of them found that those things did not increase their joy. They cut off many of their opportunities for an abundant life, and especially is that true in the case of using alcohol. The devil has found no better tool to bring about poverty, misery, and divorce, and even to lead one into gross sins, than the use of alcohol.

Others have felt that by indulging their sexual emotions, by committing adultery, they could satisfy that inward urge for happiness. It is my opinion that such self-indulgent people, without any exception, find to their regret and chagrin that sin never is happiness. They have found that adulterers become very unhappy in this life, casting from themselves the Spirit of God, and, as the Savior said, their final status will be to be "... cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of Almighty God..." with the other sinners. (Ibid., 76:103-107; 63:16-18.)

If we cannot find the abundant life and complete happiness in the realm of the physical, wherein lies the basis of happiness? In the first place, I would say that happiness comes from within, and not from without. As the good book says, "... as he [a man] thinketh in his heart, so is he." (Proverbs 23:7.) I shall paraphrase that statement by saying, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so shall his joy become." We control our happiness from within by our thoughts and actions. People can be happy without an abundance of material things, even living under the most meager circumstances, if they will abide by the laws which bring about happiness.

Now I would like to point out some of the laws upon which happiness is based, although I will not have time to point out all of them. I will suggest, first, as Brother Isaacson has just explained, that we must have faith if we are to be happy. We must have faith in God the eternal Father; that he is actually and literally the Father of our spirits; that he loves us abundantly; and that he controls within his hands, so to speak, the destiny of man and of nations. We must have faith that all will go well under his divine directorship; and that his divine plan will ultimately be fulfilled.

We must have faith in Jesus Christ: faith that he is our Lord, our Master, our Savior, our Redeemer, our Advocate with the Father. We must have faith that through the atoning blood which he spilled, he gave us immortality. We will rise from the grave; we will live again.

Also, we must have faith in the gospel plan of salvation which he proclaimed and an assurance that if we render obedience to that gospel plan we shall come back into the presence of God and receive a glorious exaltation and a fulness of joy.

We must have faith in our fellow men.

We must have faith in ourselves: faith that we can accomplish the things which we righteously take into our hearts to accomplish. I know that we may meet many disappointments; but if we are to be happy, we cannot take them too seriously. We must take them, so to speak, on the chin, and then with faith in our hearts continue forward.

Along with that faith, we must have courage—courage to meet the world with all of its perplexing problems from day to day. We must do away with all fear that is within our hearts. Fear is a destroyer of happiness. It confuses the mind. It brings about many distresses.

Fourth Day

We must remember and do as God told Joshua: "... Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." (Joshua 1:9.) That is my faith.

I believe, also, that another basic root of happiness is good health. It is quite essential to a fulness of joy. God has blessed us with good health, and it is our job to live in such a way as to maintain that health that we may have an abundance of joy continuously. I know there are some people who are handicapped with poor health, and they are still able to control their thoughts and minds in such a way that they still experience a great amount of joy. However, it is far easier to experience a fulness of joy if our health is good.

I believe that one of the basic roots of happiness is work. When God gave Adam the commandment that he should earn his bread by the sweat of his face, and also proclaimed that the noxious weeds and other similar things that were placed upon the earth, and the troubles that we meet, are here for our own good, God proclaimed a great truth. I know of no thing which gives more joy to our hearts than to have a job that we like, and to do that job efficiently and well. An indescribable amount of peace and satisfaction comes into one's heart through work well done.

President McKay yesterday mentioned one very definite item basic to happiness. It is service. Joy comes as a result of serving our fellow men. We serve our God through service to his children. There is nothing sweeter in all the world than the spiritual blessings which come to us as the result of service, as the result of losing our lives for the Master's sake, with the promise that someday we shall receive eternal life.

The last basic item that I will mention—and it is rather inclusive and a very large one, if we are to be happy today, tomorrow, next week, continuously, and eternally—is: We must keep all of God's commandments. In other words, we must render obedience to "... every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God." (D. & C. 84:44.) You and I have joined the true Church of Jesus Christ. We have taken upon ourselves the name of the Master and have entered into a covenant to keep all of his commandments. The Savior came into this world, according to his own statement, to give us life more abundantly—in other words, that we might have joy, an abundance of joy, a continuance of joy. Thus it is essential that we follow the pathway which the Son of Man marked out for us if we are to receive that abundant life which is a fulness of joy.

We must learn to love the Lord our God with all of our hearts, might, mind, and strength. (Matt. 22:37-38.) We must abide by that Golden Rule (ibid., 7:12) and learn to love our neighbors as ourselves. (Ibid., 22:39.) In this way, and in this way only, shall we have a fulness of joy. There is no other road.

The night before the Savior's crucifixion, he said to his Apostles, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." (John 14:27.) It is the peace that comes through the Spirit of Jesus Christ; it is the light of Christ that enters into our hearts, that gives us a joy—as the prophets have proclaimed—"... which passeth all understanding. . . ." (Philippians 4:7.)

Also, in addition to the Spirit of Christ, we have received the Holy Ghost, a Comforter, to comfort us in time of distress. This Comforter brings a Godly peace into our hearts.

So again I will say, my dear brothers and sisters, God has placed within your hands and my hands, as members of his kingdom, the way to find joy, the way of life, the way of life more abundantly. I do humbly ask him to bless you and me, that we will keep all of the commandments, that we will abide by all of the laws basic to happiness. May we make effective in our lives Lehi's statement that "Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy." (2 Nephi 2:25.)

And this I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I O YOU WHO are listening in over radio and looking in by television, I extend the hand of fellowship. I sincerely pray that while I speak to you a few moments, I may say something which will be beneficial to you and which, perhaps (and this is my greatest desire), will stimulate you to think of things of eternal value and renew in you a determination to live to obtain them.

To you who are assembled together in this historic Tabernacle I extend the same greeting. I marvel at your faithfulness, your willingness to return to this meetinghouse on this mid-week day and listen to more preaching. I think you are the group who would attend the second session in a stake conference.

Seeing you here, and realizing that many of you attended the Primary conference, so that now you have been in meetings constantly for five days, I am reminded of an experience my wife and I had one time as we rode from St. George to Cedar City. The driver of the automobile in which we rode had with him his little boy, who was just tall enough to stand on his feet and look out through the windshield. He wore cowboy chaps and a cowboy hat. His father told us of two things he liked to do—one was to put on his cowboy clothes and ride his pony, and the other was to go to picture shows. It was difficult to persuade him to terminate either experience when he got at it. They would try to get him home after he had seen a show through once, but he continued to stay on.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve.

One Sunday morning after Sunday School, he went home. His mother had gone to fast meeting, which followed Sunday School. The boy took off his Sunday clothes and put on his cowboy clothes and then looked for something to eat. Not finding what he wanted, he returned to the meetinghouse to find his mother. Spying her as he came down the aisle, he said, in a rather loud voice, "Mother, why don't you come home? Are you going to stay here and see this thing through three times?"

Gathered together here as we are, and remembering the sustaining of a member of the Quorum of the Twelve and an assistant to that Quorum, I cannot help feeling the loss of Brother Cowley. We listened here just six months ago to his golden voice. I want to read to you one paragraph from his final message. I think it is significant for many reasons. One is that in this paragraph he mentioned Brother Morris, who today fills the vacancy left in the Quorum by his passing. We may be able to catch in this excerpt something of his eloquence and of his humility.

We have heard the prayer of the Prophet referred to this morning. Here was a young lad who believed in a promise that if any man lacked wisdom and would ask of God, it would be given to him; and in response to that injunction he took himself out into that grove, away from the superficial structures of men, and he didn't stand looking into heaven; he bowed upon the bended knees of his body, and he offered up his prayer to God his Father to bring clearness of vision to his mind, to divest from his mind the confusion which existed there pertaining to religion. How can people doubt that God heard that prayer? Anyone who would question that God heard the prayer of that boy must believe that the Father in heaven is cruel and shuts himself away from his children when they seek him. But he did hear that prayer, and as Elder Morris has mentioned, the light burst from heaven; down through that channel of light came the Father and the Son. Young people, if you prayed for your father to come in your hour of need, would he hide from you? Of course not. Neither will our Father who is in heaven hide from us who seek him out.

God grant that we may always have the spirit of prayer in our hearts. (THE IMPROVEMENT ERA, December 1953, p. 962.)

I extend to Brother Morris a hearty welcome as he comes into the Council of the Twelve. I have loved him for a long time. I remember some years ago attending a meeting where he addressed a group of Scout leaders. He said there something which still lingers in my mind. He was talking about boys who had been brought into the Church through the activities of that organization, about their conversion, and then he said this, in substance: That not only had boys been converted from out of the Church, but that many boys born in the Church had been converted. Then he emphasized the truth that whether one is born in the Church or out of the Church, he must be converted in order to receive the blessings of heaven.

I welcome Elder Sill into the Councils of the Church. I have known him for nineteen years now. Back in those days he and I were companion bishops serving under President Joseph L. Wirthlin, who was then our stake president. I know of his ability and of his loyalty. I know that he never let his tithing go unpaid. I remember an occasion when he consulted me about it at the end of the year, when some of his calculations had gone wrong, and he did not have the ready cash to pay his tithing in full. We talked it over, and he went to the bank and borrowed the money to make it up. I am sure he will render a great service.

As I sat here in this conference and realized that it was drawing to a close, I thought of what I might say here in these closing moments which would be of worth to the people of the Church, and this statement from the Prophet came to my mind:

It is one thing to be on the mount and hear the excellent voice, etc., and another to hear the voice declare to you, You have a part and lot in that kingdom. (D. H. C. 5:403.)

That passage from the Prophet's writings has been on my mind a great deal. He gave it at the end of a long sermon, in which he had been urging the people of his day to make their calling and their election sure. He himself had made his calling and election sure.

The Lord said to the Prophet Joseph Smith on one occasion,

For I am the Lord thy God, and will be with thee even unto the end of the world, and through all eternity; for verily I seal upon you your exaltation, and prepare a throne for you in the kingdom of my Father, with Abraham your father. (D. & C. 132:49.)

And then the Lord specifies in the next sentence the conditions that brought that great blessing to the Prophet Joseph.

Behold, I have seen your sacrifices, and will forgive all your sins; I have seen your sacrifices in obedience to that which I have told you. (Ibid., 132:50.)

He gave that same witness to Heber C. Kimball. I suppose that a man who had that witness would be enjoying the more sure word of prophecy, which the Prophet defines as

... a man's knowing that he is sealed up unto eternal life, by revelation and the spirit of prophecy, through the power of the Holy Priesthood. (Ibid., 131:5.)

In this conference we have been greatly entertained at times with eloquent oratory. We have been taught by great teachers. We have heard enough truth and direction in this conference to bring us into the presence of God if we would follow it. We have been taken on to the spiritual mountain and shown visions of great glory, but how many of us have heard that voice saying we would have a part therein.

I want to read a text by which we may test ourselves today and always as to where we stand with reference to our faith and belief in God. It is the 25th verse of the 64th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Wherefore, if ye believe me, ye will labor while it is called today.

In the two paragraphs which precede it, the Lord makes clear three things: First, the meaning of the word today as used in the text; second, certain things which his people should do today; and third, some events which will come to pass tomorrow. Here are his words:

Behold, now it is called today until the coming of the Son of Man, and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned at his coming.

For after today cometh the burning . . . for verily I say, tomorrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of Hosts; and I will not spare any that remain in Babylon.

And then follows our text:

Wherefore, if ye believe me, ye will labor while it is called today. (Ibid., 64:23-25.)

I have in my heart a desire to emphasize the importance of doing the will of God now while today lasts. Perhaps more hangs upon what a man does during the short period of his mortal probation than upon his performance in any other period of equal duration since the spirit hosts took sides in the great war in heaven.

Amulek, Alma's missionary companion, speaks to this subject as follows:

. . . now is the time and the day of your salvation; . . .

For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God; yea, behold, the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors.

. . . therefore, I beseech of you that ye do not procrastinate the day of your repentance until the end; for after this day of life, which is given us to prepare for eternity, behold, if we do not improve our time while in this life, then cometh the night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed. (Alma 34:31-33.)

Nephi taught this same doctrine and went one step farther. He declared that we must not only labor in this life, but that we must also continue that labor until the end of life. He pointed out that the gate by which one enters upon the straight and narrow path is repentance and baptism by water and of fire and the Holy Ghost, and then continued:

And now, my beloved brethren, after ye have gotten into this straight and narrow path, I would ask if all is done? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; . . .

. . . ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life. (2 Nephi 31:19-20.)

And now, my beloved brethren, I know by this that unless a man shall endure to the end, in following the example of the Son of the living God, he cannot be saved. (Ibid., 31:16.)

Mormon's performance, along with his counsel to his son Moroni, is an heroic example of one's continuing unto the end under the most trying circumstances. You will recall that it was Mormon who led the degenerate Nephites in their final struggle against the Lamanites. And a discouraging and thankless job it was! As he approached the inevitable end, he wrote to his beloved son Moroni, advising that he had just fought an important battle in which he did not conquer, and in which three of his most valiant leaders and a great number of his choice men had been killed. He continued,

Tuesday, April 6

Fourth Day

And now behold, my son, I fear lest the Lamanites shall destroy this people; for they do not repent, and Satan stirreth them up continually to anger one with another.

Behold, I am laboring with them continually; and when I speak the word of God with sharpness they tremble and anger against me; and when I use no sharpness they harden their hearts against it; wherefore, I fear lest the Spirit of the Lord hath ceased striving with them.

For so exceedingly do they anger that it seemeth me that they have no fear of death; and they have lost their love, one towards another; and they thirst after blood and revenge continually. (Moroni 9:3-5.)

Then, notwithstanding these discouraging circumstances, he declares his intention to continue to labor and encourages his son Moroni to do likewise. Listen to his plea and take courage therefrom:

And now, my beloved son, notwithstanding their hardness, let us labor diligently; for if we should cease to labor, we should be brought under condemnation; for we have a labor to perform whilst in this tabernacle of clay, that we may conquer the enemy of all righteousness, and rest our souls in the kingdom of God. (Ibid., 9:6.)

In the light of these teachings, it would seem to be most unwise to rely upon the doctrine of the so-called second chance and wait until after death to perform our good works. I am acquainted with the doctrine that those who have had no opportunity to hear and receive the gospel in this life will have that opportunity in the world to come, and I rejoice in it. I rejoice in the vision and the revelation received by the Prophet Joseph Smith on the 21st day of January 1836, which teaches this doctrine. The Prophet reported that vision and that revelation in part as follows:

The heavens were opened upon us, and I beheld the celestial kingdom of God, and the glory thereof . . . I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire; also the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the Father and the Son. I saw the beautiful streets of that kingdom, which had the appearance of being paved with gold. I saw Fathers Adam and Abraham, and my father and mother, my brother, Alvin, that has long since slept, and marvelled how it was that he had obtained an inheritance in that kingdom, seeing that he had departed this life before the Lord had set His hand to gather Israel the second time, and had not been baptized for the remission of sins.

Thus came the voice of the Lord unto me, saying—

"All who have died without a knowledge of this Gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom, for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desire of their hearts." (D. H. C. 2:380.)

All this I accept with joy. However, it does not teach, and I have never found anything in the scriptures nor in the teachings of the prophets which encourages me to believe, that those who have the gospel taught to them here will be able to make up their loss if they choose to wait for the next life to obey it. I would not advise anyone to take that chance. As I understand the scriptures, taking such a hazard would be fatal.

Amulek, after speaking of "the night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed," added:

Ye cannot say, when ye are brought to that awful crisis, that I will repent, that I will return to my God. Nay, ye cannot say this; for that same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that ye go out of this life, that same spirit will have power to possess your body in that eternal world.

For behold, if ye have procrastinated the day of your repentance even until death, behold, ye have become subjected to the spirit of the devil, and he doth seal you his; therefore, the Spirit of the Lord hath withdrawn from you, and hath no place in you, and the devil hath all power over you; and this is the final state of the wicked. (Alma 34:34-35.)

On this point of deferring obedience to the gospel, we might with profit consider the Savior's parable of the ten virgins. I do not remember any provision being made in that parable for the five foolish virgins to enter into the marriage at a later time. I do remember, however, that after the door was shut they, having in the meantime filled their lamps with oil, came saying, "Lord, Lord, open to us," and that his answer was, "Verily I say unto you, I know you not." (See Matt. 25:1-13.)

In 1831 the Lord continued with the lesson he had in mind to teach with this parable. Speaking to the Prophet Joseph, he specified some of the blessings to be received by the five wise virgins. Said he:

And at that day, when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins.

For they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived—verily I say unto you, they shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day.

And the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation.

For the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their king and their lawgiver. (D. & C. 45:56-59.)

No mention is made in this revelation of the whereabouts of the foolish virgins. Said the Prophet Joseph,

If men would acquire salvation they have got to be subject, before they leave this world, to certain rules and principles, which were fixed by an unalterable decree before the world was.

[Otherwise] the disappointment of hopes and expectations at the resurrection would be indescribably dreadful. (D. H. C. 6:50-51.)

In view of these teachings and the many others which carry the message that today is the day for us to perform our labors, it would seem to be wisdom on the part of every soul who has been taught the gospel, to here and now make a daily conscious and sincere effort to live it. And this effort should continue to the end of mortal life. Failing to make such an effort, a person identifies himself as one who does not believe the Lord, for, said he, "... if ye believe me, ye will labor while it is called today."

That we may, by laboring today, inherit the great blessings we have heard so much about in this conference, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve.

The Congregation will now join with the Singing Mothers in singing "Come O Thou Kings of Kings," under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall.

After the singing Elder Delbert L. Stapley will speak to us.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "Come, O Thou King of Kings."

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

ASSURE YOU, my brothers and and sisters, the southern route to this stand is no shorter than the northern route. I find it rather difficult to be in the caboose of conference speakers, particularly because

I am sitting on the last seat, realizing that many of my brethren have already given part of my message to you.

Through this conference my mind has been upon Brother Cowley. I want to say to you, my brothers and sisters, he was a man of God, one who exemplified the calling of apostleship in a high degree. We loved him; he was loved by the people. We were stirred by his inspiring messages.

Today I am glad to welcome into our Council Brother George Q. Morris to fill the vacancy caused by Brother Cowley's passing. Brother Morris is a strong and devoted leader. He brings great strength and wisdom to our council. With all my heart I support and sustain him, and offer him my help.

I welcome also Brother Sterling W. Sill. I am sure he will add greatly to the General Authorities in the quality of service and devotion he gives to the people of the Church.

Last Friday we had the delightful opportunity of listening to the reports and testimonies of the mission presidents. These men, under the direction of the Twelve, are responsible for the missionary program of the Church, which answers the charge of the Redeemer to his Church of the latter days to proclaim the message of the restored gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

The Lord said through the Prophet Joseph Smith for the elders of this Church to open their mouths and say to the world, Repent, repent, and prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand;

Yea, repent and be baptized, every one of you, for a remission of your sins; yea, be baptized even by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost.

Behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, this is my gospel; and remember that they shall have faith in me or they can in nowise be saved;

And upon this rock I will build my church; yea, upon this rock ye are built, and if ye continue, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you.

And ye shall remember the church articles and covenants to keep them. (D. & C. 33: 10-14.)

May I paraphrase that verse: "And ye shall remember the church articles (the laws, commandments, and doctrines) and covenants (the covenant of baptism, sacrament, priesthood, and of the temple, and all other holy ordinances) to keep them."

Wherefore, be faithful, praying always, having your lamps trimmed and burning, and oil with you, that you may be ready at the coming of the Bridegroom. (Ibid., 33:17.)

The Savior, appearing to the Nephites on this, the American continent, said,

... ye know the things that ye must do in my church; for the works which ye have seen me do that shall ye also do; ...

Therefore, if ye do these things blessed are ye, for ye shall be lifted up at the last day. (3 Nephi 27:21-22.)

The Lord again counseled the Nephites:

Therefore, whatsoever ye shall do, ye shall do it in my name; therefore ye shall call the church in my name; and ye shall call upon the Father in my name that he will bless the church for my sake.

And how be it my church save it be called in my name? For if a church be called in Moses' name then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name then it is my church, and then the Lord adds this significant phrase, if it so be that they are build upon my gospel.

And if it so be that the church is built upon my gospel then will the Father show forth his own works in it. (Ibid., 27:7-8, 10.)

My brothers and sisters, I testify that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is built upon the true gospel of Jesus Christ. It does bear his name and does show forth the works of God in it. I call your attention to the specific and general information given Sunday morning by President McKay of the growth and the progress of the Church. The Church provides for the temporal and spiritual needs of its people. Its missionaries bear the gospel message to all nations. It is set up after the organization of the primitive Church, with prophets, apostles, evangelists, etc., and with authority divinely bestowed through the priesthood of God to officiate in all the saving ordinances of the gospel to perfect and exalt man.

We learn in the writings of Nephi that Satan has no power over the hearts of people who dwell in righteousness. The evil and wickedness present in the world today show the power Satan has over the hearts of people, and therefore the promotion of righteousness among men is the important duty of God's servants, and thus they prepare all his children against the days of tribulation preceding the Savior's coming to earth again.

Nephi again admonished his people:

For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water; and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost.

And now, my beloved brethren, after ye have gotten into this straight and narrow path, I would ask if all is done? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for ye have not come thus far save it were by the word of Christ with unshaken faith in him, relying wholly upon the merits of him who is mighty to save.

Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life. (2 Nephi 31:17, 19-20.)

The beloved King Benjamin counseled his people:

... I would desire that ye should consider on the blessed and happy state of those that keep the commandments of God. For behold, they are blessed in all things, both temporal and spiritual; and if they hold out faithful to the end they are received into heaven, that thereby they may dwell with God in a state of never-ending happiness. O remember, remember that these things are true; for the Lord God hath spoken it. (Mosiah 2:41.)

My brothers and sisters, I would plead for faith on the part of the membership of this Church, the faith that is typical of a child, teachable, eager to learn, willing to accept and to obey, not blindly, but with understanding. I am pleading with you who have entered into the straight and narrow path through faith, repentance, baptism, and receiving the Holy Ghost, to press forward and worthily comply with every ordinance of the gospel.

If men were offered material riches as a reward for years of devoted service, no doubt a decision to accept would be promptly given, even though the price to be paid might overtax their strength and undermine their health. God offers eternal life, glory, exaltation, and the association of himself and Son as a reward to those who diligently serve him to the end of their days. He has no greater gift to bestow. Yet, because of the intangible nature of this gift and the weakness of people's faith, they fail to accept and follow the conditions to obtain this state of peace and happiness in celestial glory.

If men will open their hearts to truth, the Holy Ghost will stimulate their faith to accept the revelations and follow the counsel of divinely appointed leaders. Faith is a gift from God, to be earnestly sought for. It cannot be the type of faith exhibited by Thomas, who would not accept his fellow workers' word that Jesus had risen and appeared unto them, unless he had the privilege of feeling the prints of the nails in his hands and thrusting his own hand into the side of the Savior. It cannot be the type of faith of those who seek after signs upon which they might establish faith.

The Lord revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith 121 years ago the Word of Wisdom, the Lord's law of health, showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days and given for a principle with promise. Many have doubted, and by their acts have refused to accept this revelation to be a word of wisdom. The inviting advertising appeal and enticing claims of tobacco interests are listened to and accepted by men and women against their Creator's revealed truth that tobacco is not good for man. But now that science is proving cancer to be linked with tobacco use, many are dropping the habit through fear of this dreaded and often incurable disease. Why will men set at naught the revelations of God about good health habits taught in the Word of Wisdom and yield to habit-forming products from plants or herbs that are detrimental to their systems or bodily functions?

Daily we see the disastrous results of strong drink—accidents on the highways, homes broken, wives and children suffering and in want, oftentimes deserted and helpless, with no hope to live normal and happy lives. The Lord has said,

That inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father. . . .

And, again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies. (D. & C. 89:5, 7.)

When these revealed truths are verified by scientific research in the field of health, thus becoming actual knowledge, it makes the faith of the so-called believer appear weak and presumptive, and also clearly demonstrates rebellious and disobedient attitudes, prompted no doubt by a feeling of restricted freedoms. Of what value, my brothers and sisters, is faith if people have lost their privilege to exercise it? Can God be pleased with people of little or no faith?

Listen to the words of Alma:

Yea, there are many who do say: If thou wilt show unto us a sign from heaven, then we shall know of a surety; then we shall believe.

Now I ask, is this faith? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for if a man knoweth a thing he hath no cause to believe, for he knoweth it.

And now as I said concerning faith—faith is not to have a perfect knowledge of things; therefore if ye have faith ye hope for things which are not seen, which are true. (Alma 32:17-18, 21.)

And this is the type of faith, my brothers and sisters, that Latter-day Saints should have, and recognize that scripture is from God, revealed through the Holy Ghost for the blessing and for the good of God's children, and being our Creator, certainly he would not give us any principle or reveal any truth that was not for our good.

Now may I call your attention to the Church welfare program. This plan was given by revelation and has been implemented in this generation of uncertainties and perplexities to provide the temporal needs and to increase spirituality among our people. Is this plan operating in the homes of the Latter-day Saints?

To be realistic we have to view present economic conditions with some concern. The economy has tightened up. Unemployment is a problem. Church members are experiencing difficulties. Can we depend upon reported improved business trends and non-stable commodity prices to restore and assure a high economic level? What is the condition of our personal affairs? Are we in debt with instalment payments and heavy obligations on our hands? Do we have cash funds in savings or on deposit?

If we should be adversely affected, even temporarily, can we sustain ourselves for a reasonable period without help? We have all been counseled to set our personal affairs in good order. Those who have heeded this counsel, I firmly believe, are wise. Your Church follows its own counsel, cushioning its finances and storing welfare goods to protect the work of the Church, and insofar as possible, the welfare of its members.

Our strength as a people is in unity, emphasized so often by President Clark. This unity is made possible by keeping the commandments of God.

I am firmly convinced our greatest blessings as a Church and people come collectively and not individually. If God were pleased with us individually, it follows he would be pleased with us collectively. Each of us, as an integral part of God's kingdom, either contributes beneficially or adversely to the welfare and blessing of our fellow Church members.

I call your attention to the great patriarch, Enoch, who lived so close to God that he walked and talked with him and was given great power in the priesthood, to the perfecting and sanctifying of his people. It is said, in the writings of Moses:

... And the Lord blessed the land, and they were blessed upon the mountains, and upon the high places, and did flourish. (Moses 7:17.)

And Enoch and all his people walked with God, and he dwelt in the midst of Zion; and it came to pass that Zion was not, for God received it up into his own bosom; and from thence went forth the saying, Zion is fled. (Ibid., 7:69.)

Then we read the account of the Savior's visit to the Nephites where he established his kingdom among them. Righteousness was taught the people by the disciples whom Jesus chose, and a condition of righteousness prevailed among all the people. We read in Fourth Nephi that:

... every man did deal justly one with another.

And they had all things common among them; therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.

... they did walk after the commandments which they had received from their Lord. . . .

And it came to pass that there was no contention in the land, because of the love of God which did dwell in the hearts of the people.

... and surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created by the hand of God. (4 Nephi 2-3, 12, 15-16.)

Now in contrast to these two seemingly perfect conditions we have examples of unrighteousness on the part of the people whereby they did not enjoy the full blessings of God that he held out to them through promise if they would but serve him and keep his commandments.

Moses, the great prophet, lawgiver, and friend of God, sought diligently to sanctify the children of Israel that they might behold the face of their God. They would not listen, but hardened their hearts; therefore, God took Moses, the Holy Priesthood, and the gospel out of their midst and left with them the Lesser Priesthood and the law of carnal commandments, which priesthood and law does not have the power to perfect nor sanctify people.

And then again in our day, as recorded in the 105th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord said:

Behold, I say unto you, were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now.

But behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I required at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them;

And are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom;

And Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom; otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself.

Therefore, in consequence of the transgressions of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion. (D. & C. 105:2-5, 9.)

When Brigham Young established our people in the tops of these mountains, he promised them that if they would keep the commandments of God and serve the Lord, that the Lord would temper the elements for their sakes, and their lands should produce bountifully.

Now, I recognize, my brothers and sisters, that a condition of righteousness is becoming better and stronger among the people of the Church. I feel this is true as I make my visits to the stakes of Zion. However, there is room for improvement, and I am sure if we would put into operation the plans that have been developed to reactivate the inactive, that we could bring about a condition of righteousness that would permit the blessings of God to flow to us in rich measure.

In the 42nd Section of the Doctrine and Covenants called the revelation embracing the Law of the Lord, the Lord said to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

And again, every person who belongeth to this church of Christ, shall observe to keep all the commandments and covenants of the church. (Ibid., 42:78.)

And the Savior said as he walked among men,

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. (John 8:31.)

In closing, my brothers and sisters, I would plead with the Saints and with all peoples to have the kind of faith that leads to good works, to accept the atoning sacrifice and redeeming power of the Son of God, to keep all his laws and commandments, to walk uprightly and in all holiness before him, that the blessings of heaven might be theirs to enjoy; and his Church prosper and fulfil its great destiny of saving the souls of men.

I bear my testimony and witness to you and all men that this work is of God, and therefore true. May we all enjoy that witness and that testimony, and do all within our power to step forward the interests of this great kingdom, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

SIR ALEXANDER FLEMING

I am no orator. This is the first time I have ever addressed a religious gathering. I may say that the chance of attending this Conference in Salt Lake City was one of the attractions which brought me to the West.

My object in coming to the United States was to attend the Conference of Doctors in Cleveland, but when Dr. Bryner suggested the possibility of being in Salt Lake City at the time of this

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder Delbert L. Stapley of the Council of the Twelve.

Many years ago it was said that great men taken up in any way are profitable company. "A great man is a living light fountain," said Carlisle, "in whose radiance it is always good and pleasant to be near."

I took the privilege of sending a note to Dr. Bryner, asking if Sir Alexander Fleming would not say a few words to this congregation this afternoon, and received the word, "Yes, Dr. Fleming will."

Thank you, Dr. Fleming, and while you are coming to the rostrum, I will tell the audience that Sir Alexander Fleming would not say a few words to this congregation this afternoon, and received the word, "Yes, Dr. Fleming will."

We welcome Dr. Fleming as a great man, and will appreciate a few words from him to this congregation.

Conference, that plus other things brought us to the West.

I am not of your Church. I belong to the Church of Scotland, into which I was born some 72 years ago, but no one could fail to be impressed as I have been this afternoon by attending this Conference and hearing the speeches, and I am very glad that I have been given the opportunity of saying thank you for the privilege I have had in coming here, and I can only say thank you again, and wish you well.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

NOW, my brethren and sisters, the hour is drawing to a close, wherein our great conference gathering will soon have become an event of the past. The sessions themselves will be mere history, but the messages, we hope, will ever remain on the tablets of our memories and will become moving factors in our daily lives.

There are one or two features I should like to name before announcing the closing hymn and benediction. It has been most gratifying to see the number of young people, college boys and girls, who have attended these sessions. I refer not only to the 350 or 400 students from Brigham Young University but to others with them, who have taken places throughout the congregation and who have manifested an interest in spiritual things. This is most encouraging. They have come voluntarily showing their eagerness to know something about the real things of life.

It has been most gratifying to note how the Spirit of the Lord has directed the remarks of members of the Council of the Twelve, the Assistants, the Seventy, and the Bishopric, and how frequently and impressively the messages have been directed to the young folks. We love them. We have confidence in them. We hope the messages will be read by others whom they have represented.

And now in conclusion I should like to say just one word or two and associate the thoughts with a very remarkable saying of the Savior. He repeated it several times. It is a paradoxical statement. "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

That form is recorded in the tenth chapter of Matthew, and over in the sixteenth chapter the Savior repeats it again in a little different way: "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it."

The pith of that paradox is found in the use of the word life. You cannot take it literally, that you are spending your life, your mortal life, that you are going to sacrifice your life in mortality, but it rather suggests two planes in life: the baser and the higher, the animal and the spiritual. You can apply it, with those two ideas in mind, in any phase of our activity.

In closing this conference I should like to apply it in two phases. First, either saving our lives or losing them in the home. Children may lose their lives in attempting to save them. The home is the foundation of society. It is a sacred institution to members of the Church of Christ. We believe in the eternity of the marriage covenant, in harmony in the home. Indeed our ideal is to have home just a little taste of heaven. Children constitute a very important part of the Latter-day Saint home.

We believe in obedience of children to parents. Young people in their teens particularly, strike out to find pleasure, to save themselves, to seek to gratify desire; they seek to achieve some sensation, some thrill, which may or may not be in harmony with the wishes of the parents. If out of harmony with the desire and advice of the parents, then those children seek to save themselves and in so doing may lose the happiness they seek.

Indeed, we find it applicable even among friends. One of our writers, not called a poet, but he is a very good, practical philosopher, Rotarian, said, and this is to you young people:

"You ought to be true for the sake of the folks

Who believe you are true.

If you're false to yourself, be the blemish but small,

You have injured your friends; you've been false to them all."

And this is better:

"You ought to be fine for the sake of the folks

Who think you are fine.

If others have faith in you, doubly you're bound

To stick to the line.

It's not only on you that dishonor descends:

You can't hurt yourself without hurting your friends."

Can you lose yourself for the good of your friends? If so, you will be happy. Higher than that, can you lose your impulses, your desires, for the love you have for your parents? If so, you will save your life and your home.

Husbands, that applies to you. Very frequently discords arise in the home because husbands desire to save their own dignity and have their own way, have their own wishes carried out. Wives desire the same. Some exercise their prerogative to have the last word. Husbands are sometimes even more eager to have it than wives. Each really is trying to save himself or herself, and instead of having harmony and peace in the home there arises discord. Instead of saving the life of harmony in the home, you lose it, merely because you are seeking to save your own selfish life, or have your own selfish way. Better to lose that desire. Say nothing, and in losing your desire and that feeling of enmity, of ruling, of governing, you say nothing, and you gain your life in the home.

In a broader sense you can apply that to life. Browning in that great poem "Paracelsus" illustrates that same truth. You remember how he started out to save himself, that is, to gain knowledge as a great scientist with the intention of handing it down haughtily to the people. Festus, his friend, said, "You had better not withdraw from the people." That is the great benefactor.

But Paracelsus was haughty. He was proud. When Festus warned him, Paracelsus answered, saying, "Festus, are there not two experiences in the life of a diver? One, when a beggar he prepares to plunge, one when a prince who rises with his pearls. Festus, I plunge." His friend said, "We await you when you rise."

Years afterwards, after a life of scientific inquiry, and a successful life, his friend found him on his deathbed in a Greek conjurer's house. Without going into the story I will merely say, Paracelsus recognizing his friend, said: "Festus, I have found the secret of life."

"What is it? All that I have depends on that answer."

And the great philosopher said: "It is this: Live in all things outside yourself by love. That was the life of God. It ought to be our life."

In harmony with that, I read what the Prophet Joseph said, quoting the passage with which our conference opened:

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day.

"Therefore, if ye have desires to serve God ye are called to the work; . . .

"And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

"Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence." (D. & C. 4:2-3, 5-6.)

"He that would save his life" in the home, in business, in society, in politics, and particularly in association with his fellow men should lose that life for the good of others. "He that will lose his life for my sake shall find it." (See Matt. 16:25.)

God bless you stake presidents, presidencies, high councilmen, bishoprics of wards, members of Melchizedek Priesthood quorums, Aaronic Priesthood quorums, members of the auxiliary organizations—Relief Society, Sunday School, Young Men's and Young Women's Mutual Associations, Primary Associations.

Now I have included the entire membership of the Church, excepting the little babes. I repeat, God bless you that the spirit of this great conference may go with you to bring peace into your hearts as you lose yourselves for the good of others; harmony in your homes as you curtail that impetuous tendency to cause discord, as you control that tongue and do not say the thing that hurts.

God bless the youth throughout the world, members of the Church particularly, that they may seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, that all else may be added unto them, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the Conference convened in the great Tabernacle promptly at 10 o'clock a.m., Friday, October 1.

The President of the Church, President David O. McKay presided and conducted the services. He made the following introductory remarks:

President David O. McKay:

This is the opening session of the 125th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

All the General Authorities are in attendance except Elder Adam S. Bennion, who is recuperating from a recent operation, who is desirous of being present but we advise him to follow the admonition and advice of the doctor, not to exert himself during his recuperation; and Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin, who has been confined to the hospital and to his home for several weeks. We have a letter from Bishop Wirthlin saying he is feeling well, and he sends his love and greetings particularly "to all members of the Church through you, my constant prayer for them. My prayers go out and love go to all members who hold the Aaronic Priesthood, as deacons, teachers, or priests, including their officers and supervisors."

Elder Joseph Anderson is Clerk of the Conference.

These services, and all general sessions of the Conference, will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, over a public address system, and by television.

The services this morning are also being televised over KSL-TV, channel 5, of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over nine radio stations in Utah, Idaho, and Arizona. The names of these stations have already been announced to the radio audience.

We desire to express our appreciation to these various radio stations for their courtesy and cooperation in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts.

You will note these gorgeous flowers arranged here on the rostrum. They are semi-tropical flowers from the Saints in Hawaii. You will be interested probably, some of you, to note that you find among them the red ginger, the torch ginger, antherium, the croton, the bird of paradise, and draecena. We express through President Haycock our sincere appreciation to the Saints who have put forth such efforts and expense in furnishing for our delight these rare, brilliant specimens of the Creator's handiwork.

We acknowledge the presence of the following distinguished visitors and others who hold prominent positions in educational circles and in the State. We are not sure that we have been able to observe all who are present, but we make note with satisfaction, as you do, of our fellow laborer, Elder Ezra Taft Benson, United States Secretary of Agriculture, who is in his accustomed place with the Twelve; also United States Senator Wallace F. Bennett; United States Representative, the Honorable William A. Dawson. I have not seen the Governor this morning. We note the presence of the Mayor of the City, Honorable Earl J. Glade. We note the presence of the Secretary of State, Mr. Lamont Toronto. We have representing education, the President of the University of Utah, Dr. A. Ray Olpin; we welcome him. We have not seen President Dixon yet of the Agricultural College. We see Dr. M. Lynn Bennion, Superintendent of Salt Lake City schools; also the President of Snow College, Dr. Lester B. Whetton, and others. We welcome you, and express satisfaction and pleasure in your presence and your cooperative spirit.

When there is a mother in the house, matters always speed well. We have many mothers here assembled in the Relief Society Singing Mothers group, whom we welcome with all our hearts, and love. They will furnish the music for this morning's session, under the able and professional direction of Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen. These mothers come from Salt Lake, Cache Valley, and Southern Idaho areas. Elder Frank W. Asper is at the organ.

Friday, October 1

First Day

We shall begin this session by the Relief Society Singing Mothers singing: "Incline Thine Ear," under Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen. The prayer will be offered by Elder Howard W. Hunter, President of the Pasadena Stake.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang the anthem, "Incline Thine Ear," after which the opening prayer was offered by President Howard W. Hunter of the Pasadena Stake.

President David O. McKay:

The Relief Society Singing Mothers, will now favor us with "Open Our Eyes," conducted by Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen. The solo will be sung by Sister Anna Jean Skidmore.

After the singing, Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, will read the vital statistical data, the changes in ward and stake organizations, and the obituaries of the Church.

Singing by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, "Open Our Eyes."

President David O. McKay:

Sister Madsen, Sister Skidmore, and mothers, all who heard that beautiful singing would have me say, "Thank you, that is gloriously inspiring!"

Brother Joseph Anderson will now give the statistics.

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, read the following report:

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, has just read the vital statistical data, changes in ward and stake organizations, and one obituary, of the Church since last April.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

BELOVED brethren and sisters: Few of you realize the great responsibility of this moment. I humbly seek your sympathetic and prayerful assistance, and above all the guiding influence of the Spirit of the Lord.

At this, the opening session of the 125th semi-annual conference of the Church, it gives me great satisfaction and joy, in behalf of the General Authorities of the Church, to extend a hearty welcome to you stake presidencies, bishoprics, and to all members who are present at this service here in the Tabernacle and in other groups on Temple Square, and to those listening in by radio and television. May the spirit of unity and oneness characterize this great session this morning.

You join me, I am sure, when we extend love and greetings to members of the Church and to interested, loyal friends throughout the world, in Canada and Mexico, in Europe, South Africa, South America, New Zealand, Australia, the Polynesian Islands, in Japan and China, Greenland, and Iceland, to groups in Korea and the Philippines, on Guam, and other islands of the Pacific. May the spirit of this conference be felt by them through the mysterious medium of soul communion, even before they read the minutes of our great conference.

(1) To inform the membership of general conditions—whether the Church is progressing or retrogressing, economically, ecclesiastically, or spiritually. (2) To commend true merit. (3) To express gratitude for divine guidance. (4) To give instruction “in principles, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel.” (5) To proclaim the restoration, with divine authority to administer in all the ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and to declare, quoting the Apostle Peter, that “there is none other name under heaven given among men” than Jesus Christ “whereby we must be saved.” (Acts 4:12.) (6) To admonish and inspire to continue in greater activity.

When thinking and praying in anticipation of this moment, I felt impressed to say a word about what the Church is doing to help parents in rearing their children, having in mind particularly the teen-agers of our Church. In a very familiar poem a mother says to her son:

“Do you know that your soul is of my soul such a part,
That you seem to be fibre and core of my heart?”

* * * *

“Be yours then the task, if task it should be,
To force the proud world to do homage to me,
Be sure it will say, when its verdict
you’ve won,
She reaped as she sowed, Lol this is her son.”

—Margaret Johnston Graflin

I should like to say a word in commendation of the groups in the Church who are helping you mothers and fathers to have your children bring you honor. Before doing that, however, I should like to make a brief report to you of conditions.

Through the loyalty and faithfulness of the members of the Church in paying tithes and offerings, by income from investments and generous contributions from well-wishing, devoted friends, the Church is entirely out of debt, strong financially, and working under a budget carefully planned to meet all obligations incurred in the great building program of chapels, temples, recreation halls, classrooms, throughout the organized stakes and missions of the world.

We commend all of you, and each of you, for your faithfulness in thus contributing to the finances of the Church, without which it would be impossible to supply the needs of a rapidly increasing membership.

We have just heard the report given by the Clerk of the Conference of the organization of new wards, branches, and stakes during the last six months.

Friday, October 1

First Day

The growth of the Church at home and abroad is most encouraging.

With this increase in membership are evidences of increased spirituality. Spirituality results in the greatest good when expressed in acts, not merely in day-dreams. "... shew me thy faith without thy works," said James, "and I will shew thee my faith by my works." (James 2:18.)

The great majority of the members of the Church are seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. This is shown, first in contributions in cash and labor in building four hundred chapels at an average cost last year of $80,000 each. In addition to this, the people of Southern California, for example, have contributed in cash toward the building and furnishing of the Los Angeles Temple, over one million dollars. On January 2, 1952, there was a meeting called of all stake presidencies in the Southern California district, at which those present voted unanimously to raise a million dollars to be paid as the building progressed. Today we are pleased to report that pledges for that amount and more have been fulfilled.

Another example of spirituality is the missionary work. There are at present 3457 full-time missionaries laboring in the forty-three missions, supported financially either by themselves or by their parents. There are 7188 missionaries in organized stakes, making a total number of missionaries paying their own expenses of 10,645.

Melchizedek Priesthood quorum work has never been more effective. The Senior Aaronic Priesthood activity is giving results unprecedented. The female Relief Society, the first auxiliary organized in the Church, is carrying on at its usual high standards, its influence extending beyond the boundaries of the Church as exemplified by the recent trip abroad by its worthy president, Sister Belle Smith Spafford, accompanied by Sister Marba C. Josephson of the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association. All of you should read their reports.

To all who are working devotedly in the Melchizedek Priesthood quorums, and in the Relief Society, we extend our love, confidence, and commendation.

I should like to commend, having in mind this Church work with teenagers, the Presiding Bishopric, the ward bishoprics, and the auxiliary general superintendents, general presidencies, and general boards for their earnest and most effective effort to guide the youth of the Church.

Perhaps the Church could do more for the delinquents who get into the clutches of the law, but I feel impressed to refer to agencies working to prevent young people from becoming delinquents. For approximately three thousand years men have read the admonition: "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Prov. 22:6.) The word train means "to lead, or to direct the growth of, to form by instruction, discipline, drill, to educate."

Three groups carry the responsibility of training children: First, the family; second, the Church; third, the state. The most important of these is the family. By divine edict the Lord has placed upon parents the responsibility, first to teach the doctrine of repentance; second, faith in Christ, the Son of the living God; third, baptism and confirmation; fourth, to teach children to pray; fifth, to teach children to walk uprightly before the Lord. Parents who shirk this responsibility will have to answer for the sin of neglect.

A newborn babe is the most helpless creature in the world. The protecting care of parenthood is essential to its survival, as well as its growth. It must be led and directed by instruction, discipline, drill, and proper education. Our most precious possessions are not our abundant harvests, nor our orchards yielding luscious fruit, nor our waterways, nor our million miles of paved highways, nor our oil wells, nor our rich mines of copper, silver and gold, nor even of uranium—our most precious possessions, our treasures of eternity, are our children. These merit and should receive our greatest and our most constant care and guidance.

Daniel Webster was right when he said:

"If we work upon marble, it will perish;
 If we work upon brass, time will efface it;
 If we rear temples, they will crumble into dust;
 But if we work upon immortal souls,
 If we imbue them with principles,
 With the just fear of the Creator and love of fellow men,
 We engrave on those tablets something which will brighten eternity."

The bringing of children into the world bears with it great responsibilities and opens to view the noblest purpose of life, namely, a co-partnership with deity "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." (Moses 1:39.)

The most effective way to teach is by example. It is the child's nature to be active. It is the duty of the parents and of guardians so to direct that activity, as to lead children to know God's love, and the happiness found in obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ. Parents should ever keep in mind that admonition is of much more avail when example conforms to the admonition given.

You will be gratified, and thinking men generally will be interested, to know what the Aaronic Priesthood quorums and the auxiliary boards are doing in a practical way to assist you parents to train your children to become upright in character, loyal citizens of their country, and faithful members of the Church.

Recently I sent a letter to the presidency of the Aaronic Priesthood, to the general superintendencies of the Sunday School and YMMIA, and to the general presidencies of the YWMA and to the Primary—the five groups dealing directly with the young people of the Church. In that letter I inquired as to how effectively they are attempting to contact all children and youth in these great organizations. Here are some of the headings of that letter: First, give your total membership, your total enrolment; second, give the percent of those who should or might be enrolled; third, method or methods of contacting the indifferent; fourth, how may parents render more effective co-operation; and fifth, what have been your outstanding achievements during 1953 and 1954.

In the Aaronic Priesthood, we learned that they have an enrolment for the young men under twenty-one of 63,641. The percent of the enrolment of the total members that should be enrolled, 92.79. In the Sunday School, they have an enrolment of 983,025; 91 percent of those who should be enrolled. They had a weekly attendance of 381,656, or 35.5 percent of the total membership of the Church. The Young Men's Mutual, May 31, 1953, had an enrolment of 129,528, and on a corresponding day this year, 140,754; an average weekly attendance of 88,546. Every boy or man between the ages of twelve and twenty-four is enrolled in that organization, every one; 31,856 of these are enrolled in scouting; 25,368 are enrolled as Explorers.

The Young Women's enrolment for 1953 was 124,079 plus visitors of 11,342. To date (note the increase) the enrolment is 134,303, with a weekly average of visitors of 10,384, or a total of 144,676, and the average attendance is 64% of those enrolled.

One cannot help having a pretty warm spot in one's heart for these teen-agers in Mutual and Sunday School.

All members of the Church from the ages of twelve to twenty-five in the Young Women's are enrolled, and others.

Now we enter the Primary. The total number of children whose lives were touched by Primary in '52-53—200,000; 83% of the children of the Church of Primary age are enrolled; 69% of the children enrolled are attending Primary; 142,745 children are enrolled in the Stakes; 6,841 non-member children are enrolled in the stakes; 68% of the children enrolled are in attendance each week at Primary; 13,000 Latter-day Saint children are enrolled in the missions. This has increased on an average of 1,000 each year for the last five years.

The Primary Association has assumed the direction of scouting for the eleven-year-old boys. According to a survey made in March, 92% of the eleven-year-old boys were enrolled in the Guide Patrols; 109 stakes, six missions have organized Cub Scout dens and packs since the Primary Association has sponsored the Cub scouting as requested by the First Presidency.

Now, besides these auxiliaries and quorums, we have our seminaries. The total enrolment for seminaries and institutes in 1953 was 36,074; 1954—39,022. The average attendance for seminaries in '54, 32,226, or 94% of the enrolment. That speaks well for our students in colleges and high schools.

As an illustration of the influence of the seminaries upon teen-agers, and also as a lesson in co-operation of parents, I shall take the time to quote to you the following, taken from the September-October 1954, issue of a national magazine, not of our Church, Faith Today. The article is entitled "Teen-age Frontier," written by Leola Anderson, for a copy of which I am indebted to President Ernest Wilkinson [of Brigham Young University]. It is designated by one of the editors as "one of the most heartening signs of the times." Here are a few quotations from it:

"The luminous hands of the clock beside the boy's bed point to 5:45 a.m. The alarm goes off. It has been raining all night; the air outside is cold and wet—and still black.

"Groggily the boy gropes about for the button to shut off the noise. Resolutely he swings his feet out onto the cold floor. For a moment he drops his tired face into his hands. It was 12:30 last night before he finished sweeping at the supermarket, and 1 o'clock when he got home to bed. It has been like that all week. In his drooping body is a desperate urge to slip back into bed.

"That's why he stands up quickly and moves on into the shower. Because this morning and every school morning he drives seven miles to attend a class at 7 o'clock. It is a very special class, which he would not think of missing, so long as he is able to stand.

"What kind of class is it? A Bible-study class.

"Would you find it incredible that this boy is one of 1,700 typical, fun-loving teen-agers who get up every morning to attend a 7 a.m. to 8 a.m. Bible class before going on to high school? They do it without credit, without coercion, and often against tremendous odds. They do it five days a week, nine months a year, despite daylight-saving time.

"Furthermore, so great is the demand for this early morning instruction that next September (that's this month) 90 classes will open to meet the requests of 2,500 students in Southern California alone.

"Incredible? Not at all. This has been going on in the Los Angeles area for the last four years. It is a part of the program of daily religious education offered by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, a program which last year served 38,000 young men and women in seven western states and in Canada and Mexico.

"With the Bible as text, emphasis is placed on a practical application of its teachings to the lives of youth. What better blueprint for living was ever recorded than that preserved by the prophets? The answers to the questions of modern youth, as uncertainties pile up on them in an increasingly chaotic world, are all found in the experience of the past.

"This is the key to why these young people leave cosy, warm beds on chill winter mornings to attend daily classes that are not accepted either for high school graduation or college entrance credit.

"Neither are these selected students. They are not even all members of the same church. There's a piquant little redhead in one class who answered our question this way: 'No, I'm not a Mormon. I simply couldn't understand why my best friend insisted on getting up so early to come down here, so I came along one morning for laughs. I got so interested I asked to register. I haven't missed a day since!'

"No, they are not selected excepting by their own desire to learn. They represent a cross-section of young America with all its problems. They are average kids looking for a defense against the grim spectre of fear and destruction that now shrouds their future.

"And how do these Bible teachers meet that challenge?

"By teaching respect for the inspired Constitution of the United States with its God-given liberty, regard for the rights of others, and love for all mankind. By showing the wisdom of avoiding the mistakes of the past, and fostering a dynamic and living faith in God and the ultimate triumph of good. All this through daily basic instruction in the Master's written word. . . .

"Teachers are also meeting the challenge by putting into the hands of the young people the tools of self-government and teaching them their use, thus preparing them for leadership, when in the process of inexorable time they will become our leaders.

"In the words of one vivacious brunette, president of her class: 'Every senior student gets a turn being a class officer. We learn confidence in ourselves and how to do the job. Besides, when you're responsible for the whole class, it makes you think twice before you make a decision. . . .'

"This teamwork (referring to Bible class and to the baseball team practicing in Church recreation hall after school particularly), one student says, 'This teamwork is also noticeable in the group spirit of the classroom.'

"The youth of America are studying together, singing together, praying together, and loving it. In one class, five nationalities—White Russian, Mexican, Italian, Greek, and American—work as one. . . .

"There is a carry-over, too, with the students. Bill Kemsley, a husky youth, was graduated last June from the first three-year course. Bill drove sixteen miles each morning from his home in San Fernando to a North Hollywood class. He transported a carload of students to class and back to San Fernando. The second year he transferred to North Hollywood High.

"I wanted to get away from my old companions,' he said seriously. 'They weren't bad fellows, you understand, but I guess my standards had changed. Two of those boys are in jail now,' he added thoughtfully.

"Parents, too, no longer show inertia where this program is concerned. Their comments read like a before-and-after commercial: 'I used to have such a time getting Mary out of bed in the morning. Now she gets me up!' . . .

"And what is being done," concludes the author, "in Southern California to open a frontier for youth to live and learn the fundamentals of peace and progress could be duplicated anywhere in America by any similar group."

To the question in that letter sent to the auxiliaries, "How may parents render more effective co-operation?" came answers common to every article: First, parents should become acquainted with lessons and plans of the organization; second, take rather than send their children; third, set a proper example.

In conclusion, parents, if you would have your children pray, then teach them to pray in the home. If you would have your children refrain from taking the name of God in vain, then let them never hear profanity pass your lips. If you would have your teenagers sense the value of keeping themselves true to their future husbands or wives, then let chastity and loyalty to your marriage covenant pervade the atmosphere of your own home. If you would have them refrain from the use of tobacco, then you refrain from the use of tobacco yourself.

Brethren and sisters, in presenting this general picture of what the Church is doing for teen-agers I have had in mind, first, to commend the workers for their diligence and efficiency. God bless them. And second, to show how effective the Church is in its divine organization in touching the life and activities of every member therein. We see how true are Paul's words when he wrote: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

"For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

"Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." (Eph. 4:11-13.)

In conclusion, and by way of testimony, the gospel is truly the power of God, and the Church the divine means of bringing, first, satisfaction and joy to the individual, here and now; second, bringing harmony in the home; third, more general understanding and resultant peace among the nations—what a message!—and fourth, salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of our Father.

With all my soul I pray that the Lord will hasten the day when the influence of this divine organization will be felt more potently for the good of the inhabitants of the world, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP CARL W. BUEHNER

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

AT A RECENT quarterly conference, a high councilman was invited to speak, and when he came to the pulpit he expressed the situation in these classic words: "Every time I stand up to speak my brain sits down." I have wondered what happens to me, but I think that describes it about as well as anything.

I hope, brothers and sisters, you will have a little prayer in your hearts for me, and for all those who are asked to participate in this great conference of the Church. I have been lifted and inspired by the powerful message of the President. I am sure we were all thrilled with the statistics given, to learn that we are making progress and that we are headed in the right direction. President McKay is an inspiration to everyone and I suppose the Number One missionary in the Church. He lifts people wherever he goes. I have often thought we might well adopt a new slogan in the Church—something to this effect: "Let's follow the Leader." We cannot follow him all over the world as he has traveled far and wide, but if we would show the same enthusiasm for the work that has been assigned to us, as he does for the work that is his, we would have even greater records in our Church.

I would like to say a few words this morning about another program of great magnitude in the Church that I have learned to love since I have been very close to it, and that is the ward teaching program. I would like to commend the leadership of the Church for the progress we have made in this activity. We are visiting more families than we have ever visited before. I think the effectiveness of our messages in the homes are more impressive than they have ever been. This year our records indicate that we are visiting thirty thousand more homes every month than we visited a year ago. This is very commendable.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Carl W. Buehner of the Presiding Bishopric will now address us, after which we shall hear from the Choir and congregation, "O Ye Mountains High."

I feel this about ward teaching—that it is the one program in the Church that literally extends its arms around the entire Church. That other units only have the ministry of their particular organization, but if we do one hundred percent ward teaching, we will have a visit in the home of every member of the Church every month. In these days where there is great concern and many problems, I know of no finer program than to have two fine ward teachers visit and bless each home, leave a message of inspiration and encouragement, and invite the membership of the Church to attend the various meetings of the Church. It becomes, to me, the one organization that can get into every home in the Church every month.

What do you ward teachers find in the homes of the members of the Church? I have been a ward teacher. We enter homes where there is a wonderful spirit and a fine influence. We also visit homes where there are young men and women in the service of our country, others who are off in the mission fields of the Church. There are frequently young people away from home attending school. Parents are concerned about the temptations confronting these youngsters. We can bring cheer, consolation, and comfort, and make them feel good about the wisdom and mission of these young people.

We find homes where there are now many economic difficulties, people in distress. These should be reported to the bishop. We find homes where there is illness. We find homes where there is not too much interest in the activities of the Church. We find homes where there is a little criticism toward the General Authorities of the Church, and even persons critical of some of the teachings of the Church. I want to tell you, brethren and sisters, ward teaching can perform a great mission as it gets into the homes of the members and brings a spirit of love and appreciation, of inspiration, of fellowship, and of invitation to join the activities of this great Church.

So, I have learned to love this program. I have learned to feel its strength. We have already heard this morning statistics indicating progress that has been made. I would like to feel that some of the success being achieved is due in a large measure to more effective ward teaching and because we are doing a better job by visiting more homes than ever before.

I remember some time ago Bishop LeGrand Richards announcing to the Church that any bishop should be ashamed who did not have at least twenty-five percent of his membership at sacrament meeting. We all thought this could not be done. What has happened? In the last few months we have had a Church average of as high as thirty-one percent; several months of thirty percent. Even in the summer-time when our activities have declined some, we have not had less than twenty-six percent.

Brethren, I have the same feeling toward this great program for senior Aaronic Priesthood groups in the Church. When it was announced that we should organize these men into priesthood quorums, we received protests from all over the Church claiming, "It cannot be done. We do not get enough of these men into our wards to even have a group."

This morning I would like to tell you that we have over 1600 quorums of senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood that we did not have before the program was announced to the Church. So these things can be done.

I appreciate, too, some of the faithful men who have worked in this program. There are those that you hear very little about. Recently at a quarterly conference one man came to me and said, "Bishop, I have been a ward teacher for sixty-two years." Sixty-two years! I thought that might be as long as anyone had been a ward teacher. We wrote a little article in the Church Section of the Deseret News following that information, asking if there had been any who had served longer, and if so we would like to hear from them. We got a letter back from a man who said, "I am now ninety-six years of age. I became a ward teacher when I was twelve. I have been a ward teacher for eighty-four years, and I have only missed one or two times in that entire period visiting my district."

Just a week or two ago I was in Ogden attending conference, and a man came to me and said, "I would like to tell you about my ward teaching companion. He has had a perfect record of ward teaching for seventy-five years. He has shaken hands with every President of the Church except the Prophet Joseph Smith." It was a real pleasure to have that man introduced to that entire quarterly conference audience and then to invite anyone to exceed that record.

Now brethren, can you do better than this man with eighty-four years teaching? Most of you cannot, you have not started early enough—but possibly we can get some of our Aaronic Priesthood boys to start at twelve, and if they live to be one hundred they might beat that record. There are great possibilities, great opportunities.

We heard another interesting experience of a man who had been stricken eight or nine years ago and was flat on his back in bed. As a matter of fact, he was so paralyzed that he could not even have the use of his fingers. He finally learned how to write a little by putting a pencil between his teeth. He became a ward teaching district supervisor, and he had to assist him, a blind man who was not even a member of the Church, but who was a very good friend of his. The story that we got in this letter was that during the time that this man has been the district supervisor in his ward, they have never had less than ninety percent of their families visited.

Then I heard another one from up in the Portland area. I saw a man in a wheel chair who had been brought in to every session of the conference. The stake president said, "I would like to introduce you to this man. He is a one hundred percent ward teacher."

When I shook hands with him and congratulated him, I said, "How do you do it?"

He said, "Well, I have to be carried into the homes. They have to carry me out again. I can wheel my chair from one home to the next, but it is a wonderful experience. I would not miss it for anything, and I just love to do my ward teaching."

Sometimes I think, brethren, somebody ought to break our ankles or our arms to help us appreciate the possibilities we have. I read the story of the two men down in the El Paso Stake who said they drive 120 miles every month to visit two families, but they always have one hundred percent ward teaching visits.

You hear stories like this wherever you go. I have heard men, when asked, "What are you doing in the Church?" say, "I am only a ward teacher," and I have said, "What do you mean by saying you are only a ward teacher? What you ought to do is swell up with pride and say, 'I am a ward teacher, and I am doing my teaching, and I am grateful to the bishop for the opportunity he has given me of serving in this great Church and kingdom.'"

I feel, brethren, that we have to feed the spiritual body just as we have to feed the physical body, if we want to keep it alive, and here is a great opportunity to perform that service. I know some of us feel that we do not amount to very much, and I remind you of the story of the elephant and the mouse. You have probably heard it.

The two of them together crossed a rickety old bridge. When they got on the other side, the mouse looked up into the eyes of the elephant and said, "Boy, didn't we shake that bridge?"

Well now, maybe we are just the difference in what it takes to make this program shake, or make it go. Brethren, we express our appreciation and gratitude for what you have done. I hope you can see with us the great possibilities of getting into every home every month. We will strengthen this Church as it has never been strengthened before, and that is my testimony to you, and I bear it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

MY DEAR brothers and sisters: Bishop Carl Buehner and I, being first to speak in this conference, are perhaps somewhat like two boys just coming out of the dentist's chair. We look through our tears rather pitiably at those in the outer office who are waiting for their turn.

We have all been inspired this morning by the stirring appeal of our President, and by the reports we have heard. We have all been encouraged in our work. I hope what I shall say will not seem to be a discord. President McKay closed with the words, "Let loyalty to the marriage covenant pervade the home." We who are favored with the privilege and charged with the responsibility of speaking at the general conferences of the Church wonder through the months what phase of the gospel, what subject we should discuss. Because of some work I have been asked to do, there is only one subject I can think of to talk about, and on that I am very poorly qualified.

In introduction, may I read some scripture which I think is pertinent:

And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him.

So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth. (Gen. 2:18; 1:27-28.)

And in another scripture:

For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; And they twain shall be one flesh.

What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. (Mark 10:7-9.)

And again:

Nevertheless neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord. (1 Cor. 11:11.)

Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence and likewise also the wife unto the husband. Paul speaking:

Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord.

Husbands, love your wives even as Christ also loved the church. (Eph. 5:22, 25.)

Inasmuch as many of this congregation are holders of the priesthood, I remind all of us that we submit ourselves unto the Lord in righteousness and because of righteousness. This requirement of the wives to submit to their husbands presupposes righteousness on the part of the husbands.

In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees;

And in order to obtain the highest a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage];

And if he does not, he cannot obtain it. (D. & C. 131:1-3.)

In the Old Testament scripture, the prophet said on one occasion: "... to your tents, O Israel," (1 Kings 12:16) and again, "Lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes," referring to their tents or homes and their need of support.

Throughout the world today there is confusion, apprehension, danger. In our own land we are spending billions to fortify and defend our country and protect our homes. Not only are we stockpiling armaments and atom bombs and other instruments of war, but we are also building a radar system, sky high and continent wide, extending across Canada and up into the Arctic Circle, all with the idea, basically, of defending our homes.

Sometimes we, as individuals, feel weak and helpless in the face of all this and wonder what we might do to help. May I call your attention to the fact that right in the inner citadel of our defensive system, the home, which is the very bulwark of our strength and solidarity, right there the enemy is making inroads which truly are frightening. In what I have to say on this subject, I hope no one will feel that I am chastising or blaming or condemning. I think I realize, because of recent experiences, that there are many innocent victims of desertion and betrayal. My heart goes out to many lovely women who are left to raise their children alone, and certainly to them we say a word of encouragement, and we pray God's blessings upon them that they may be given strength to carry this added burden. And yet we must say some things about this evil—its source and possible conquest.

In the last issue [October 1954] of the Reader's Digest, the startling statement is made that "one thousand times every day in the United States a judge's gavel falls and with two words, 'divorce granted,' somebody's love story comes to an end." And may I add, some home becomes a casualty. One thousand of them a day in the United States, 365,000 in a year! May I say, regretfully, that the Intermountain States in this list are above the average in the number of divorces granted. May I also say that even among those who are married in the temple, the serpent, who first made his appearance in the Garden of Eden, creeps in and continues his attempt to separate man and woman against the decree of God that they should be one flesh.

According to statistics there is one divorce for every three marriages in the United States. What would we think if 33⅓ percent of all the ships that set sail on the ocean were doomed to shipwreck and to failure? And what would the board of directors of the company do if the cause of that failure could be traced to the captain and the mate, who could not agree and work together? Many divorces start before marriage.

We who wrestle with this problem have traced some of the causes, and in many cases they lead back into the childhood homes of the young couples, who are now divorcees. We believe, brethren and sisters, as has been so eloquently said this morning, that proper parental example and training in the home would help to stem this tide of divorce. Parents should teach their children by example and by precept the sacredness of the marriage covenant, should teach them that there is no joy in all the world comparable to the joy that comes through happy wedlock. But like all blessings, this joy is predicated upon obedience to law.

Parents, who fail to teach their children and to demonstrate to them what happy wedlock can mean and does mean, are sowing where their children must reap. If they fail here, the ancient edict will operate; viz.: the sins of the parents shall be visited upon the children.

Fathers should teach their boys that there is no freedom except through obedience to law. Children should be reared in disciplined homes where rules are obeyed and the rights of others are respected. Parents should "reprove sometimes with sharpness" and then show an increase of love. The child that is pampered in the home will expect to be pampered after marriage. Among the seeds of divorce one of the most prolific is over-indulgence. It grows into extreme selfishness.

There are certain weaknesses in all of us which we say are inherent. I shall not attempt to list them but refer to one or two that men and women should recognize in themselves and overcome before their spouse discovers and magnifies them.

I think now of self-control. Many of the cases which I review started with uncontrolled appetites and tempers, leading often to cruelty, mental and physical. When in a temper the tongue may be venomous. The Apostle James said, "... it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." (James 3:8.) That is only potential, but it is often true. The tongue, with which we say our prayers and pledge our troth is sometimes used to wound those we love best. "Boys flying kites haul in their white winged birds; we can't do that when we're flying words."

A middle-aged couple on the farm had a violent quarrel at breakfast time. Later in the day they started for town in the buggy, with a fine team of horses to sell their vegetables and eggs. As the horses trotted along, Mary said, "John, why can't we travel together like these horses do? They don't quarrel and fight." John said, "Mary, we could if there was only one tongue between us."

Oh, the unkind things we say to those we love.

We have kind words for the stranger
And smiles for the sometime guest,
While oft to our own
The bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best!

Of course, and this is the saddest part of what I have to say, there are evil intruders, more deadly sins, which strike at the very foundation of our homes. Infidelity, love's counterfeit, is the most disintegrating influence that can enter a man's life. It is to the home what treason is to the nation. Lust is fatal to love. It sometimes causes men in military service to destroy the very home which they would die to defend on the battlefield.

In the U.S. News and World Report, there is an article on "Why Teen-agers Go Wrong." Divorce is high on that list, and it is reported that one-half of all the adult criminals begin as juvenile delinquents, and most juvenile delinquents come from broken homes. Let people who are considering divorce pause and consider possible consequences.

But let us think of some positive aspects of this subject. I should like for the next minute to talk to the young people who may be listening in: to tell them that though this enemy is extant, and though they must meet situations where they must face and overcome difficulties, they can train and prepare themselves for this glorious experience with the same promise of success as awaits the well-trained and disciplined person in any field of activity. Marriage is life at work.

I speak, first, of love. I am not thinking of that flutter of the heart or the droop of the eyelash which you young folks may identify as such, that may well be the beginning of love, but I am thinking of the love that "suffereth long and is kind, that envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; the love that beareth all things, endureth all things, the love that never faileth." (See I Cor. 13.) And I remind you that the Master who loved most of all, endured the most and proved his love by his endurance. Yes, "there is beauty all around, when there's love at home."

I speak next of prayer. The husband, who will kneel every day in the home and thank God for his wife and list her virtues in his supplication to be entered on the credit side of the family ledger will overlook or be unmindful of her little weaknesses—he will never seek the divorce courts. The woman who kneels with her children in the home and humbly thanks God for a kind, loving, and wonderful father and husband, even though at times that prayer may be only a wish, it still will impress upon the souls of the children an image and hold before them an ideal which they will try to realize in themselves. Quoting Sister Benson on the TV program recently, "The family that prays together stays together."

Young people of the Church, read the seventy-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants. Here is the prize which you may earn and enjoy, with God's help. You who have been baptized and receive the holy Spirit, you who have testimonies of Jesus, who keep the commandments and overcome by faith, and are sealed by the holy Spirit of promise, shall become priests and kings of the Most High and dwell in the presence of God and Jesus Christ forever and ever.

Your bodies shall become celestial whose glory is that of the sun. You shall have joy in your posterity here, eternal family union and association hereafter, immortality, eternal life, and eternal increase.

God help us that we may put on the whole armor of God, having our loins girt about with truth, and having the breastplate of righteousness, the shield of faith, the sword of the spirit, and go forward in the fear of God and protect our homes. Yes, to your tents, or homes, O Israel, lengthen the silken cords of love and strengthen the stakes of faith and righteousness to the glory of God and our own salvation in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

AS A POSTSCRIPT to these stirring things which we have heard this morning, may I say that in my humble opinion, one of the foundation stones of success in the home is companionship in the home, and that companionship must begin with husband and wife.

Friday, October 1

First Day

You remember that you started out with your courtship on a basis of companionship. You husbands remember when you courted your wives that you did all you could to be enjoyable companions to them; you took them out, showed them a good time, paid them compliments. You never thought of criticizing them or embarrassing them because that would never win a fair lady, but you put your own best foot forward always, and you did all you could to convince that young lady that association with you would provide for her a loving, wholesome, desirable companionship.

You ladies remember how you responded, and then together you decided that you would be married because you desired to have that type of companionship perpetuated throughout your lives.

Where is that companionship now? Are you, as husbands and wives, real companions today? Do you have fun together? Do you ever go out together and really have a good time? Do you work together? Do you worship God together? Do you maintain that high respect for each other that you once had, remembering that there can be no real love at home unless there is respect for each other, and that there is precious little respect unless we are respectable?

The Lord had something to say about companionship in the home. He gave a great commandment in section 42 of the Doctrine and Covenants, verse 22, and this is what he said:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else.

I believe, ladies, that that commandment is just as applicable to you, and that you could receive it as though it said: "Thou shalt love thy husband with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto him and none else." And when the Lord commands that husband and wife love each other with all their hearts, it means that it shall be a whole-hearted love, and that there shall be no holding back and no reservations. Then the second part of that command, to "cleave unto her," I believe means that we shall be good companions, one to the other. I believe that when the Lord says that we shall cleave unto husband and wife, that he means that we shall be enjoyable, desirable, happy, loving companions one with the other.

Then there is that very potent last portion, "and none else," which rules out all types of competition. Any married man who pays attention to any woman other than his wife, to that extent is in rebellion against Almighty God, and any woman who is married and receives attention from any other man is flying in the face of Providence and violating the law of heaven.

Now, if you have broken this law, what is the answer? President Stephen L. Richards gave it to you yesterday in the Relief Society conference. What is the answer to any broken law? If you break the law of the Sabbath, is the answer further violation? If you break the law of chastity, is the answer further violation? There is only one answer to a broken law, and that is repentance, and if you have broken the law which says, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else," is the answer divorce, or is it repentance with a broken heart and a contrite spirit?

There is another type of companionship in the home which is so fundamental to love at home, and that is companionship between parents and children. I am sure that many of you parents do not realize the gravity of the temptations which face your young people. There are sins in which your young people become involved that many of you parents do not even dream about, but they are terrible things which will drag them down into the depths of hell if they yield to them, and will break your hearts, as parents. Companionship between parents and children will provide a fortification against those temptations and may save them.

You fathers, are you willing to be companions to your sons? Oh, they need you, and they plead for you. Would each father be willing to spend one hour a day with his son if he knew that the boy's very salvation depended upon it? Oh, I know there are many of you who will say you do not have time.

I know that some of you will say that business is too demanding and you cannot spare the time from your job and your other exacting assignments, but I would like to tell you that there is not a job in the world as important to you as your son. If you are so busy that you cannot be a companion to your son so that you can help to save his soul, you are too busy, and you need to readjust. If you will be a companion to him, and if you will keep the standards of the Church, and in that companionship teach those standards to your son, as that boy watches you observe those high principles, he will have respect both for you and those principles and will be converted to them, and thereby you will place him on the high road to salvation.

You mothers, teach your daughters by means of companionship also. A couple of weeks ago when I was coming home on the train, there was in the same car with me a young mother and her two little girls. It was a long ride, and these little girls were tired and peevish. This mother was one of those strict disciplinarians who apparently knew nothing but discipline. I am sure that with that stern face, if she had ever smiled it would have cracked her face all over, she was so rigid and so stern. She gave those children a very bad time, and they gave her a bad time, and a bad time was had by all.

Then, as I went into the next car on my way to the diner, I noticed another mother and her two little girls. There was none of the atmosphere of what I have just described to you. There was happiness and laughter and joy because on the same train and over the same long journey this second mother was playing with her little daughters. She was a playmate, a pal, to them. I noticed that in the midst of the game one of the little girls came up and hugged her mother, and said, "Mother, I love you so much." Then she went back to play her game again.

I thought, what a pattern for all mothers. If mothers would just be companions, beginning when the children are small, what a marvelous influence they could have. And mothers, as they grow up, do not change the recipe. Continue to be companions to them, and as you give them that companionship, they will love you; they will honor you; they will seek your advice. Even when they have grown up, you will see that from time to time in the midst of their games or their worries, they will come to you and put their arms about you and say, "Mother, I love you."

Love at home comes through proper companionship. Husband and wife may be kept together through it. Mother and father can save their sons and their daughters by proper companionship, and that they will, I humbly pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, I realize my weakness and the need of your faith and prayers and the help of the Spirit of the Lord. I am grateful for the nature of the remarks made by President McKay in the opening session of this conference and for the prayer that has just been offered by President Pugmire in which a plea to our Father in heaven was made in behalf of the faith of the young people of the Church.

I, too, am concerned over the faith of our young people, for that matter, of all the members of the Church in this day when there are so many prevailing notions, ideas, and philosophies. I have realized for a long time the need of spiritual protection, protection in the teachings that we give to our young people in our organizations, to save them from the false doctrines and teachings of the world.

About three days ago I received a letter from one of my very dearest friends, a brother who is a teacher and who has been a teacher for nearly a half century, one who sat in the councils of the Church in stakes of Zion and in whom I have a great deal of confidence. He expressed in his letter his solicitation for our young people, and in fact, for all the members of the Church and the need of giving them proper protection and guidance in the teachings that are placed before them.

I copied from his letter one paragraph, and asked him if I might use it. He said I might, and I am going to read it to you:

"There are in our community, and I suspect in other places, men who are instructing in our quorums and other organizations who teach false doctrine, and the craziest imaginations, and almost invariably they are brethren who are not in line. They have brilliant, trained minds, sometimes with pleasing, influential personalities, but lacking the spirit of truth that comes by obedience. You cannot give what you do not possess. In my humble opinion only those who believe in, and can prove their teachings by their works, should be instructing in our quorums and other organizations."

That remark of his I fully endorse, and so I am expressing these thoughts particularly to our bishops, presidents of stakes, superintendents of Sunday Schools and Mutuals, and those who have charge of priesthood quorums, and the other organizations of the Church, to see to it that in the choosing of teachers they use wisdom and seek for the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord that these men spoken of here in this communication, brilliant, outstanding personalities, but without faith, are not called to teach in our Sunday Schools, our Mutual Improvement Associations, and in the priesthood quorums of the Church. We want men who are trained in the principles of the gospel and who have faith and a testimony of the truth. We have them.

Because a man has great schooling, is educated according to the ideas of the world, is not sufficient reason why he should be called to take charge of a class in any of the organizations or priesthood quorums within the Church. Now, if he has scholastic ability and training, and along with it has faith in the principles of the gospel and in the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of the Prophet Joseph Smith, all well and good. But if he is filled with all kinds of philosophy and notions and cannot accept the doctrines in the standard works of the Church, we do not want him, whether it is in our auxiliaries or the priesthood, or in our seminaries or institutes, that are given for the teaching of religious principles and to instill faith in the hearts of our young people.

"Remember," the Lord has said, "the worth of souls is great in the sight of God;

"For, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him.

"And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him, on conditions of repentance.

"And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth!

"Wherefore, you are called to cry repentance unto this people.

"And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!" (D. & C. 18:10-15.)

In the early days of the Church men came out of the world and received the testimony of the gospel, but they had been trained in the traditions of the world, the religious world, and they brought in with them some of those religious notions. The Lord had to correct them, and he said:

First Day

"Let us reason even as a man reasoneth one with another face to face.

"Now, when a man reasoneth he is understood of man, because he reasoneth as a man; even so will I, the Lord, reason with you that you may understand.

"Wherefore, I the Lord ask you this question—unto what were ye ordained?

"To preach my gospel by the Spirit, even the Comforter which was sent forth to teach the truth.

"And then received ye spirits which ye could not understand, and received them to be of God; and in this are ye justified?

"Behold ye shall answer this question yourselves; nevertheless, I will be merciful unto you; he that is weak among you hereafter shall be made strong.

"Verily I say unto you, he that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the Spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the spirit of truth or some other way?

"And if it be by some other way it is not of God.

"And again, he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the Spirit of truth or some other way?

"If it be some other way it is not of God.

"Therefore, why is it that ye cannot understand and know, that he that receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth receiveth it as it is preached by the Spirit of truth?

"Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understand one another, and both are edified and rejoice together.

"And that which doth not edify is not of God, and is darkness." (Ibid., 50:11-23.)

It makes no difference who the teacher is, if he teaches false doctrine, if he teaches that which has been condemned by the Lord, that is contrary to what is written in the revelations given to the Church, then he should not teach.

In the forty-second section of the Doctrine and Covenants the Lord declares that he who hath not the Spirit shall not teach. I call upon you brethren in the stakes and in the wards to be alert to find men who have faith in their hearts and a love of the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ and do not choose men simply because they have a personality or worldly wisdom. Find if they have in their hearts a love of divine truth. If a man cannot accept the revelations in the Bible, in the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, the Pearl of Great Price, which we have received as standards, if he has reservations in his mind in regard to the things that are there recorded, which have come to us by the word of the Lord, then he ought not be teaching in any organization, any class, anywhere in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

May the Lord bless us one and all, guide us in righteousness, help us through the study of the scriptures to know his will, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Quorum of the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Elder Antoine R. Ivins, of the First Council of Seventy, who will be followed by Elder Eldred G. Smith.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS: If I say anything that may be helpful to you this afternoon, it will be because you lend me your faith and prayers, for I sense a deep feeling of responsibility as I occupy your time.

I represent one of the quorums of the priesthood which we call the General Authorities of the Church. You face the General Authorities. We face the great body of the priesthood who regulate, under the direction of the General Authorities, the affairs of the wards, the stakes, and the missions of the Church. To bear that priesthood is a tremendous responsibility, and it is the duty of us who bear it to magnify it, to come to understand through our faith, our prayers, and our service what the duties of the various offices are and then strive to magnify our calling.

Whenever one accepts an ordination in the priesthood, I take it that there is an implied promise, even if it is not voiced, that he will undertake to magnify that calling. Too many of us, I think, when we fail, lay it to the fact that the devil tempts us. I think myself, we ought to take personal responsibility for it, because when we are endowed with the priesthood we are supposed to have access to our heavenly Father and to his Spirit, which would give us control over all of these weaknesses and temptations, and if we would enjoy to the very fullest the Spirit of God, we would have that control.

Now, the only way to get this Spirit that I know of is to work for it. The Lord has said if we would do the things he has told us to do, we will know of the doctrine, whether it be of God. And we should strive first of all to get that testimony that will carry us through and over all the temptations and pitfalls that may lie in our path. I think that is the only way really to know that the gospel is true, to put it into practice in our lives. There are many of us, perhaps, who feel that the position which we hold is not too important, but I like, as I go through the stakes and meet the priesthood of the stakes, to express my idea that so far as I am concerned, the most important job, if you want to call it a job, and the most important assignment in the priesthood is the one I have. If I can manage to magnify my calling, I should not worry about what other people, either ahead of me or who work along by my side, are able to do. My problem, brethren and sisters, is to magnify my particular calling.

Now the priesthood of the brethren who stand before us is a great and wonderful endowment. All of the grand and glorious privileges that we enjoy as members of the Church come to us only through the offices of that priesthood. We should appreciate it, brothers and sisters; we should love it; and we should strive to magnify it.

This has been the problem, of course, of mankind from the beginning, to live in a manner that would please God. We should strive to do it.

Now, some of us are presidents of elders' quorums, some of us are presidents of seventies' quorums, some of us are presidents of high priests' quorums, and some of us have special offices in this priesthood. Are we willing, and are we determined to accept the responsibilities of these various offices and magnify them?

Brethren and sisters, when I contemplate the fact that the privileges which you and I enjoy are carrying into a life which will extend beyond this one into eternity, then I am overpowered with the thought that I should bend every effort and every power within me to magnify my calling, so I should be worthy of a high and exalted position afterwards. It is within the possibility of every man to do it. That was the design of God, our heavenly Father, that we should come here with equal privileges. The problem is, are we willing, and will we do it? We can if we will. Will we leave this conference with a renewed determination to magnify our callings, and to help the people whom we are set apart to help, we who are leaders of the Church, or will we just think we have had a pleasant time and proceed to forget the admonitions?

Brethren and sisters, we cannot afford to forget the good resolutions that we make when we sit under the spell of these brethren who are surrounding us. We cannot wish ourselves into success; praying will help; but there must be activity if we magnify this calling.

There are many of us, as I said, who are presidents of elders' quorums. The elders' quorum is the largest quorum in the Melchizedek Priesthood, larger than the combined quorums of the high priests and the seventies. If we would strive to benefit and bless the Melchizedek Priesthood, generally, in the Church, it seems that that is the place where we should put special effort, because it is the large group, and it just happens to be, if we can trust the statistics of the Church, the group where our help could be most effective and most noticeable. But do we do it? We, who are presidents of the elders quorums? Do we sit down with our brethren, privately, and talk over their problems with them, striving to encourage them in their work, or are we content to stand up before them on Sunday morning in the quorum meeting, announce a hymn and a prayer and a speaker, and let it go at that?

Bishop Buehner this morning spoke about the dignity of ward teaching. I believe the best ward teaching that I ever heard of was that performed by a friend of mine on the ditchbank with the boys, the teen-age boys of his particular ward. Ward teaching should go right into the homes of the people and attack their personal problems. It is not a matter of the weather or things of that sort. We have discovered in the stake missionary work that in ten years we have picked up seven thousand children whose baptism had been neglected because they had not been taught its necessity. When the stake missionaries found them, they were eager to be baptized, not only willing, but eager. It has always appealed to me that somewhere along the line, some ward teacher, as well as the father and mother, forgot a duty, and the same thing, I think, applies to the elders' quorums and the seventies' quorums.

The duty of a president is to understand the private life of every member of his quorum and do what he can to ameliorate adverse conditions and to enhance the good ones. If we could do that, brethren, as quorum presidents, as bishops, as stake presidents, as high councilmen, think what a wonderful contribution it would be to the welfare of the membership of the Church. After all, brethren, those of us who are here are mainly of that category, or those categories—those of us who are here, whom I am facing now, are mainly men—who have official responsibility in this priesthood, and what are we doing about it? We are doing a wonderful work, it is true, but we are not nearing perfection in it. When we consider the great number of men who have gone past their majority and into married life without ever having received any priesthood at all, then you will agree with me that somewhere along the line, we have not succeeded in doing what we should do.

When you contemplate the great number of priests who go out of the priests' quorum and never get into the elders' quorum, you will have to admit again that somewhere along the line leadership has failed.

Now, brethren and sisters, we who hold the priesthood have that responsibility. We who hold office in it, presiding offices in it, have perhaps the greater responsibility. We who are the wives, or you who are the wives, I cannot include myself in that, have the responsibility of helping your husbands to do it, and too often it is your failure to co-operate which prevents an officer from fully magnifying his calling.

My appeal today, brethren and sisters, is that we who have this responsibility shall make a renewed effort to understand our problems and to magnify it, and the wives should make a definite resolution that they will never stand in the way of the official performance of the duty of a husband.

May God bless us, not only with an understanding of our problems, but also with the power to do it, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just heard a message from Elder Antoine R. Ivins, of the First Council of Seventy. Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church, will now address us.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

MY BROTHERS AND SISTERS: I assure you I need your faith and prayers in my behalf. If there is anyone who needs the help of the Lord, I do. I can heartily endorse all that has been said at this conference, and I have faith that I can endorse everything that will be said in this conference. I like Brother Mark Petersen's comment of a postscript to what has been said, and I would like to add my thought as another postscript.

In the very beginning, God placed Adam on the earth, and he gave him dominion over the fish and the fowl and the cattle and over all the earth. Now this would seem like a pretty exalted position for some people today, but even though he had dominion over all the earth, God said, "It is not good that the man should be alone," (Gen. 2:18) and he gave unto him the woman Eve to be a companion and helpmeet. Then God gave unto them the first great commandment to multiply and replenish the earth.

We are not told how long they lived in the Garden of Eden before they partook of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil and were cast out of the garden to start their mortal existence. The point I want to make clear is that God himself established the first family unit. It is not an institution developed by man which can be outgrown and cast aside in the course of human progress. All that is nearest and dearest in our lives is associated with our families. Love has its center here, and where love is, there we find happiness also. Truly, it is not good for man to be alone. The Lord in his wisdom has provided a way for man to be happy on this earth, and to carry that joy on through all eternity. The greatest joy and happiness comes through the family unit. It has been so through all mortality, so why will it not be so in the next life? This family unit is so important that the Lord has made it known to us that all the families of the earth must be sealed together. By the time of the end of the millennium all of Adam's posterity who accept the gospel must be sealed together as one family by the power of the priesthood, which is the power to seal on earth and it shall be sealed in heaven, and to bind on earth, and it shall be bound in heaven.

Every person who comes to the earth must have an opportunity to receive all the blessings of these sealings if he will accept, sometime before the end of the millennium. There could not be a just God if it were otherwise. These sealing blessings are obtained, first, through the ordinance of baptism into the Church of Jesus Christ. Then the wife is to be sealed to the husband for time and for all eternity, and those children who are born outside of this wedlock must be sealed to their parents that they may receive the blessings as though they were born under the new and everlasting covenant.

Those who have died without this law may have the privilege of receiving these blessings by proxy. That is where our responsibility comes in. We must first teach the gospel to the living, and then for those of our families who died without the law we must gather their records that this great and important work can be done for them.

Quoting the Prophet Joseph Smith in Section 128 of the Doctrine and Covenants on this subject:

And now, my dearly beloved brethren and sisters, let me assure you that these are principles in relation to the dead and the living that cannot be lightly passed over, as pertaining to our salvation. For their salvation is necessary and essential to our salvation, as Paul says concerning the fathers—that they without us cannot be made perfect—neither can we without our dead be made perfect.

And now, in relation to the baptism for the dead, I will give you another quotation of Paul, 1 Corinthians, 15:29: Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead? (Italics added.)

And again, in connection with this quotation I will give you a quotation from one of the prophets, who had his eye fixed on the restoration of the priesthood, the glories to be revealed in the last days, and in an

Friday, October 1

especial manner this most glorious of all subjects belonging to the everlasting gospel, namely, the baptism for the dead; for Malachi says, last chapter, verses 5th and 6th: Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. (Italics added.)

... the earth will be smitten with a curse unless there is a welding link of some kind or other between the fathers and the children, upon some subject or other—and behold what is that subject? It is the baptism for the dead. For we without them cannot be made perfect; neither can they without us be made perfect. (D. & C. 128:15-18.)

This does not refer to just the few of us who are members of the Church today—a handful of his children—but this work must be done for all of our ancestors before we can be sure of our salvation. It is a tremendous task! At the rate we are baptizing for the dead in our temples today, plus the baptisms of the living, it is estimated that it would take over four thousand years to baptize the two billion four hundred million who are now living on the earth, without counting the dead. Are there as many righteous dead as there are people living today? If so, how is this work going to be accomplished? It is a task which must be done. All of God's children who will accept the gospel must become welded into one great family. For this purpose he has seen fit to send choice spirits to various parts of the earth. These choice spirits accept the gospel when it is brought to them. Then from that nucleus, others of their families and friends accept the gospel. They come to the temples of the Lord and perform their own sealings and then the work for their dead ancestors.

Converts have three sealing steps they must be present for in the temple: Those who are married must have the wife sealed to the husband, then their children sealed to them, then those parents are to be sealed to their parents. Those who are born under the covenant have these choice blessings automatically.

Do we appreciate those blessings? Many converts would willingly spend the rest of their lives in whatever effort is necessary to obtain the opportunity of being sealed to their parents and consider it well worth the effort.

Then we need to gather all the records of our ancestors that we possibly can. I do not mean just a halfhearted attempt. Seek diligently, constantly, and prayerfully. Do not wait for a convenient time—it will never come. Do not put it off until old age when we are not able to do anything else. We never know what tomorrow will bring, and we must see that the work is done, completing the sealing of each family group. There is no one who can escape the responsibility of this work. We will not be excused because we thought an aunt or some other relative was doing the work.

One young lady, a genealogist, was asked the question, "What if you find an undesirable character in your family tree, such as a pirate or convict or the like?" She answered, "My responsibility does not concern how he lived but just that he lived and died. After all, I owe my existence to him, and my only way of paying that debt is to do the baptism and sealing work for him. It will be up to him to accept it."

This is a responsibility for each of us. Not one of us can be made perfect without this work. I doubt if the Lord will accept the excuse that we are so busy working in the auxiliary organizations that we cannot spend a part of our time in genealogy. Any part of this we do not do which we should do must be done by someone else, for it must be done. If we shirk our responsibilities, how can we expect to receive the blessings?

To those scattered around the world, may I say a word of encouragement? Be of good cheer, be diligent, trust in the Lord, and he will help you. You were probably placed where you are to do a special work in gathering records or to fulfil a special missionary assignment. If you will let him, the Lord will give you success in your work and much happiness in so doing.

May his blessing be upon all those who are diligent in this work, that we may prepare the way for his coming, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to the Patriarch to the Church, Elder Eldred G. Smith.

The congregation will now rise and sing "Praise to the Man Who Communed With Jehovah." After the singing Elder Sterling W. Sill will speak to us.

Singing by the Choir and congregation, "Praise to the Man Who Communed with Jehovah."

IN FOUR days it will be six months since President McKay invited me to his office to notify me that I had been called to this position. These six months have been tremendous months to me. While I have always been active in Church work, it has mostly been in some ward or stake capacity, and sometimes our appreciation is restricted by our experience. But during these last six months I have had the new experience of visiting many stakes of the Church, located in six states and one foreign country. In each case I have not been in that stake more than a few hours before I have felt almost as much at home as though I had lived there all of my life, and I have been delighted and inspired to find that all over the Church there is the same fervent testimony of the gospel, and the same devotion to God that has characterized the great men and women of my own ward and stake, to whom I owe such a great debt of gratitude.

This has been a profitable experience to me for many other reasons. One is that I have become a little better acquainted with the men who lead the Church, not only because of more frequent personal contact, but also on the day of my appointment I made a resolution that I would read from beginning to end every book that had been written by every present General Authority of the Church in order that I might learn something from his devotion and faith. I have not finished this project yet, but I have made substantial progress in that direction, and I have been delighted at the great stimulation and inspiration that I have received. I found out a long time ago, that we may not only be inspired by our Father in heaven, but we may also receive inspiration from his children.

This particular reading comes as a sort of climax to a great experience that began for me ten years ago when I heard Adam S. Bennion give a lecture on the value of great literature. It was near the end of the Japanese war and he presented this proposition: Suppose that you were going to be a prisoner in a Japanese concentration camp for the next four years, and that you would be permitted to take with you the works of any ten authors. Which would you take, and what would you expect to get from your study? That is, what are the values in great literature—in great human thought? Brother Bennion's idea was that one might select the ten authors in the world in whom he had the greatest interest and confidence, the men that he would like most to resemble, and then read everything that they had ever written, and one by one try to exhaust each in turn; that is, you think his every thought. You try to feel as he felt. You may probe and pry and peep into every corner of his mind. You try to live his life over again.

Following this suggestion has been a wonderful experience to me, and presently I am re-reading one of my ten authors. This particular author has written five books. One of them is entitled the Old Testament. Another is the New Testament. One is the Book of Mormon. One is the Doctrine and Covenants and one is the Pearl of Great Price. Each time we read a book with a new purpose it becomes a new book. This is not because the words in the book have changed, but because we bring to it a new outlook; for example, one might read the Bible to get from it its literature, or its history, or its philosophy, or its psychology, or its theology, but I am not re-reading the standard works of the Church primarily for any of these reasons. Rather, I am trying to get better acquainted with the author.

Friday, October 1

Daniel Twohig wrote a sacred song entitled, "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked," and I have no doubt that that would be a thrilling experience, to stand on the very spot of ground on which Jesus once stood, but we may have an experience which is far more important. For through the scriptures we can think, today, what Jesus thought. We can try to feel as he felt. We can try to do as he did. We may try to become what he is.

Someone has asked this question: How would you like to create your own mind? But isn't that about what we are all doing? William James said "... the mind is made up by what it feeds upon." Someone else has said, "... the mind, like the dyer's hand, is colored by what it holds." That is, if I hold in my hand a sponge full of purple dye, my hand becomes purple, and when we hold in our minds and hearts the thoughts of God, ideas having to do with great spirituality and devotion and faith, then our lives are made up accordingly, for as the writer of the Proverbs said, "... As he [a man] thinketh in his heart, so is he." (Proverbs 23:7.)

I am very grateful for these wonderful books which we call the standard works of the Church, because through them we may think even the thoughts of God as the prophets have recorded them through all the ages of the world. The Old Testament was written in the period antedating the mortality of Jesus. The New Testament is written about his earth life. The Doctrine and Covenants was written in our own day. And the Book of Mormon and the Pearl of Great Price reach across all three of these periods.

But, in addition to the standard works, I am very grateful for the recorded ideas of those who presently and in the past have led the Church. Because they have written their ideas down, we can think their thoughts. I hope I do not embarrass President Joseph Fielding Smith by speaking about his recent great book entitled Man—His Origin and Destiny, which I think is one of the great books of the Church. I would like to see every person in the world read this great book, for what knowledge could be more important and helpful to man than the ideas therein presented. President Smith has packed into this book the study, meditation, and devotion of a lifetime, but through our reading we may make all of these ideas our own in a week or a month. This is one of the advantages of a great book.

To try to indicate the need that exists in the world, and in our own lives, for proper religious information, I would like to tell you of an experience that I had a few weeks before I read Brother Smith's book. I happened to be in a large eastern city on a business assignment and, inasmuch as I was in the city over Sunday and was not convenient to my own Church, I went to hear one of the great Protestant ministers of the world. After the meeting was over, I was shown through their great church edifice, and I bought a book written by the minister, which I read very carefully on the train coming home. Three weeks later I was again in this city and again went to hear this man speak. After the service was over a large group of people lined up to shake hands with the speaker. After all of the others had gone, I introduced myself and told him how much I had enjoyed his sermons and his book, but there were some things that I could not understand and I would appreciate it if he would discuss some of them with me. He had used some phrases in reference to God such as "immerse yourself in God," or "send your roots down into God," or "fill your mind with God," and I asked him if he would explain to me his conception of God. He was very frank to say, "I do not know what God is, and I do not know of anyone who does know. If someone could find out what God is, that would be the greatest news that had ever come into the world." I said to him, "Would you give me your idea of what is meant by the statement in Genesis (1:27) which says that 'God created man in his own image'?" He said, "There is one thing of which I am reasonably sure, and that is that God is not an anthropomorphic God; that man was not created in the image of God."

This great man, who is one of the most popular religious leaders in the world, does not understand God, and yet Jesus said, "... this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.) In addition to this, this man who has taken upon himself to minister in the name of Christ does not understand pre-existence or the resurrection. He does not know the difference between the Aaronic and the Melchizedek Priesthood, nor does he understand the organization of the Church, or the use of temples, or salvation for the dead. He does not understand the necessity for divine authority, and a great many other simple doctrines of Jesus that are plainly mentioned and discussed in the scriptures. Yet this man is the spiritual director of thousands of people.

I was greatly impressed by the earnestness of his declaration that to know God would be the greatest information that could ever come into the world. When I returned home, I decided to find out what were the important events that were happening in the world today so that I could make a comparison. I called up a newspaperman and asked him if he would let me know what were the greatest news events of the last year. He listed the following:

Stalin's death in March 1953.

The execution of the Rosenbergs in June 1953.

The Greenlease kidnaping last fall.

The East German food riots in early 1954.

The hydrogen bomb.

The launching of the atomic submarine, Nautilus, in January 1954.

The Puerto Ricans who shot up Congress in March 1954.

The polio vaccination test, 1954.

The Army-McCarthy hearings, 1954.

Most of these events have to do with bringing death into the world, whereas to know God could bring eternal life to all men. With this in mind, I opened the Doctrine and Covenants and re-read with a new appreciation the account of this greatest event that has happened upon this earth since the days that Jesus lived upon it. This wonderful event is recorded so that everyone may read and understand. We declare to the world that in the spring of 1820, God the Father and his son, Jesus Christ, appeared to Joseph Smith, to re-establish upon the earth a belief in the God of Genesis, and to restore in its fulness the knowledge of all of the principles of the gospel. To discover God is the greatest discovery that anyone ever makes in his lifetime, and in trying to understand the great responsibility that goes with such a discovery, I got down on my knees and asked God to help me bear an acceptable witness of him to all of those with whom I should come in contact. When it was revealed to Paul as he journeyed on the way to Damascus that Jesus was the Christ, a great responsibility was placed upon him. When the same thing was made known to Joseph Smith, a tremendous responsibility was placed upon him. He said, "... I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew that God knew it, and I could not deny it, neither dared I do it." (P. of G. P. Joseph Smith 2:25.) Now that the same thing has been made known to us, a great responsibility has been placed upon us, and I pray that our heavenly Father will help us to be effective, inspired, untiring bearers of this great truth to all men everywhere in the world. This prayer I ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER JOHN LONGDEN

MY DEAR brothers and sisters: This is my third anniversary and seventh time that I have been honored with the privilege of standing in this position. I assure you that the timidity is just as great today as it was seven conferences ago. When I realize that the Prophet of God, who opened this glorious conference this morning, in his wisdom, humbly sought divine aid as he occupied this position, as the others have done who have succeeded him, I more than ever realize the need for that assistance, and I am brought to a consciousness that there is not anything that we do in this Church if we have desire to aid and assist, to benefit and bless people but what we should act under the inspiration of our heavenly Father.

Another anniversary—it was forty-five years ago on the seventh of this month, since I was privileged to land in Salt Lake City with my father, he having accepted the gospel just shortly before I was born in the little town of Oldham, England. I am grateful that he still lives at eighty-one and has a testimony of the divinity of the gospel of Jesus Christ and in this thing called "Mormonism."

We have heard servants of God bear their testimonies that this is his work in which we are engaged, and I believe therein lies the strength of this Church. When I make that statement, I am mindful of the fact that there is great strength in the missionary program of the Church, which is a great voluntary service. I am conscious of this because I have had the privilege of touring the New England Mission going as far as St. Johns, Newfoundland. In the past two months I have been all the way from the West Coast to St. Johns, Newfoundland. I have heard testimonies of those newly converted to the Church, and I have heard testimonies of those who have been stalwarts through the years. It is recorded by the Psalmist David:

Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart. (Psalm 119:2.)

Yes, I am also mindful that there is great strength in the evidence we have from people paying their tithes and offerings that this work of the Lord may grow and progress. I believe that the strength of this Church lies in the individual testimony which people may possess if they will but conform their lives to the teachings of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

I am mindful of this vast congregation here this afternoon and also the vast congregation—the capacity of which we know not—who will be listening in over the radio and those who may be viewing over television. I trust that in the few moments I occupy this position I may bring you a message that will be of value and of worth in assisting you to seek for a testimony.

I have heard so many people say, and you have had the same experience I am sure: "You seem so positive in your testimony or in your statement that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ." I am positive in my testimony, but I want to assure you that it is not in the spirit of egotism or self-exaltation whatsoever—only in the spirit of humility. I would call to your attention the experience which the Savior had on one occasion when he approached Peter and the other disciples when he had been mistaken for many other personages,

When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?

And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?

And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. (Matt. 16:13-19.)

Would you say that was a positive testimony that Peter had? He knew that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God. That came unto him by divine revelation. It can come unto every individual who has a desire to serve God, to know his commandments and be submissive to his will and be obedient to the same. Anyone may possess a positive testimony.

Again on another occasion, on the day of Pentecost the Savior had commissioned his disciples to go forward and proclaim his doctrines. They had the power and authority necessary to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ and to administer in the ordinances thereof which pertain to the salvation and exaltation of our heavenly Father's children.

Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.

Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation. (Acts 2:36-40.)

I believe that applies in this dispensation in this year 1954, as it did almost two thousand years ago when that positive declaration was given by Peter.

After the resurrection of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, he appeared in the upper chamber on one occasion and, oh, they were glad to see him—to receive their Lord. He gave them these consoling words in which we, today, might find comfort: "Peace be unto you."

Then the same day at evening, before the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

And when he had so said, he shewed unto them his hands and his side. Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord.

Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.

And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost:

Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.

But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.

And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing.

And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God.

Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. (John 20:19-29.)

I have not seen the Master Jesus Christ, but I have a firm conviction and testimony that he lives. I know that I have been blessed as I go about in my humble, weak way endeavoring to fulfil assignments which come to me by those in authority. I cannot deny that God and his Son Jesus Christ have been with me to bless me that the people might be fed the bread of life.

I am grateful for a positive testimony.

In conclusion I should like to give you a positive testimony from the Old Testament. The Prophet Job had suffered much, and yet his testimony was sufficiently strong that he had the power to subdue and rise above and overcome the weaknesses of the flesh because the Spirit of the Lord had taken precedence in his life. So indelibly did he desire his testimony to be inscribed upon the hearts and minds of men that he said:

Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book!

That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!

For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth:

And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God.

Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me. (Job 19:23-27.)

Yes, my brothers and sisters and friends of the radio and television audience, you may also have a positive testimony that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ, the divine Son of God our heavenly Father, and I trust that those who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness may have a desire within their hearts to accept truth, for all truth emanates from God our eternal Father.

This is my testimony to you today, and I bear it in humility and in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

THE RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL.—This statement presupposes two fundamental facts (1) the former existence of the gospel upon the earth; (2) its loss—disappearance, etc. Was there a divine church? It is as much our mission on earth to proclaim the existence of the gospel in earlier dispensations as anything can be. The world today wonders why we sent missionaries to so-called Christian nations rather than confine our proselyting efforts to the so-called heathen nations. The answer is important. Christianity so-called has lost the knowledge of the true gospel of Jesus Christ as established in former times.

And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you.

For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. (Matthew 24:4-5.)

We go into the world to teach them the former as well as the latter-day gospel of Jesus Christ. Did not the prophets Isaiah and Micah say:

And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.

And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord. (Isaiah 2:2-5; see also Micah 4:1-3.)

Not many years ago in Knoxville, Tennessee, I saw a sign done in bronze on the corner of a bank building which read in substance: "The Church around the corner teaches the old-fashioned gospel of Jesus Christ." This very attempt on the part of this great church to distinguish itself from other present-day churches is evidence sufficient of the necessity of missionary work to be done among those professing faith in new-fashioned religions conceived of men and among those who deny all faiths, deny even the existence of God. We have a mission to preach the gospel—the existence and the true conception of God to our fellow men, the establishment of his Church upon the earth by his Only Begotten Son, Jesus Christ. We cannot, in fact, proclaim the restoration of the gospel without proclaiming its pre-existence. The restoration must bring back that which was originally established. Something else would not be a restoration; neither can you restore that which is already here.

We can restore only that which is lost, gone, disappeared. Restoration means to bring back that which we formerly had.

The foundation upon which the Church of Jesus Christ is organized in these latter days is the statement of Jesus Christ to the boy who, in the strength and simplicity of his faith, prayed to God for enlightenment upon this very subject. Where is the Church of Jesus Christ to be found? The boy of fourteen asked the Lord which of all the sects was right and which he should join. He was told by the Lord that he must join none of them, for they were all wrong, that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight, that they drew near to him with their lips but their hearts were far from him. They teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness but they deny the power thereof. He again forbade the boy to join any of them. A restoration of the divine Church was later to be effected through the instrumentality of this boy as he grew to manhood, the Prophet Joseph Smith. The Angel Moroni later told the Prophet in September of 1823:

Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. (D. & C. 2:1.)

Joseph Smith was not only given the priesthood—the keys of which Elijah held, but previously he and Oliver Cowdery had also received the apostolic priesthood at the hands of Peter, James, and John, with authority and direction once again to select twelve apostles. The priesthood of God was thus once again restored to the earth, the authority by which the divine Church should be reestablished on the earth, so vital to the world at large, whether Christian or heathen, is this restoration, that every bearer of the priesthood should be well-versed in the historic facts such as we have of the original foundations of the gospel—its disappearance and its restoration as well as the first principles of the gospel itself. What could be more appropriate for the large body of the priesthood of the Church than periodically to direct its study to these matters of such great historic value to us and to our missionary work. We have studied them now for three years. We have not been left without evidence of an apostasy from the gospel as given us by the Savior. Our course of study prepared by Elder James L. Barker has given us many important historic facts with which we should be familiar. Others will find and, from time to time, add more to our fund of knowledge just as Elders Parley P. Pratt, James E. Talmage, and B. H. Roberts, and others have done in the past from historic sources. The scriptures themselves prophesy of the falling away from the true gospel of Jesus Christ.

We read:

I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;

Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with longsuffering and doctrine.

For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears;

And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. (II Timothy 4:1-4.)

For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (II Peter 1:21.)

But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction.

And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.

And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not. (Ibid., 2:1-3.)

The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do languish.

The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.

Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left. (Isaiah 24:4-6.)

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.

Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. (Revelation 14:6-7.)

This gospel now restored to earth is a plan of life and salvation, a means by which through our obedience we can be brought back into the presence of our eternal heavenly Father crowned with glory, immortality, and eternal lives. It has always had a universal application. It was the same gospel in Jerusalem, Constantinople, Ephesus, or Rome. It is eternal in its endurance! If we were to go to any of these cities or any place else to which the Apostles of Christ carried the true gospel and they claimed to be the rightful successors of Christ, we would have one absolute, unchangeable, accurate, and at the same time simple standard by which we could judge the validity of their claims, assuming as the facts compel, that after a relatively short time the teachings of those professing to be the followers of Christ differed in practically every country if not in every great city. It has been the purpose of these priesthood courses which Brother Barker has outlined, for us to put these various, present-day claims to this test—Do any of their teachings and practices conform to Christ's?

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel:

Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. (Galatians 1:6-8.) (Italics added.)

For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him. (II Cor. 11:4.)

The pertinent facts have had to be searched out from the writings of almost countless men for nigh onto two thousand years, all of them written with few, if any, exceptions by men who have in turn found the subject matter of their writings as a matter of intensive research. By their very nature the facts found have not lent themselves to too great a simplification. The priesthood quorums for the past three years have struggled with these lessons. Some of them put themselves in the spirit of the researcher and have succeeded in getting the greatest benefit therefrom. They are the ones who have qualified themselves from secular history itself, written for the most part by the clergy, directly affected by the recital of the facts, the changes of doctrine which actually took place in their own churches, the departures from the simple truths enunciated by the Savior himself, the establishment of pagan practices within the church, to establish the departure of all the churches of the world in 1830 from the simple truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

We need only refer to a few examples which are so clearly set forth in the priesthood manuals of the last three years. Take, for example, baptism without authority, performed otherwise than by immersion; the doctrines of infant damnation, of transubstantiation, of predestination, of an immaterial God who created man both body and soul out of nothing, that man may be saved by grace alone, indulgences, absolutions, intercession of saints, along with the miraculous power of relics, of masses, of the worship of images in churches, of purgatory, of monasticism. Such a marked departure from the simple principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The change was so obvious, thinking people were compelled to participate in the great Reformation as soon as the Bible itself came into their hands.

We are told that by the year 1520 there were eighteen translations of the Bible in German, eleven in Italian, four in Bohemian, and two in Dutch. Thus those who read the Bible for the first time were shocked at the depth and the breadth of the departure which had taken place in the churches of the world from the simple truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ. These are the benefits which have come to those who have studied earnestly the priesthood manuals of the last three years.

Others have struggled without getting so deeply into the spirit in which this great work entitled The Divine Church was written. It has been a subject that could not be mastered without effort. Let me say it was not written without effort. There seems to be a relationship between the effort of the author and that required by the student to master the course. Others, we are advised, fell by the wayside and substituted other courses more to their individual liking. They have not prepared themselves to meet these issues so vital and current today in our intercourse with our fellow men in spreading the light which is ours among our neighbors at home and abroad.

For next year we have prepared a course of study to consider the restoration of the same divine Church upon the earth with the restoration of its simple principles and practices. We hope our priesthood leaders will accept these lessons in the spirit in which they are written. In studying them, go back constantly in considering the restoration to the history of the departure therefrom on the part of the churches of the world. We want to continue to perfect ourselves in this respect through a continued study of the important history outlined in the manuals of the last three years. It should be our purpose in teaching and studying these lessons on the restoration, whether we be teacher or student, to relate our studies back to the apostasy by a comparison of the details of the restoration of the gospel with the principles which were taught in the churches of the world in 1830. In this manner can we learn in the next two years as we consider these lessons on the restoration written by Elder Roy A. Welker as much or more of the facts contained in our previous three manuals on the divine Church, dealing as they do with the apostasy as we did during the past years themselves. This is important, too, because many who shall have occasion to attend the priesthood quorum meetings this year and next year were not present during the past three years. The question naturally arises—how can we study the restoration as I have tried to emphasize, without some study of what we are restoring? Answering the question, if the world once had it, what has it done with it? The very fact that these three volumes of Elder Barker's on The Divine Church were not as simple as some desired is added reason why we should read them a second time, and those in the meantime who have been advanced into the Melchizedek Priesthood, or who have returned from the armed forces or from missions or both, might have the benefit of them for the first time. We advocate very seriously a first reading of these manuals by all who have not already mastered them. The dividends to be received from a study such as suggested, are certain, not alone in qualifying us to teach others, but above all to give to each of us a broader foundation of knowledge upon which our own faith may rest. We never lose sight in all our classwork and study of the fact that the glory of God is intelligence. Knowledge is power. Truth is joyous.

Furthermore, in the study of the restoration we should advise ourselves of present-day doctrines of the churches of the world. In many instances we will find that these doctrines have changed somewhat since 1830 to conform more nearly to the teachings of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

We may expect as time goes on, in fact, we may hope that the churches of the world will continue not only to see, but also to appreciate the light which was brought to the earth by the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in these latter days through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith and realize that just as the church was organized by the Savior when he was upon the earth, so must it continue throughout the restoration. We hope the people of the world will learn to appreciate the words of Paul to the Ephesians:

And he gave some, apostles; and some,

Friday, October 1

First Day

prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ:

That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive. (Ephesians 4:11-14.)

May the Lord hasten the day when the peoples of the world will realize the source of this light which is enlightening the world. It should be the purpose of the priesthood of the Church so to qualify themselves that they may individually and collectively be a light set upon a hill.

Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. (Matthew 5:14, 16.)

President David O. McKay:

Elder Henry D. Moyle, of the Council of the Twelve, has just addressed us.

During this morning's session, as this afternoon, we have been highly favored with the inspirational singing of the Relief Society Singing Mothers. I am sure you would have me express to them, your gratitude for their presence and inspiration. I cannot adequately represent you in that expression. I merely say that you see in this group approximately 500 mothers. To produce the beautiful singing, with which they have inspired us, three things, I think, must have aided them:

First, think of the number of practices they have had to attend, in groups, for they come from Salt Lake, Cache Valley, southern towns in Idaho. Then there is the effort which Sister Madsen would have to put forth to meet them, to practice somewhere. I do not know how she does it. So there we see self-denial, willingness to serve on the part of these noble women.

The second element would be their natural ability, their natural talent to

But there is a third element, I think, which makes them so impressive, and that third element is expressed by Tennyson through the mouth of a prince, after his father had rather condemned women for their independence, saying that they should become subservient and so on, but the prince answered:

"She of whom you speak,
My mother, looks as pure as some serene
Creation minted in the golden moods
Of sovereign artists; not a thought, a touch,
But pure as lines of green that streak
the white
Of the first snowdrop's inner leaves."

It is that purity that I attach to the motherhood of the Church.

And when we think of 500 mothers with that purity, we are in a mood to accept that singing at its best and highest.

We thank you, mothers, for the effort you put forth in practicing, for your response to the leadership of your great leader; and for all who have listened to you today I will say, God bless you in your future service in the home, in your Relief Society, and throughout the Church.

Tonight in this building, there will be a bishops' meeting at seven o'clock. Those to be in attendance are stake committees, bishops and counselors, secretaries and quorum advisers in the program for the Aaronic Priesthood under 21; stake presidencies and high councilmen are especially invited.

After the singing by the Choir, the Relief Society Sisters, this conference will be adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

The Sisters will now favor us with the anthem, "Eternal Life," and the closing prayer will be offered by Elder Badwagan Piranian, formerly President of the Palestine-Syrian Mission.

An anthem entitled "Eternal Life," was rendered by the Singing Mothers, after which the benediction was pronounced by Elder Badwagan Piranian.

Conference adjourned until 10 o'clock Saturday morning, October 2.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

The third session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 10:00 a.m., Saturday, October 2.

The choral music for this session was provided by the Bee Hive Girls 40th Anniversary Chorus (Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association), Salt Lake division, with Margrit Lohner conducting and Roy M. Darley at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

The Tabernacle is filled to overflowing. This is the third session of the 125th Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are pleased to announce to those who are standing, that these services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in the Barratt Hall. Also, the services are being televised over KSL Television, Channel Five, of Salt Lake City, and will be heard over radio station KSL and by arrangement through this station, over twelve radio stations in Utah, California, Idaho, Colorado, and Arizona. The names of these stations have already been announced to the radio audience. We thank these stations once again for the service they are rendering to the Church and to all their patrons.

The singing of this session will be furnished by the Beehive 40th Anniversary Chorus from the Salt Lake Division, with Margrit Lohner conducting, and Roy M. Darley at the organ, Kathryn Fairbanks at the piano. We shall begin these services by the Beehive Chorus singing, "Oh, How Lovely Was the Morning," conducted by Sister Lohner. The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Edwin Q. Cannon, recently President of the West German Mission.

Singing by the Chorus, "O How Lovely Was the Morning."

Elder Edwin Q. Cannon, formerly President of the West German Mission, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

We have a note from Dr. George Weber, of the Congregational Church here in the City, that he has with him in the audience, two of his associates in the Congregational Church, Dr. Lyall Dixon of the Colling Street Congregational Church of Australia and Dr. C. Denis Ryan, President of the Congregational Church in Australia. It may be that another appointment will necessitate their leaving, possibly, before the end of the service. We wish to extend a hearty welcome to these officials of the Congregational Church and others who may be present with us this morning, whose presence we have not recognized.

The Beehive Chorus will now favor us with "Flight Song." This was written for the Beehive 40th Anniversary. Following the singing by the Choir, President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency will address us.

The Chorus sang the "Flight Song."

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency will be our first speaker this morning. He will be followed by Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson.

MY BROTHERS AND SISTERS, and friends: I am grateful to our heavenly Father that he has permitted us to meet again together, and specifically that I am privileged to be with you. I sincerely invoke the strength of your faith and your prayers that what I may say may be helpful to you and to me, help to give us strength and courage and determination to carry on the work of the Lord.

Years ago, I heard of a statement from a non-member banker of the city which has always impressed me. He is reported to have said, and of course this in jest, that Mormons have six senses: the five that ordinary mortals have and a sixth that enables him to believe Mormonism.

Saturday, October 2

I am more grateful than I can express for that sixth sense. All down through the ages there have been great bodies of humanity who could not believe the gospel. Adam, his own family, was invaded. His son offered improper sacrifice and then committed murder. From him was taken away the right to perform sacrifice. He was shut out; he lost his priesthood, which has never been restored to his descendants. But that offshoot so begun grew and prospered in the land, and from that time on down, the pagan world has been a great part of humankind. The gospel we know was preached from the beginning, but men would not hearken to it. The Flood came and destroyed the inhabitants except a few, and after the Flood again unrighteousness came among men, and again a great part of them, the greater part of them, refused to follow the Lord.

This gospel of the Christ is the true way of salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of God. It has been the same gospel from the beginning, not always understood, not always preached, but it has been the plan of life, salvation, and exaltation from the time it was taught to Adam.

Paul said: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1:8.)

Well, there are, now, wolves in the sheepfold disguised as sheep. Against them and against their teachings we must all be fighting affirmatively for the truths of the gospel.

The Savior said that in the last days there would be those who would come and say, "Lo, here is Christ, or there. . . ."

"Behold, he is in the desert; . . . he is in the secret chambers; believe it not." (Matt. 24:23, 26.)

You know, I feel that we must not pare that down to mere place. That man and that woman that teach false doctrine as the doctrine of Christ are crying, "Lo, here is Christ," in the sense in which that great statement of the Savior is to be understood.

So I am happy that we Latter-day Saints have a blessing and a heritage that teaches us the truths of this everlasting gospel, which has been with the world from the beginning. We are marvelously blessed and a blessing always carries with it a responsibility. Having that blessing, the responsibility is ours to live in accordance with the truths which we have. We are blessed that we know that life is purposeful. We are blessed that we know that before we came we had an existence. We are blessed to know that we came to this earth which was created for the purpose of giving us the experiences of mortality. We are blessed that we know that if we observe and keep the commandments of the Lord that our salvation and exaltation is assured. That is part of the sixth sense which we have.

We are blessed that we can accept the scriptures and do accept them as the word of God and as a history of his dealings with his people, specifically, the Bible. And we are not prepared, although we believe the Bible only so far as it is translated correctly, we are not prepared to accept these modern translations, which go largely to destroy the Christ and his sacrifice, his resurrection.

We are blessed in that we believe in God, a Personage who has manifested himself in our day, in the great vision of all time, concerning which these children sang so beautifully at the opening of this meeting. We are blessed with that testimony, that the Son was in the image of the Father, and that we also are created in his image. That is part of our blessing.

We are blessed that God not only spoke in ancient times, but that he also speaks today and has spoken, speaks with all of the definiteness and the specifications that he spoke to Israel at Mount Sinai. He does not speak alone in parables as he taught some of the multitudes, you will remember, in Palestine, stating that he taught them thus lest they should understand and believe and he would have to bless them. He speaks definitely, I repeat, that all can understand.

Revelation, continuous revelation, comes from our heavenly Father, and for the Church it comes and comes alone to the President of the Church. Each individual living properly may have that inspiration coming from him, and if you do not have it, amend your ways, and you will get it. Revelation is not intuition, as some would suggest.

We are blessed in the faith that we have, the living, active faith which not alone inspires us to live as we should, but which gives us power and strength. Our people have defined faith as the moving cause of all action. Faith is not trust, faith is a living, and I think an intelligent, force, through which God himself performs his great work.

We are blessed that, along with that faith, we have the priesthood, the Holy Priesthood of God; the authority of that priesthood is the authority to act in the name of our heavenly Father and exercise his power to the extent which that authority has bestowed upon us. We are blessed as thousands know, that that priesthood, with the faith exercised through it, heals our sick, gives us peace, gives us comfort, gives us consolation, helps us in our daily work, day by day. We are blessed in that more than I can express, and I think there are few here today who have not seen a manifestation of the exercise of faith through the administrations of the priesthood.

We are blessed, I was going to say, beyond all, in our knowledge, our testimony, our witness that Jesus is the Christ. And what a responsibility that knowledge brings to us, that he came to earth a sacrifice to answer for the Fall of Adam. How that was brought about, the Lord has not revealed. I am not sure that if he revealed it we finite minds could understand it. A part of the trouble of the world today is that men are declining to believe things they cannot understand. Out of the great myriads of things that pertain to existence and to the universe, how few there are that men can understand and yet, why should we deny the universe and its wonders because finite man cannot comprehend.

Jesus, the Savior of the world, born of woman, divine, lived his life through, became a sacrifice, went into the tomb, arose the morning of the third day, a resurrected Being and thereafter moved among his fellow men, select groups, almost as when he was a mortal, ate with them, talked with them, taught them. We are the beneficiaries of that sacrifice, for by his resurrection he brought resurrection to all of us; every man and woman born in mortality on the earth is the beneficiary of that great sacrifice. I repeat, that testimony and that witness brings to each and every of us a great responsibility. You cannot be an honest professor of Christianity if you do not believe and live as Christ marked out.

We are blessed with a knowledge that just as all down through history men and women have gone astray, so we know that the Church set up by the Christ and by the Apostles who followed him, was not long upon the earth. A few centuries and it had become corrupt. It became an apostate church. This is our witness; this is our testimony. That blessing is one of the blessings that goes with our belief in Mormonism.

Since the true Church had disappeared, bringing down in its ruins the priesthood of the Church, it was necessary that there should be a restoration, and in due course of time that restoration came. You know, it has always been a difficult thing for me, wholly ignoring my beliefs and testimonies and witness in the gospel, how men could say that for the first centuries, millenniums, the Lord taught and spoke with his children, guided them and directed them, told them what to do in their times of distress, and then to say that at the end of the Christian era revelation ceased.

Surely, mankind never was in a more distressed and uncertain condition than today, the day in which we live. Shall we say that God has stopped his voice, has closed his ears to our prayers, that he no longer cares for or loves us? Rationally, the conclusion to that question that he has, would be absurd. So in this day of ours, a little over a hundred years ago, God came, he and his Son, Jesus Christ, and opened up through the Prophet Joseph Smith, this last Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. We Mormons are blessed with a testimony and a witness of that.

We are also blessed with a testimony and witness that not only did the powers and the authority come to Joseph but that he passed them on down, and that today, President McKay, as prophet, seer, and revelator, stands for the Church as the mouthpiece of God, and when he speaks through the inspiration of the Lord, as he will when he speaks to the Church, he proclaims what the Lord would have us know today.

My brothers and sisters, for all of these blessings, I am grateful. I am glad that I have that sixth sense which enables me not only merely to believe, but to have a spiritual knowledge that all that I have said today is true, with countless other principles which there is not time to mention.

I bear you my witness that God lives, that he still speaks, not in vague, mystic terms, but directly. I bear you my witness that Jesus is the Only Begotten of the Father, that he came to the earth, put on mortality and answered the demands of justice by fulfilling his mission, by his giving of his life in the necessary sacrifice to bring us free from the Fall. I bear you my testimony that he is the Son of God, the atoning sacrifice, the first fruits of the resurrection, that we all shall be resurrected, even as was he, and come forth, even as he came forth, in the image in which we live.

I bear you my testimony again that the authority conferred upon Joseph still is in the Church and that the President of the Church, our great leader, President David O. McKay, is the repository at this moment of all the power and authority that was conferred upon Joseph at the beginning of the dispensation, through the ministrations of angels and of the Savior himself.

May God increase this testimony to me, and to you, and having the testimony, will he give us the power and the strength to live in accordance with the principles of the gospel, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency of the Church has just spoken to us. We shall now hear from Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson, a member of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church. Bishop Isaacson will be followed by Elder Thomas E. McKay.

BISHOP THORPE B. ISAACSON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

PRESIDENT MCKAY, President Richards, President Clark, my beloved brothers and sisters, and friends: I humbly pray that the Lord will help me as I speak to you today. I shall be grateful because I know that that will give me more strength than anything I could do.

I wonder if you have ever asked yourself how you would feel if you were occupying this position. If you will answer that, then I am sure that is the way you will feel for me.

I am thankful that we can attend these great conferences of the Church. We are all spiritually strengthened and built up in our faith. I do not know what we would do without our general conferences. I hope and pray that each person in the radio and television audience may be able to partake of the spirit of the conference with us.

You who may have problems—there may be someone in the radio or television audience who has a problem—I hope you can get great comfort from these conferences. I have come to the conclusion that no matter what our problems may be, we can find an answer in the gospel of Jesus Christ. To those who may be discouraged or to those who may be worried, I would plead with you that we try to understand the gospel and adopt its principles in our lives, and I believe we will solve our problems and be able to put discouragement aside.

Some weeks ago it was my privilege to receive an invitation from the United States Administration of Foreign Operations to fulfil an assignment in far-off Iran. I am grateful for that experience. On my way I stopped at Paris and Rome. I will not say anything about those European countries except to say that I was rather disturbed and concerned over their attitude toward, and their criticism of, this great government and this great country. I was worried! I wondered if it were possible for us to purchase friends with money.

After I left Rome, I flew into the city of Damascus, and as I entered that ancient city, I could not help thinking of Paul the Apostle—how he had persecuted the Saints, how he had been stricken blind, and of his repentance. Then I thought of how he was blessed and healed and became a great Apostle of the Lord, Jesus Christ.

From Damascus I flew into the city of Tehran, the capital of Iran. My heart went out to that little nation, only 150 miles from Russia, living in constant fear of that great Soviet power. There I met a people who love freedom and who would not sacrifice that freedom even if it meant the loss of their own lives. My sympathy and interest, and my heart went out to that people. If we believe anything in the brotherhood of men, then I do not see how we can deny helping that people, not with money—they do not seek money or grants or a dole—but they would like some assistance in learning how they can better take care of themselves.

While I was in Iran, I heard great tributes paid to one of our own brethren, one of our own fine men in the Church. I have never heard finer tributes paid to a man than I heard paid to Dr. Franklin S. Harris who went there, when he was president of the Utah State Agricultural College, to render that country assistance. From the Prime Minister to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Education and government officials, how they praised the work and the inspiration and the guidance of that great teacher and that great scientist. He brought great credit to this nation, to this state, and to this Church. He is a great and fine man.

After I finished my assignment in Iran, I flew to the country of Lebanon. Then I arranged for a trip down into a country where I have always wanted to go, down into the country of Jerusalem. Before I left here, President McKay said to me, "You will get out of Jerusalem about what you look for and about what you take in." As we flew over that beautiful blue Sea of Galilee, I could not help thinking of the miracles that had been performed there—the feeding of the five thousand, the healing of the sick, the blessing of the blind that they could see and the crippled that they could walk. I could not help thinking of that beautiful song we sing, "O Galilee! sweet Galilee! Where Jesus loved so much to be."

I think I was never so impressed as I was when viewing that country from the sky, realizing that those rugged mountains were the wilderness we have read and heard so much about. Jesus loved his life in Galilee, and the people loved him. Yes, he went about doing good in Galilee.

Then we followed the River Jordan on its way to the Dead Sea. We landed in the Arab section of Jerusalem. Now there are two sections of that city, the Jewish section and the Arab section. There is great hatred there. I feel sorry for the city of Jerusalem. You cannot cross over from one side to the other, so we landed on the side where we desired to go.

Soon after our arrival we were assigned a very high type Arab Christian guide; he spoke English well. The first place he took us was the approximate location—I do not know whether he was entirely accurate or not—but the approximate place, said he, where Christ was arrested and his mockery trial was held. He was never convicted. Then the guide described the judge, Pontius Pilate, the trial, the charges, the attitude of Pontius Pilate and the mob. Jesus the Savior was never condemned. He was never guilty, but Pontius Pilate did not have the courage to release him, because in the face of that trial, mobs were calling, "Crucify Jesus."

As he led us over those narrow cobblestone streets, up toward the Hill of Calvary, I thought of the song that Sister Jessie Evans Smith sings so beautifully, "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked." As we came near the Hill of Calvary, the guide said, "About here was where the cross was so heavy that Jesus could not carry it any longer. He fell to the ground because of his great suffering, his abuse, and his torture when he was stripped to the waist, whipped with a heavy whip until his flesh lay open. Here he fell, and he was forced to arise and continue." As Jesus was suffering such agony, his mother Mary, seeing him, broke through the crowd to embrace him, but she was not permitted to do so.

As the daughters of Jerusalem were weeping, Jesus told them, "... weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children." (Luke 23:28.) That remark was not a rebuke, but was a warning which was prompted by his great love for mankind. He knew of the later destruction of Jerusalem. A terrible disaster awaited a city steeped in iniquity."

Then as we reached the Hill of Calvary and the guide described the crucifixion, I was severely touched to think that that suffering which we have heard here expressed by President Clark and others today was for us, that we might live again. He had told his disciples that he would be crucified in Jerusalem, but they did not realize the intenseness of the suffering he was willing and anxious—and would have to—endure to accomplish his mission. But what a lesson he had taught us prior to that when he went into the Garden of Gethsemane, and as we walked into the Garden of Gethsemane, I bowed my head in thankfulness to the Savior.

Before his crucifixion, he, too, sought strength from his Father that he could meet that test, and how he met it! Others who had been tortured would scream and condemn and curse, but he had taught the spirit of love all his life, and now he was faced with that test, and how he measured up to it in the face of all that suffering we probably cannot understand. Then from his lips burst forth those great words, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" (Ibid., 23:34), and I thought then and there if Jesus the Christ, the Savior of the world, could say and feel that way after all the torture, agony, and suffering which he had received, surely he taught us the great lesson of love and forgiveness, and I pledged that I would never hold hatred or bitterness or jealousy or anything like that in my heart toward anyone again. What a lesson Jesus had taught the world!

Before his crucifixion, as President Clark just stated, he told his disciples that he would come forth on the third day, and that word soon spread among the people, and a strong guard was then placed over the tomb to see that his body was not stolen by his friends. No, his body was not stolen. An angel from heaven came down and rolled the stone away, and Jesus came forth from the tomb on the third day as he had said he would, and even then, those close to him could not believe. You remember the story of Thomas. He had to see and feel before he could understand that the Savior had risen. Here was the mission of Jesus, death and resurrection.

Then as the guide took us back into the Garden of Gethsemane—that is the place where Jesus loved to go and pray—the guide said of all places which brought comfort to the Savior, it was the Garden of Gethsemane. Here he sought strength and wanted God's help in facing such an ordeal. Yes, he enjoyed having his disciples go with him. Some of them could not understand and did not quite recognize his purposes, but he did not go there to ask the Lord to save his life or to spare his life. He was not afraid to die. That was part of his mission, and he so regarded it. No, he prayed to his Father to give him sustaining patience and power of decision to meet that test as he would be called upon to meet it.

No wonder he was calm; no wonder he was lovable and kind. Even in the face of that torture and suffering. God had prepared him to meet this crisis.

Then the guide took us upon the Mount of Olives; some would say that the Sermon on the Mount was given there, but others would not agree; regardless, that great preachment, probably the greatest preachment of all time, the Sermon on the Mount, should be our guide today, in business, in education, in religion, in all of our phases of life. Oh, it will do us good to read the Sermon on the Mount, and it will make us better people if we will practise its teachings.

Then, as the guide said, "From this spot Jesus ascended to heaven, and that is the last that we have any record of the Savior of the world, the Redeemer of mankind," I felt more grateful than ever in my life that I could carry that story a little farther. I said to the guide, "No, this was not the end of Jesus the Christ, the Redeemer of the world, the Savior of mankind," and I know the guide was sincere when he said, "No, we have no other record of anything on Jesus since he ascended from this place to be with his Father."

Then I told him as best I could in the little time I had that he did reappear again with God the Father to the boy Prophet, Joseph Smith, in an other wooded area. He was interested, but I am sure he could not accept this on that first interview, but I only hope and pray that this intelligent guide will read and study so that he can carry that story on to the time when the gospel was restored again. When I went back to my room, I locked my door and knelt down and thanked God more humbly, I think, than I have ever done before in my life for the teachings, the mission, the resurrection, of the Lord Jesus and the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

Some would say he was a great teacher. Some of the world like to leave it at that. Oh, no, he was more than just a great teacher. He was the Son of God. He was the Redeemer of the world, and he did appear just as surely to the Prophet Joseph in the Sacred Grove as he appeared to his disciples in Jerusalem.

May God bless us that we may appreciate these blessings that have come to us, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS E. McKAY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

PRESIDENT McKAY, Counselors, President Smith and other General Authorities of the Church, my brethren and sisters and friends:

I appreciate more than I can express in words the privilege of being here this morning, to express to you all my love and my thankfulness, for you, for these General Authorities, for all my brethren and sisters, and my loved ones. I want you to know that I appreciate your thoughtfulness in my behalf, I trust that I will merit this kindness throughout my life. I am grateful, especially, to my Father in heaven for his many blessings, for answering your prayers for me. I am a great believer in prayer. "More things," we are told, "are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of," and I know that is true. I know that prayers have been answered; otherwise I would not be here.

I was very thankful to hear announced this morning that Sister Lohner, Margrit Feh Lohner, would conduct the singing, and that Elder Edwin Q. Cannon would offer the invocation. Sister Lohner, or Margrit Feh as we knew her in Europe, was just a little girl when I met her first in the Sunday School. She was the life of the Sunday School in Zurich, Switzerland. Brother Cannon was one of my missionaries, and a wonderful missionary he was. This makes me feel more at home.

I love the gospel, brethren and sisters, and with President Clark who has just delivered a wonderful address and the others who have spoken yesterday and today, I bear my testimony with them that the gospel is true, that the gospel has been given to us for our happiness, not altogether in the life to come, but in this life. I think the Lord has meant that we should be happy here and not wait until the hereafter, and I know we can be.

"Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy," (2 Nephi 2:25) joy in this life, and the greatest joy that any person can have is through obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ. It has been given to us for that purpose, that we might have joy, and I testify to you that through obedience to the gospel we will be happy, the happiest people in the world. I believe we are, today, because of the gospel. I like the expression, too, in the Declaration of Independence:

... all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

We all like that expression, "the pursuit of happiness."

God help us to understand the gospel, and to live it, and to appreciate it. It is a beautiful world. These beautiful flowers, how they add to the enjoyment of all of us, more than we realize! I was delighted, too, more than I can express, that the brethren and sisters in Hawaii remembered the wives of the Authorities, and sent them beautiful orchids. That touched my heart.

Our wives and our mothers are too often forgotten in this world, and, brethren and sisters, you cannot estimate what they mean to all of us, and I think that we should express our appreciation for them more than we do. We men love our wives, of course, but we take it too much for granted, I think, sometimes, and we forget to tell them that we love them. We go home from our work at the office, a little tired, find a wonderful meal prepared for us. What do we do? Get the newspaper, get it in our left hand, and then swallow the meal down with our right, not knowing sometimes what we are eating even. Our wives have spent a lot of time preparing the meal for us, and it would not hurt us to express our appreciation. I think that some of the wives have not had a bouquet of flowers since before we were married. We used to take them a bouquet once in a while when we were "sparking" them, as we say, a box of candy perhaps, and that is the last they have had. It would not hurt us occasionally; in fact, it would help us as well as them, if they were remembered. Many of us do not know when their birthday is; we do not remember the anniversary of our marriage; these little things we forget. My favorite theme is appreciation; I like to talk along this line. My favorite song is "There is beauty all around when there's Love at Home," and I like to hear that. I am glad the home was mentioned so often yesterday. In fact, I appreciate everything that has been done and said in this conference, the singing yesterday and the singing today, the sermons that have been delivered. I am glad I am in harmony with them.

I have not time, it would not be wise to take more time to develop some of these principles. President Clark did it so beautifully this morning, and I am in harmony with everything he said. God bless him and the other Authorities of the Church, they have been very kind to me, and I want to testify to you that I am here today because of their faith, because of the authority of the priesthood which they bear, and with which they used that authority in laying their hands upon my head while I was lying in the hospital. I love these brethren with all my heart, and I love you, my brethren and sisters.

I love the gospel, as I say. There are many tourists in our midst that come and go. I wish they would call at the Bureau of Information, or perhaps the Church Office Building and ask for a little card on which are printed our Articles of Faith. They are wonderful. Many of these tourists do not know whether we are Christians or not, for example they ask: "Where do you fit in? Are you Protestants?" "No." "Are you Catholics?" "No." "Well, what are you?" "We are members of the Church of Jesus Christ. Jesus is our head. It is his Church to which we belong." Our first Article of Faith would answer that question. "We believe in God, the eternal Father, and in his son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost." And then the other articles—they are very short. It is wonderful how concisely they are written, and yet how instructive they are.

We are thought by some to be a little narrow. Well, the gospel is for all. "We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved"—not just Mormons, but "all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel." And so on down.

We love all mankind. "We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience," another article says,

"and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may."

And the thirteenth article is my favorite:

"We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul—We believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things." Then in conclusion, "If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things."

Brethren and sisters, it would be well for all of us to learn these Articles of Faith, as well as the tourists, and not only learn them, but also live them, and may God help us so to do, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I HUMBLY pray that the Lord will bless me. I take the privilege of letting my first words be those of appreciation. I bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I pray daily to a personal God. I bear testimony to the divine mission of Jesus Christ, of Joseph Smith, and of President David O. McKay. I never utter these words and bear this testimony but something fine, something worthy within me swells my bosom and makes me proud, and yet extremely humble.

I am grateful for this song, "Come, come, ye Saints" that has just been sung. It truly is a classic among the Latter-day Saint people. And if President Clark will permit, I would love to read part of his eloquent tribute to this glorious, west land of the pioneers. After expressing himself in his book, To Them of the Last Wagon, he finishes with these words:

Log cabins grew into adobe houses and these into buildings of brick and stone. A mighty Temple, dedicated to the work of the Lord, rose in their midst, carved from the granite of canyon walls, the first of

President David O. McKay:

Elder Thomas E. McKay, Assistant to the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. We are glad he is improving in his health.

The congregation will now sing, "Come, Come, Ye Saints," directed by Elder Richard P. Condie. After the singing, Elder Oscar A. Kirkham will speak to us.

The Chorus and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "Come, Come Ye Saints."

President David O. McKay:

Elder Oscar A. Kirkham, of the First Council of Seventy, will now speak to us. He will be followed by Elder Stapley, of the Council of the Twelve.

eight that this people were to build to the salvation of their dead. Meetinghouses everywhere welcomed the worshiper. Stores, banks, factories, mines, mills, smelters, came into being. Flocks and herds peopled the ranges. Schools and colleges came early and multiplied. The hive of industry became the symbol of a great commonwealth. Faith and strength and righteousness bore their fruit of comfort and safety and the joy of living.

All through the years the people have been blessed, even in their most dire need, blessed, they feel, beyond all other peoples on earth,—blessed in their right to get and safely to keep the fruits of their own labors: blessed in their right peaceably to assemble, to discuss their grievances, to speak fully their minds, to print without let or hindrance what they thought and said: blessed to live under a reign of law and order: blessed to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences under the law of the land.

So we honor these men and women of iron will, of surpassing spirituality, of a trusting, living, simple faith. They have done their work: they have earned their reward, which God is bestowing upon them. None can rob them of the fruits of their labors. They are secure.

Saturday, October 2

Second Day

And now the natural, obvious question: What of us? Can we keep and preserve what they wrought? Shall we pass on to our children the heritage they left us, or shall we lightly fritter it away? Have we their faith? . . . Can we do the thousands of little and big things that made them the heroic builders of a great church, a great commonwealth? (To Them of the Last Wagon, pp. 43-45.)

I bow in reverence, I humbly pray it shall ever be kept alive within my heart, a deep and abiding appreciation for that glorious sacrifice of men and women. I caught a bit of the spirit of it last month when I toured the Southwest Indian Mission. It was great to be down on the San Juan, down on the Colorado. It was great to see far-off on the cliff yonder, miles away, to see four great stalwart trees that the Pioneers had planted years ago. It humbled me greatly to stand at the graveside of those who sacrificed in the opening up of that great western country. Somehow I wished that I might have lived with them.

One day on this recent trip of the Southwest Indian Mission, a Navajo Indian boy, with a group of his little friends, was being taken to Southern California to live for the winter in the comfortable homes of Latter-day Saint people, to enjoy their hospitality and spiritual friendship. One little fellow with a little shattered suitcase was crying while his Navajo mother was drying her eyes, yet stoically standing by his side without a word to say, and another son, not so small, he was about sixteen years of age, courageously stood by. Great things have been accomplished by the boys of fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen: these are great years in a young man's life, and "Benjamin," the older Navajo boy, put his hand on the head of his little brother and said, "We don't cry." That was all. The little fellow braced himself to what was to him a great task, leaving mother and the other children. They drove away to a new home.

Thank God for "Come, come, ye Saints." Thank God for the people who pioneered the great wasteland of the Southwest and in many places restored it. I have in my heart also great gratitude toward the leadership of these early days in our Church.

When Brigham Young and Joseph Smith met for the first time, here are the words describing that meeting:

We proceeded to Kirtland and stopped at John P. Greene's, who had just arrived there with his family. We rested a few minutes, took some refreshments and started to see the Prophet. We went to his father's house and learned that he was in the woods chopping. We immediately repaired to the woods, where we found the Prophet, and two or three of his brothers, chopping and hauling wood. Here my joy was full [said Brigham Young] at the privilege of shaking the hand of the Prophet of God, and receiving the sure testimony, by the spirit of prophecy, that he was all that any man could believe him to be as a true prophet. (DHC, I, p. 297, Note.)

Be ye humble; and the Lord thy God shall lead thee by the hand, and give thee answer to thy prayers. (D. & C. 112:10.)

May I note other great attributes of the Latter-day Saint people: A great heritage, a humble, noble leadership; an all-participating membership. My, how we should thrill. It was inspiring to me yesterday, when President McKay said "Every member of this Relief Society Singing Mothers Chorus has one other Church service job besides singing in this chorus." How lovely it is—nearly all members participating. That is the Latter-day Saint way.

Drive on the hillside here in Salt Lake City, if you have not done it before, and see the Primary Hospital, built for little children. It is a beautiful structure, and as you drive along think of its being built by pennies and the love of people and children—an all-participating membership!

Finally, these few words: The great objective, said President Richards to us the other day, of this conference, is the building of the kingdom of God on earth. Yes, missionaries by the thousands, the welfare program reaching out its arms to help and bless, temples being erected throughout the world, as we labor we are blessed.

"There are bridges, young men and young women, to be built, and we will build them. There are houses to make and we will light their windows. There are those who suffer, and we will ease their sorrow. There are divine blessings ever hovering about us."

I humbly pray that we may worthily continue these great blessings, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I CAN THINK of easier ways, my brothers and sisters, to commence Church activity, than standing before you today.

I am grateful to be with you. A few days ago it was rather doubtful whether I could appear in conference, but I chanced to meet President McKay. He informed me I was scheduled to speak, and I felt if it were President McKay's desire that I speak to you, the Lord would bless and sustain me. When I arrived this morning, he suggested that I might be called on in this meeting, and of all things, I left my talk at home. I told him, however, that I was not sure that was the talk I should give. I therefore, need the inspiration and the blessings of the Lord with me. I ask for an interest in your faith and prayers.

Brothers and sisters, I would be most ungrateful if I failed to express gratitude and appreciation for the faith and the prayers of the Saints throughout the Church for my recovery from the illness that has inactivated me the past four months. I have been cognizant in many ways of your appeals for divine favor in my behalf, and I acknowledge to the Lord before you the healing blessings of his holy Spirit. I am here today because of his blessings.

I want to express appreciation to my brethren of the General Authorities, whose brotherhood, love, affection, and faithful devotion I shall always remember with tender emotions and fond memories for the benefit of their administrations, their faith and prayers, in which all of you have taken a part

President David O. McKay:

Elder Oscar A. Kirkham, of the First Council of Seventy, has just addressed us. We shall now hear a few words from Elder Delbert L. Stapley, of the Council of the Twelve. When I say "a few words," I have in mind gratitude that Elder Stapley can be with us today and we urge him not to over exert himself.

and confirmed by your own supplications to God, the eternal Father of us all. From the depths of my heart I thank all of you, and express profound gratitude and appreciation for your kindness and for your love. I sincerely hope my appreciation can be adequately evidenced by my faithful devotion to the ministry of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, whose servant I am.

I bear witness to you that Jesus is the Christ, the Only Begotten Son of the living God, our Lord, Redeemer, Savior, and Advocate with the Father, the Light and Life of men, and the only name under heaven, given among men whereby salvation can be obtained.

I like these words from the Apostle John quoting the Savior to his disciples:

If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true.

There is another that beareth witness of me; and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of me is true.

Ye sent unto John, and he bare witness unto the truth.

But I have greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.

And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. (John 5:31-33; 36-37.)

John the Baptist so early bore witness that Jesus was the Christ. He had that most wonderful of opportunities of baptizing his Lord and witnessing the Holy Ghost descend upon him in the sign of a dove, confirming the Lord's Messiahship. The Apostle John later

Saturday, October 2

said, "If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater." (1 John 5:9.)

The God and Father of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, spoke from the heavens on the occasion of Christ's baptism and said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. 3:17.) I think of that other occasion when Christ took Peter, James, and John with him on the Mount and was transfigured before them, Elias and Moses appeared, and then the voice of God from heaven again declared: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." (Ibid., 17:5.)

If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater. (1 John 5:9.)

The ministry of Jesus of Nazareth is itself a witness and testimony that he was the Son of the living God. As we have heard this morning, Christ was crucified and arose from the grave in a glorious resurrection. He first appeared unto Cephas after his resurrection and then to his disciples, members of the Twelve. Later he appeared unto about five hundred brethren at once. For forty days following his resurrection, he personally ministered among men and taught them; he counseled and directed them in the ministry. They went forth testifying of him that he was the Redeemer and Son of the living God. Later he was seen of Paul the Apostle, who also testified of him gloriously. The Savior stated: "... for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me." (John 5:36.)

There is the other witness, spoken of by Jesus, the witness of the Holy Ghost, that testified to the spirit of his disciples, that this was the Son of God who had called them, and whom they served. The two angels who stood by as he was received into heaven said he should so come in like manner as they had seen him go into heaven.

Shortly thereafter followed the long period of spiritual darkness, and then came the time for the last and most important of all God's dispensations to be ushered in; therefore, because of its importance, God the eternal Father and his Son Jesus Christ personally appeared to the boy, Joseph Smith, and informed him of his holy calling. Later Moroni, a resurrected prophet of the living God, from the Nephite nation, came to him and showed him where the plates were deposited that contained a record of a branch of God's people. This record Joseph later translated by the gift and power of God.

Three men were shown these plates by an angel of God and the voice of the Lord declared from heaven that the record was true and the translation correct, and they should so testify to all the world. And then later eight men had the privilege of seeing these plates. All these men are witnesses to the divine calling of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

The Lord gave revelations to the Prophet Joseph singly upon many occasions; also to Joseph and Oliver Cowdery; also to Joseph and Martin Harris. Heavenly resurrected beings manifested themselves unto him and them and conferred upon them the gifts, the authorities, and the powers to officiate in all the affairs of God's kingdom. It seems fitting that the man who testified so early of the Savior, John the Baptist, should come and confer upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, the Aaronic Priesthood, and that later the three men, Peter, James, and John, who were with the Savior on the Mount when he was transfigured before them, and God again testified of his Son, should come and confer upon the Prophet Joseph and Oliver Cowdery the Melchizedek Priesthood, the priesthood after the order of the Son of God that has to do with the spiritual endowments, authorities, and blessings of God's Church.

My brothers and sisters, the Prophet, unschooled, unlearned, could not have given to the world what he was privileged to reveal unless God were with him. God inspired him in all that he did. There were living witnesses who testified to his divine calling for heavenly messengers had manifested this truth to several brethren. Surely if we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is more certain. The office of the Holy Ghost is to testify of the Father and Son, it is also the spirit of truth, and when it testifies to the spirit of men there comes an inward feeling whether a thing is true or whether it is not true. In the case of the Prophet, Joseph Smith, it was true, for men in his day and since have received that witness and testimony which the Holy Ghost itself manifests unto those who seek after truth.

And again the works of Joseph Smith—analyze them; everything about them indicates his prophetic calling. Where a testament is, there must of necessity be the death of a testator, and surely this was a testament unfolding and revealing again God's kingdom with all of its saving ordinances, principles, and divine powers. A testament is not of force until after men are dead. The Prophet gave his life to seal that testimony, and thus the sacrifice of his life becomes a witness to all men of the truth and power of his holy calling and ministry.

My brothers and sisters, before the Prophet Joseph Smith departed this life he conferred upon the Twelve all the keys, powers, and authorities to carry forward this important work of the latter-day; that work has not stopped in its progress; it has gone forward; and the fruits of it are a witness to all people of its truth.

I bear testimony to you that the Presidents of the Church, our spiritual leaders who have followed Joseph Smith, are prophets of God. I cannot quote the exact words, but in the Thursday temple meeting of all the General Authorities, where we had gone in fasting and prayer in preparation for this great conference, President McKay said, "Brethren, I want to say to you that Christ is at the helm of this Church and he is guiding it by his holy power."

I received a witness from the Spirit that President McKay's statement was true. I bear that witness to you, my brothers and sisters. I know that leaders of other churches might make similar statements, but would the Holy Ghost manifest the truth of it to their listeners? If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater, which witness all can receive from the Holy Ghost, for which I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Delbert L. Stapley of the Council of the Twelve has just addressed us. We pray that the effort he has put forth will not take from his physical strength which he needs during his recuperation from a serious illness.

The Beehive Chorus will now sing "The Twenty-Third Psalm," conducted by Margrit Lohner. To these hundreds of sweet young girls who have rendered such inspiring service we extend our gratitude. You have rendered a service most beautiful and commendable. In making others happy you will bring happiness to yourself. May that inspire you all through your future lives, that you may continue to devote your talents, your sweetness, your efforts, to the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God. Thank you, Sister Lohner, and all these sweet girls who have responded so willingly to your leadership.

The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Arthur Glaus, formerly president of the East German Mission, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon. Brother Roy M. Darley has been at the organ, Sister Kathryn Fairbanks at the piano.

The Bee Hive Girls Chorus sang a selection, "The Twenty-third Psalm."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Arthur Glaus, formerly President of the East German Mission.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALLOf the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

MY BELOVED brothers and sisters and friends, I approach this opportunity with fear and trembling, humility, and fasting and prayer.

It was my privilege in the month of August to attend the great pageant at Palmyra, and I sat entranced with some forty thousand others at the Hill Cumorah, looking up at that dark hill as the night came on. I heard the voices of those who took the parts of many prophets, Nephi, Jacob, Alma, Amulek, Ammon, and finally the prophet, Samuel the Lamanite, all prophesying as to the coming of the Savior of the world to them here on this continent.

It was inspirational as the program progressed to its conclusion, to see the beautiful picture as a Personage came above the hill. Because of the blackness under him, it appeared as though he stood in mid-air, with long white robes flowing in the breeze that blew from the top of the hill. I was inspired, and that inspiration has remained with me ever since. There was being portrayed the story of the coming of the Savior to this land when these thousands of people gathered at the temple, and were looking intently up toward heaven. They heard the voice, neither loud nor harsh, but a penetrating one, and it pierced their very souls. The third time they could understand, and they heard the voice say:

Behold my Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name—hear ye him. (3 Ne. 11:7.)

Then came the voice of him who had appeared to these Nephite people saying: "... I am Jesus Christ." (Ibid., 11:10.) His message then and before and since always to his people has been:

... to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. (1 Sam. 15:22.)

So said the Prophet Samuel to the disobedient King Saul who lost his kingdom because of rebellion. The prophet warned Saul that he should discomfit his enemies but that he should not retain the spoils of war. But the bleating of the sheep and the lowing of the oxen revealed that Saul and his people had disobeyed the simple command of the Lord. Samuel chastised:

Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord?

... rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. (Ibid., 15:22-23.)

Saul asked forgiveness, but the prophet replied:

... thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, and the Lord hath rejected thee from being king over Israel. (Ibid., 15:26.)

In his arrogant and haughty state he took things in his own hands wholly disregarding the commandments of the Lord.

Samuel scolded:

... When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the Lord anointed thee king over Israel?

Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the Lord, but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst evil in the sight of the Lord? (Ibid., 15:17, 19.)

Saul rationalized. It was easy for him to obey as to the disposition of the kings, for what use were conquered kings? But why not keep the fat sheep and cattle? Was not his royal judgment superior to that of lowly Samuel? Who was Samuel that his words should be obeyed implicitly, and who would know anyway?

How like Saul are many in Israel today. One will live some of the Lord's revelation on health except that he must have his occasional cup of coffee; she will not use tobacco nor liquor for which she has no yearning anyway but must have the comforting cup of tea.

He will serve in a Church position, for here is activity which he likes and honor which he craves, or contribute to a chapel where his donation will be known, but rationalization is easy as to tithepaying which he finds so difficult. He cannot afford it—sickness or death has laid a heavy hand—he is not sure it is always distributed as he would have it done, and who knows anyway of his failure?

Another will attend some meetings but Saul-like rationalize as to the rest of the day. Why should he not see a ball game, a show, do his necessary yard work, or carry on business as usual?

Another would religiously attend his outward Church duties but resist any suggestions as to family frictions in his home life or family prayers when the family is so hard to assemble?

Saul was like that. He could do the expedient things but could find alibis as to the things which countered his own desires.

To obey! To hearken! What a difficult requirement! Often we hear: "Nobody can tell me what clothes to wear, what I shall eat or drink. No one can outline my Sabbaths, appropriate my earnings, nor in any way limit my personal freedoms! I do as I please! I give no blind obedience!"

Blind obedience! How little they understand! The Lord said through Joseph Smith:

Whatever God requires is right, no matter what it is, although we may not see the reason thereof until long after the

Saturday, October 2

events transpire. (Scrapbook of Mormon Literature, vol. 2, p. 173.)

When men obey commands of a creator, it is not blind obedience. How different is the cowering of a subject to his totalitarian monarch and the dignified, willing obedience one gives to his God. The dictator is ambitious, selfish, and has ulterior motives. God's every command is righteous, every directive purposeful, and all for the good of the governed. The first may be blind obedience, but the latter is certainly faith obedience.

The Patriarch Abraham, sorely tried, obeyed faithfully when commanded by the Lord to offer his son Isaac upon the altar. Blind obedience? No. He knew that God would require nothing of him which was not for his ultimate good. How that good could be accomplished he did not understand. He knew that he had been promised that through the seed of the miracle son Isaac should all the multitude of nations be blessed, and God having promised, it would be fulfilled. Undoubtedly questions arose in his mind as to how these things could be if Isaac were liquidated, but he knew that the Lord was just and would provide a way. Had not the Lord fulfilled the promise made wherein this very son was to be conceived when Abraham was old and Sarah far past the normal bearing period? In Hebrews, we read:

Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude and as the sand which is by the sea shore innumerable. (Heb. 11:12.)

Abraham was now called upon to sacrifice this beloved son who as yet had no posterity. But with faith supreme, Abraham:

... offered up Isaac ... accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead. (Ibid., 11:17, 19.)

Knowing that God would make no capricious nor unnecessary demands, that the lad could be raised even from death if necessary, Abraham obeyed. A ram was provided.

Perhaps the criminal in the penitentiary obeys blindly, for here is compulsion. Most of his decisions are made for him. Somewhat comparable are dictator's subjects whose work, recreation, religion, and other activity are controlled and regimented. Here is blind obedience.

It was not blind faith when the patriarch Noah built an ark some forty-two centuries ago or when the prophet Nephi built a boat about twenty-five centuries ago. Each was commanded by the Lord to construct a seaworthy vessel. An unprecedented total flood was to envelop the earth in the one case and the greatest ocean to be crossed by the other. No experience of either builder could give guidance in these new adventures—no previous flood or ocean crossing had ever come in the life of either—there was nothing on which to base construction except directions from the Lord. Here was no blind obedience. Each knew the goodness of God and that he had purpose in his strange commands. And so each with eyes wide open, with absolute freedom of choice, built by faith. Noah's family was saved from physical drowning and spiritual decadence, and Nephi's people were saved likewise.

No swords nor bayonets, no famine nor pestilence drove the Lehiters from the lush shores of Bountiful, but seeing obedience led them across uncharted oceans. The Lord had promised:

... inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper, and shall be led to ... a land which is choice above all other lands. (1 Nephi 2:20.)

And with compliance born of faith and confidence, the vessel was finished, loaded, and launched.

There was no compulsion in Noah's movements—no blind obedience. It was not raining when this man of God made the craft which was to save his family. After its completion, a full week of dry weather preceded the storm. Here was obedience born in testimony of the power, sureness, justice of God. And Noah's trust was justified, and a race was perpetuated.

When men speak of all faith and all obedience as blind, are they not covering their own weaknesses? Are they not seeking an alibi to justify their own failure to hearken?

A man obeys strictly the income tax law and pays fully and before due date his property taxes but justifies himself in disregarding the law of the Sabbath or the payment of tithes on time, if at all. In the one case he may suffer only deprivation of freedom or resources or lose his home or personal property, but in the other he opens doors to the loss of a soul. The spiritual as truly brings penalties as the temporal, the principal difference is the swiftness of punishment, the Lord being so long-suffering.

One would hardly call the first blind obedience, yet he sometimes regards the spiritual commands as such.

Is it blind obedience when the student pays his tuition, reads his text assignments, attends classes, and thus qualifies for his eventual degrees? Perhaps he himself might set different and easier standards for graduation, but he obeys every requirement of the catalog whether or not he undersetands its total implication.

Is it blind obedience when one regards the sign "High Voltage—Keep Away" or is it the obedience of faith in the judgment of experts who know the hazard?

Is it blind obedience when the air traveler fastens his seat belt as that sign flashes or is it confidence in the experience and wisdom of those who know more of hazards and dangers?

Is it blind obedience when the little child gleefully jumps from the table into the strong arms of its smiling father, or is this implicit trust in a loving parent who feels sure of his catch and who loves the child better than life itself?

Is it blind obedience when an afflicted one takes vile-tasting medicine prescribed by his physician or yields his own precious body to the scalpel of the surgeon or is this the obedience of faith in one in whom confidence may safely be imposed?

Is it blind obedience when the pilot guides his ship between the buoys which mark the reefs and thus keeps his vessel in deep water or is it confidence in the integrity of those who have set up protective devices?

Is it then blind obedience when we, with our limited vision, elementary knowledge, selfish desires, ulterior motives, and carnal urges, accept and follow the guidance and obey the commands of our loving Father who begot us, created a world for us, loves us, and has planned a constructive program for us, wholly without ulterior motive, whose greatest joy and glory is to "bring to pass the immortality and eternal life" of all his children?

Blind obedience it might be when no agency exists, when there is regimentation, but in all of the commands of the Lord given through his servants, there is total agency free of compulsion. Some remonstrate that agency is lacking where penalties are imposed and condemnations threatened—to be damned for rejecting the gospel seems harsh to some and to take away free agency. This is not true, for the decision is ours—we may accept or reject, comply or ignore.

In all of our life activities it is the same—we may attend college or stay away from the campus; we may apply ourselves to our studies or waste our time; we may fulfil all requirements or ignore them. The decision is ours; the agency is free.

We may take the medicine or secretly pour it down the drain; we may yield our bodies to the surgeon's knife or refuse his service; we may follow paths or get lost in the jungle; but we cannot avoid the penalties of disobedience to law.

We may speed one hundred miles an hour, park our car against fireplugs, drive on the wrong side of the road, resist arrest, rob a bank, but we will pay penalties sooner or later, even the utmost farthing. No soul is clever enough to evade penalties indefinitely or to counter this extensive and basic law of retribution. Without free agency men would be lifeless, limp weaklings, and worthless to themselves and to the world.

Our heavenly Father, knowing all things, gave us this fundamental law of free agency. He could force our obedience, compel our goodness, regiment our acts, but that would make of us spineless creatures without will or purpose, or destiny.

Saturday, October 2

Second Day

Our Lord wept bitterly when he saw his creatures breaking his commandments in the pre-deluge days, but he refrained from force. They must have their agency:

The Lord said unto Enoch: Behold these thy brethren; they are the workmanship of mine own hands, and I gave unto them their knowledge, in the day I created them; and in the Garden of Eden, gave I unto man his agency. (Moses 7:32.)

They were permitted to ignore the warnings of the prophets till their cup of iniquity was full, ran over, and flooded the world and drowned its inhabitants.

Rewards for faithfulness and penalties for disobedience are certain. God is longsuffering, patient, and kind, whereas men and natural laws are often swift and cruel.

Our righteous and wise parents, Adam and Eve, were exemplary in the matter of obedience born of childlike faith:

... And Adam was obedient unto the commandments of the Lord.

And after many days an angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying: Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him: I know not, save the Lord commanded me.

And then the angel spake, saying: This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth. (Ibid., 5:5-7.)

Blind obedience? Assuredly not. They had known Jehovah, heard his voice, walked with him in the Garden of Eden, and knew of his goodness, justice, and understanding. And so for "many days" they killed the blemishless lambs and offered them without knowing why, but in total confidence that there was righteous purpose in the law and that the reason would unfold later after compliance.

Obedience was paramount in the healing of the lepers. They cried:

Jesus, Master, have mercy on us.

And when he saw them, he said unto them,

Go shew yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed. (Luke 17:13-14.)

It is certain that the priests made no contribution to the healing. The ten had probably lived all their lives in the jurisdiction of the priests who are not known ever to have healed lepers. The miracle happened when, but not until, they obeyed in every detail. No blind obedience here. These lepers knew Christ would not fail them. They had faith not only in his power but also in his goodness and integrity.

So also did the man born blind move toward wholeness of sight, yet he obeyed the voice of authority. Questioned by the skeptical Pharisees as to his unparalleled sight recovery, he stoutly maintained,

He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed, and do see.

... He is a prophet.

... one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see. (John 9:15, 17, 25.)

A simple little formula it was. A little spittle, a little clay, a simple anointing, a simple command, and an act of faith obedience; and darkness was replaced with light. "Lord, I believe," he said as he worshiped in gratitude. Blind obedience, would you say? It was a blind man, but a seeing obedience. The Savior had:

... spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay.

And said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam. ... He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing. (Ibid., 9:6-7.)

How simple the process! How gentle the command! How faithful the obedience! How glorious the reward!

Strange—we provide pure, sterile tissue for spittle and forbid expectorating even on sidewalks.

We bathe with soap, scrub with disinfectants, and scald dishes, pots, and pans with boiling water to kill the germs from the filth of clay.

We use for culinary purposes and especially in hospitals and sickrooms only water purified by chemical processes.

But here the Master disregarded all our rules of sanitation and prescribed spittle, germ-ridden clay, and impure water from the contaminated pool of Siloam which bathed the sweaty bodies of laborers and the sore bodies of the sick and diseased.

Is there healing in mere clay to make eyes see? Is there medicinal value in the spittle to cure infirmities? Are there curative properties in the waters of Siloam to open eyes of congenital blind? The answer is obvious. The miracle was conceived in the womb of faith and born and matured in the act of obedience.

Had the command involved oil instead of spittle, herbs instead of clay, and waters of a pure bubbling spring instead of filthy Siloam, the result would have been the same. But some would have said that oil and herbs and pure water had healed the eyes, but even the untrained must know that these could not cure one. Consequently, only one conclusion could be drawn: The unparalleled miracle was positively the result of faith obedience. But had the sightless one disobeyed any of the phases of the command, he would indubitably have suffered till death with continued blindness.

Though there is no compulsion, the spiritual laws of today must also be obeyed if blessings are to be realized, for as the Lord has said:

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise. (D. & C. 82:10.)

And:

Mine arm is kindled against the rebellious. (See ibid., 56:1.)

And:

And the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow; for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed. (Ibid., 1:3.)

And:

Behold, I, the Lord, utter my voice, and it shall be obeyed.

Wherefore, verily I say, let the wicked take heed, and let the rebellious fear and tremble; and let the unbelieving hold their lips, for the day of wrath shall come upon them as a whirlwind, and all flesh shall know that I am God. (Ibid., 63:5-6.)

And my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer. (Ibid., 105:6.)

And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. (Ibid., 130:21.)

And so we render intelligent, constructive obedience when we voluntarily, humbly, and happily obey the commands of our Lord:

1. Be ye clean who bear the vessels of the Lord.
2. Thou shalt go to the house of prayer upon my holy day.
3. Bring all the tithes into the storehouse.
4. Honor the Sabbath Day to keep it holy.
5. Ye are the temple of God—defile it not with liquor, tobacco, tea, and coffee.
6. Repent or suffer.
7. Bow down upon thy knees before the Lord.
8. Judge not that ye be not judged.
9. Except a man be born of the water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.
10. A man must enter into the new and everlasting covenant to be exalted.
11. Woe unto those who come not unto this priesthood.

May God bless all of us, members of his Church, and all others, in the great world which he has created and peopled to live and obey his commandments, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEGRAND RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I FEEL GRATEFUL, my brothers and sisters, for the privilege of attending this conference with you. I have been built up and strengthened; and as I have counted my blessings before the Lord, for which I thank him, I realize that most of them are because of my membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I do not know what the Lord could add more than he has. I believe I am one of the happiest men in all the world. I thank him for membership in his great Church. I thank him for the Holy Priesthood that I bear. I thank him for the hope of obtaining eternal life with my loved ones, my wife and children, my father and mother, and brothers and sisters, and with these my brethren of the General Authorities, and you the Saints of Zion, through obedience to the laws and the ordinances of the gospel. Of that I have a positive assurance in my heart. I know we have the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I thank the Lord for these, my brethren, for President McKay and his Counselors. I know they are prophets of God, and I know the Lord is inspiring them in their work. They are great leaders, and I thank the Lord for them and for the Twelve, and for all the General Authorities, and while I feel the least among them, I feel grateful for their companionship. I honor them, and I revere them, and I thank God for the many gifts they possess for the building of his kingdom, and I testify to you that they are men who have consecrated their lives to this great work in which we are engaged.

And I thank him for you, the Saints of Zion. There are many noble leaders in the stakes and wards, the auxiliaries and the boards of this Church, and I love you. You are wonderful. I can best express my regard for you in the words of Peter of old to the Saints of his day. He said:

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called out of darkness into his marvellous light. (I Peter 2:9.)

And it is because we have then called out of darkness into his marvelous light that we can be so happy and enjoy the blessings that are ours.

I thank the Lord for the great missionary system of this Church, that is sharing with the honest in heart the world over the blessings that are ours, when they are willing to heed the voice of the servants of God who are sent unto them. At the present time the Church is probably engaged in its greatest missionary effort in its entire history. That is because of the great leadership we have. Only a few conferences ago President Richards invited all men everywhere, in and out of the Church, to unite in building the kingdom of God in the earth. What more could He ask from righteous men and women the world over?

When the Christ was asked to teach his disciples to pray, after duly saluting the Father, the first thing he taught them to pray for was, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." (Matt. 6:10.) And that is what we pray for daily, and that is what we work for, and we have the positive assurance through our faith and through the testimony of the Holy Ghost that we are not praying nor working in vain, for the kingdom of God has been set up in the earth, and we are privileged to lend our strength to help establish it among men and carry it to the nations of the earth.

In giving the dream of Nebuchadnezzar and its interpretation, the Prophet Daniel said: "But there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days." (Daniel 2:28.) And then he saw the establishment of this work that we are engaged in and that it should become ultimately as a great mountain and fill the whole earth. I know that is true. There is a God in heaven that made known that secret, and we know it by the power and the testimony of the Holy Ghost.

Then I think it was in our last conference, or the one before, that President McKay invited all of us as members of the Church to be missionaries for the Church. We just could not have the Church of Jesus Christ without the spirit of missionary work.

After the Savior was resurrected and appeared to his Apostles, he sent them into all the world to preach the gospel, to every creature, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. He said,

The missionary work was not to end back in those early days, because when his disciples asked for the sign of his second coming, he told them of the wars and the rumors of wars and pestilence, and earthquakes and the fall of nations, then he added, "... this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Ibid., 24:14.) So the preaching of the gospel unto all nations is an evidence that the end is near at hand. Because Jesus knew that his Church would continue this great missionary work, he told his disciples, "... and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Ibid., 28:20.)

The Saints of Zion have responded to the call of these, the Presidency of the Church, as they have never done before. We find from our records that during the first eight months of this year we have baptized 10,929 converts, those who have come to know the truth. That does not include the baptisms of the children of members. That is a tremendous growth and increase in the work of the Lord.

And then when you go among the Saints and interview the prospective missionaries and go into the mission fields and interview the missionaries and find the spirit that God is endowing them with, you just know that this cannot be the work of man. It is the work of God; no man could do what the Lord has done.

To me, the missionary system of this Church is one of the greatest institutions the world has ever known. In no other way has there been such evidence of sacrifice and devotion and love and loyalty to God and to his work as in this great missionary work of his Church. We find it difficult at times to turn members down who want to go on missions. One of my good friends was getting up in years and I tried to persuade him he was too old to go on a mission, and he said, "Well, Brother Richards, what could I do that would be more wonderful than to die in the service of the Lord?" Another good brother came to me who had been on a mission with his wife and said, "If I sell my home and automobile, we can go on another mission"—willing to give the last that they had in order to accomplish this missionary work, and that is the spirit we find wherever we go.

A young man reporting his mission in Oregon a short time ago, who was himself a convert to the Church, came down with his fist on the pulpit and said, "I would not take a check for a million dollars for the experience of my mission."

And the brethren made a call for the Saints who could afford it to send in some of their surplus funds to help carry on the missionary work with some of these young people in foreign missions where they are not prospered and blessed as we are here in America, and the response has been wonderful, and every time a remittance comes you feel to thank the Lord for the faith of him who sent it.

While I was still the Presiding Bishop, following a general conference, I received a letter from a lady school-teacher in Nevada. She said, "It was said in conference that fifty-five dollars a month was the average cost of a missionary. I am enclosing my check for that amount, and I will send a like amount for each month for the next two years to keep a missionary in the field, because it is not possible for me to go myself."

As long as the Lord will put such feelings in the hearts of the members of his Church, no one can stop his work from growing.

A few years ago I had a conversation with a man who came to the office while I was Presiding Bishop to interest the Church in a business proposition. We drifted into a discussion of religion. I said, "Do you love the Lord?" He said, "I do." I said, "Do you love him enough that you would be willing to join the Mormon Church, if you knew the Lord wanted you to?" And he thought for a few minutes, and said, "I do." Then I said, "As one of his servants, I want to promise you that if you will investigate our message and get down on your knees before the Lord, you can know that this is the work of God, just as much as you know anything in this world."

A few weeks ago he was in Salt Lake City and called to see if my wife and I would take lunch with him and his wife. He is now a high priest in the Church, and he said, "But, Bishop, why couldn't I have heard the gospel thirty years ago, so that I could have had the joy of service in the Church all through these years?"

Such a testimony makes one realize what the gospel means to a new convert.

I had a man sit in my office not long ago, and some of the brethren know him. He served for over thirty years as a minister of the gospel in a sectarian church, and then through contact with our missionaries he joined the Church, and he said, "When I think of how little I had as a minister of the gospel to offer to my people as compared to what I now have in the fulness of the gospel as it has been restored, I want to go back and tell all of my friends what I have found. But now," he said, "they won't listen to me; I am an apostate from their church." But such was the joy he had found in his membership in the Church.

I was visiting in a stake of Zion not long ago, and the president told me this story. And he is here today. He said a Jewish boy came into the stake during the war, serving in the armed forces, and he fell in love with a Mormon girl, and he married her; she converted him, and he joined the Church. Then he went back to see his people in the east, and they disinherited him, and he said to his father and mother, "You can't disinherit me. What I have found out there among the Mormons is worth more than all the money this family ever owned." And then he said to the president, "How long will I have to wait to get into the temple with this lovely wife of mine, so I will be sure she is mine forever?"

Such is the joy the gospel brings to the new convert.

I had a man come to my office when I was in the mission field. He said, "When I think of who I was and what I was when the gospel found me and what I am today," he said, "I just can't believe that I am the same person. I do not think the same thoughts; I don't have the same habits; I don't have the same ideals in life." He said, "I have literally been born again."

And that is what Paul meant when he said,

Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. (Rom. 6:4.)

And I knew that man walked in a newness of life.

I received a letter while I was Presiding Bishop from a young man converted while in the armed forces, then living in Kansas. He sent a check for his tithing, and then he added, "Bishop, do you think we are doing all we ought to do to try and tell the world of the marvelous work and a wonder the Lord has established in the earth in our day?"

They do not all come too easy. We have to break through the walls of many a missionary away, and then I happened to make a friend of him and got into his home, and when he could prejudice. One of my friends turned not handle the situation and his minister would not, he went to the plant where he was the foreman and said to the employees, "If any of you know any ministers who are not afraid of the Mormon elders, I would surely like to get in touch with them. I don't care what church they belong to," and so for the next few months we had a different minister every week. It was one of the most interesting experiences of my entire life. But every time they would leave, he would say, "Well, you have made me nearer a Mormon than I was before," and one day he put his feet up on the table, smoking his big cigar and said, "Brother Richards, I would give all I own if I could prove that you are wrong." I said, "I know you would. You have never wanted to prove that we are right. But," I said, "I want to thank you for bearing your testimony that we have brought you the truth. If you have tried with all the help you have had through these weeks to prove we are wrong, and you have been unsuccessful, there is only one other answer, and that is you have proved that we are right. Now," I said, "there are just two things: You are either going to decide that you will accept the Lord's work and help build his kingdom or you are going to kick against the pricks and I remind you what the Savior said to Saul on the way to Damascus: '... it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.'" (Acts 9:5.) Well, he told me when we first commenced visiting him that he had all the religion he wanted, he knew he had faith in God, and he believed in God, and the only way I could get him to understand that there might be truths he did not have, was to tell him that if he had never seen a light greater than a candle, he would not believe that he was in the darkness, but when he saw real light, then he would know that the candle was not sufficient. Well, he joined the Church right after that and came and visited me—I had been transferred—he was old enough to be my daddy, and he took me in his arms and said, "Brother Richards, I didn't think a man could be as happy as I am." I said, "I thought you had plenty before." "Oh, but I didn't know," he said.

Now I want to say to you Latter-day Saints, and President McKay has called all of you to be missionaries for the Church. I hope you will not be afraid. I hope you know that this is the work of God and not the work of man. I hope you know that if your neighbors and your relatives and friends will hunger and thirst after righteousness, that you can promise them that if they will investigate and get down on their knees, I care not what church they belong to, they will find in the message you have for them the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and I tell you you ought not to be afraid to promise them that, because I know that if they are sincere, your promises will be fulfilled.

Before I close, I want to read to you a few excerpts from letters from a lady who wrote to the Bureau of Information. The first letter was in November of 1953:

"Will you please inform me about your Church, its origin, its history, and present-day aims, enterprises, and ideals? I would appreciate this information first-handed and believe you will be better to supply it than vague and often misleading hearsay can. If your Church is the one I have been seeking for fifty-three years and never found, so far, in any Christian Church or 'off color' religious societies—from theosophy to free thought, I might be able to contribute, as well as receive benefits. I am not a chronic, curiosity seeking person nor an habitual joiner." The brethren sent her some literature to read, and then she wrote back under date of December 18, 1953. I am just quoting parts of her letter:

"I do not want to appear 'gushy,' but I will say this for your religion. I find it interesting; it quickens within me a feeling—what shall I call it—a gladness? Like a beautiful song I might have known long, long ago, and had lost and forgotten, in a way both sublime and sorrowful." What did Jesus say? "These things have I spoken unto you, . . . that your joy might be full," (John 15:11) and the gospel quickens something within the soul of man such as he has never known before. She said, "I had investigated, studied, and discarded Protestant creeds by the time I was fifteen. I unconsciously turned to pantheism, love of nature, therein finding God, for I perceived life in all elements and things. I even studied Catholicism, but backed off when I was told that unbaptized infants, though they did not go to hell, went to their special limbo, but never saw the face of God. Agnostically, I asked, 'Is a God that merciless and cruel worth having his face looked upon?' I am glad to find a Church courageous and sensible enough to teach the absurdity of infant baptism." And then last July after having been baptized a member of the Church, she wrote: "I now have a serenity and composure, and inner strength, and an inward joy which I never before possessed. Do all souls receiving enlightenment exclaim within their silent hearts, feeling compassion for a blind groping and grieving world: 'Oh, suffering world! I come, . . . I come! . . .'"

Each of us should be ready and willing to answer such a call. We ought to be ready to go and give all we can to bring these people to a knowledge of the truth that they might share with us the joy that is ours.

When you read a statement like that of how this woman sought without finding the truth, it makes you understand the words of Roger Williams who gave up his pastorate in the oldest Baptist Church of America and gave this as the reason:

There is no regularly constituted Church of Christ, on earth, nor any person authorized to administer any Church ordinance, nor can there be until new Apostles are sent by the great Head of the Church, for whose coming I am seeking. (Picturesque American, page 503.)

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

PRESIDENT MCKAY; brethren and sisters: We have had a number of visitors today, many of whom were Methodists who came from Australia. They seemed to be pleased with their visit to this building and what they heard. There is now in the congregation the superintendent of schools of Copenhagen, Denmark. With him are others from that country. We remember well of being in your city and visiting the university that you represent. You graduated from there, you tell me, Isn't it marvelous that He has come, that the great Head of the Church has given us again Apostles and Prophets and that the Church of Christ is in our midst, built upon the foundation of Apostles and Prophets with Christ our Lord as the chief cornerstone?

I bear you solemn witness that I know that this is true and the power of God is in this work for the blessing of every honest soul in the world who is willing to come and to pay the price by keeping his commandments.

God help us to do our part, and God bless all who are doing it, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The congregation will arise and sing, "Redeemer of Israel," conducted by Richard P. Condie. After the singing we shall hear Brother Young.

Singing by the Combined Choirs and the congregation, "Redeemer of Israel," Richard P. Condie conducting.

President David O. McKay:

The speaker to whom you listened just before the singing, was Elder LeGrand Richards of the Council of the Twelve. President Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of the Seventy will now address us. He will be followed by Elder Alma Sonne.

and we recall that above the gates of your campus there is a great eagle done in bronze, something like our eagle on the Eagle Gate, just east of here. Underneath your bronze eagle is a Latin expression which I recall. It runs coelestem adspicit lucem. The eagle is looking toward the celestial light and this recalls the real motive, why the Latter-day Saints are meeting in this building today. I may say to you that we are looking toward the celestial light and this expression comes to me as I recall the beautiful eagle and the Latin expression that you know so well.

When the general conference comes around, we note that the Relief Society of the Church has its meetings with the sisters who come from all parts of the world where there are members, most of whom are mothers in this great organization. The mothers have played a great part in our history, for they have given birth and reared men who have been honored by the priesthood of God. How they have preserved the sacredness of family life! You recall with proud appreciation the pioneer mother on the Seagull Monument here, a masterpiece by Mahonri Young. The figure of the mother expresses dignity, energy, tenderness, and endurance. The face is a familiar type of character and gentleness, which give it a certain aloofness. The influence of the monument is one of deep thought and faith in life and God. Benjamin Ide Wheeler wrote these words concerning the pioneer mother:

Over rude paths beset with hunger and risk, she pressed on toward the vision of a better country. To an assemblage of men busy with the perishable rewards of the day, she brought the threefold leaven of enduring society—faith, gentleness, and home, with the nurture of children.

Though I speak to the seventies during the few minutes I have to give a message, I realize that whatever truth is uttered is a lesson to all the brethren holding the priesthood of God. The seventies have a specific calling which none of us can forget.

Taking their name from the number of our Lord's disciples, the seventies form the central council for the missionary activity of the Church. From the beginning of their organization in 1835, the seventies have felt the need for a complete reference library, and in Times and Seasons, January 1, 1845, the following item was published:

Among the improvements going forward in this city [of Nauvoo], none merit higher praise, than the Seventies' Library. The concern has been commenced on a footing and scale, broad enough to embrace the arts and sciences everywhere, so that the Seventies' while traveling over the face of the globe, as the Lord's "Regular Soldiers," can gather all the curious things, both natural and artificial, with all the knowledge, inventions, and wonderful specimens of genius that have been gracing the world for almost six thousand years . . . [forming] the foundation for the best library in the world. (Times and Seasons, v:762.)

After the destruction of Nauvoo, the dreams of the people were never lost, and on April 7, 1851, we read in the fifth general epistle of the Church, describing Salt Lake City, the following:

On November 27th, the quorum of Seventies in conference assembled, agreed to erect an extensive rotunda in Great Salt Lake City, to be called the "Seventies' Hall of Science," and Joseph Young, their president, was appointed trustee and superintendent of the work.

Truman O. Angell, the architect of the Salt Lake Temple, was commissioned to draw the plans for the building. The large drawing that was made by Elder Angell was found many years later and was photographed and produced in an article published by the Utah State Historical Review in July 1946.

Had the project been carried through, the structure would have possessed unusual architectural interest. It had majesty and beauty that surpassed any building of its kind on the American frontier in originality and dignity. It was designed to be the repository not only of the seventies' library, but also for the library brought to Utah in 1851. Owing to the poverty of the people who were just beginning to establish their homes, President Brigham Young prevailed upon his brother Joseph, president of the seventies, not to build it for some years to come. For this reason, the edifice was never started. The seventies continued collecting books, however, and they soon had a fine library of the modern and ancient classics of literature. Among these books were:

The Holy Bible, the Works of John Locke, The Germanian of Tacitus, Goethe's Faust, History of the Holy Land, Paley's Natural Theology, Bunyon's Pilgrim's Progress, Commodore Perry's Japan Expedition, Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs, Wonders of Nature by Josiah Priest, Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary, Hackenberg's Greek Grammar, Southey's Lord Nelson, Marco Polo's Travels, Charles Darwin's Voyage of a Naturalist.

These few titles mentioned indicate the types of history and literature that the seventies were bringing together. The lesson of what such books contain will ever be truths that we should remember. The literature of the ages that has been preserved, conveys the thought that men had knowledge of great truths that have influenced humanity and have brought the civilization we have today. I recall that at the close of a lecture of William James at Harvard University, the learned philosopher uttered these words:

I have had much comfort lately in meditating on the passages which show the personality of the Holy Ghost, and his distinctness from the Father and the Son. It is a subject that requires searching into to find out, but when realized, gives one so much more true and lively a sense of the fulness of the Godhead, and its work in us, than when only thinking of the Spirit in its effect upon us.

President Brigham Young issued the following in 1850:

It is very desirable that all the Saints should improve every opportunity of securing at least a copy of every valuable treatise on education—every book, map, chart, or diagram that may contain interesting, useful, and attractive matter, to gain the attention of children and cause them to love to learn to read; and also every historical, mathematical, philosophical, geographical, geological, astronomical, scientific, practical, and all other variety of useful and interesting writings, maps, etc., to present to the general church recorder when they shall arrive at their destination, from which important and interesting matter may be gleaned to compile the most valuable works on every science and subject, for the benefit of the rising generation. We have a printing press, and any one who can take good printing or writing paper to the valley will be blessing themselves and the church. We also want all kinds of mathematical instruments, together with all rare specimens of natural curiosities and works of art that can be gathered.

Seldom can one read a sentence that expresses a more thoughtful ideal than the one the Prophet Joseph Smith gave us when he wrote:

And as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study and also by faith. (D. & C. 88:118.)

It is a beautiful concept, for good books on history and fine literary writings give us the great discoverers and interpreters of life. They take us into an intellectual world and lend themselves to our uses and give themselves joyfully to our companionship. Nothing is more gratifying and inspiring in our intellectual lives than the lessons given by good books, and by good books we mean the best of the world's literature. As we study the history of the early-day missionaries of the Church, we find them men of books.

In the prayer of the Prophet Joseph Smith offered at the dedication of the temple at Kirtland, Ohio, March 27, 1836, are these words:

And do thou grant, Holy Father, that all those who shall worship in this house may be taught words of wisdom out of the best books, and that they may seek learning even by study, and also by faith, as thou hast said. (Ibid., 109:14.)

We are living in an age of books, written on all subjects and from many viewpoints. To train ourselves to seek knowledge out of the best of books is an admonition that we should carefully and most sincerely remember. To know what good books are is an art. Any missionary can have a list of the world's best literature from people who know what good literature is. Learn to read the best, however, and in time the gospel will become a field of immortal thoughts. "The beauty of a great book," says Emerson, "is the beauty of one's own mind." Think for a moment of the Holy Bible.

The Book of Genesis stands indeed at the head of the literature of the world. It is more recent than some of the writings of Chaldea or Egypt which have come down to us, and is incomparably the noblest composition of early ages, in its moral and spiritual characteristics. (Geikie, Hours with the Bible.)

However highly we may estimate the scientific, philosophic, and religious genius of the narrators of Genesis, I-III, more important to us, and for the religious instruction of youth, is the fact that they were men, who had surrendered themselves wholly to God, and who had derived their knowledge from Him. (Rudolph Kittel of Leipsig University, Scientific Study of the Old Testament.)

"The first leaf of the Mosaic record," says Jean Paul, "has more weight than all the folios of men of science and philosophers." * * * "And he is right," says Geikie, "for we owe to it, the earliest and grandest revelation of that first principle of all religion—the existence, the unity, the personality, and the moral government of God."

Every student of Church history knows about the high school established in the Kirtland Temple. The students were taught English by reading the best literature and the ancient classics. The principal of the school was Professor H. M. Hawes. There were also established Hebrew, Greek, and Latin classes; the professor of Hebrew was Joshua Seixas. I have found out that the attendance at these classes on the part of the elders was very large, and we have from the records the statement of how the Prophet Joseph Smith attended night in and night out the Hebrew and Greek classes. He undoubtedly felt and responded to the beauty of these languages, for only those who have studied Greek and Latin and Hebrew know of the beauty and richness of the literature that has come down to the present day from those far-off times. The Prophet Joseph Smith shows us the majesty of the statement, "Seek ye knowledge out of the best books," (see D. & C. 88:118) and Joseph Young, president of all the seventies in his day, insisted that the seventies in their respective quorums become students of literature and philosophy and religion. Thousands of them adopted the motto that, "Knowledge is power." The beauty of this idea lies in the fact that the concept of what knowledge means to the Latter-day Saints is this truth that God blesses us as we approach him with deep faith and ask his blessing in our obtaining knowledge. Our minds and hearts are opened, and we become students in the true sense of the term, for it is under God's direction that we learn, and Jesus Christ our Redeemer becomes our greatest teacher.

I wish to quote to you the words of the Prophet Joseph Smith on what it means to teach, and the ideal of education for which we should all strive. They are words found in the eighty-eighth section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that are expedient for you to understand.

Of things both in heaven and in the earth, and under the earth; things which have been, things which are, things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home, things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations, and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries and of kingdoms. (Ibid., 88:78-79.)

"I think I may safely challenge anyone," says President B. H. Roberts, "to point out a broader field of knowledge than is here indicated. It includes all spiritual truth, all scientific truth, and all secular knowledge—knowledge of the past, of the present, of the future, of the heavens and the earth. . . ."

In closing I wish to quote the words of John Fiske, the historian at Harvard fifty years ago who said to a class in history:

The future is lighted for us with the radiant colors of hope. Strife and sorrow shall disappear. Peace and love shall reign supreme. The dream of poets, the lesson of priest and prophet, the inspiration of the great musician, is confirmed in the light of modern knowledge and as we gird ourselves up for the work of life, we may look forward to the time when in the truest sense, the kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of Christ, and He shall reign forever and ever, the King of kings and Lord of Lords.

President David O. McKay:

President Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of Seventy has just spoken to us. Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve, will be our next speaker. Elder Sonne will be followed by Elder Marion G. Romney.

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS, I feel deeply sensible of the responsibility which rests upon me at this moment. It has occurred to me during the day that all of the brethren who have stood before you have been outstanding leaders in the Church, even before they were called to their present positions of responsibility. Many of them have been leaders in the stakes of Zion. Some of them have been leaders in the mission field, and all of them have been leaders in the Church and kingdom of God.

On May 30, 1835 Elder George A. Smith was called on a mission to the east. Before leaving, he called on the Prophet Joseph Smith, his cousin, who gave him this advice: "Preach short sermons. Make short prayers, and deliver your sermons with a prayerful heart." I believe all the sermons to which we have listened today and yesterday have been short sermons, and I believe many prayers have been offered to our Father, especially by those who have been called upon to speak.

A year ago I visited an old house in Hiram, Ohio, and stood in the very bedroom in that house from which the Prophet Joseph Smith had been taken by an angry mob, tied to a tree, and covered with a coat of tar and feathers. I know the Prophet must have been bruised during the ordeal. I know also that he must have been greatly humiliated, but his zeal and determination for the truth were not lessened. He was not dismayed nor discouraged, neither was he vindictive nor bitter. The Prophet expected opposition and persecution. It was his lot, as it had been with all the prophets who had preceded him in their respective responsibilities. They were challenged on every turn. He, like his predecessors, faced it with the utmost courage, knowing that sometime, somewhere, he would be fully vindicated, as have all the others who paved the way for spiritual enlightenment.

We marvel at his powers of endurance, his steadfastness of purpose, and his unquenchable fire and spirit. To those who would not and could not understand he said: "No unhallowed hand can stop the work of God from progressing." Mobs, persecution, defamation, were powerless against it.

Governor Ford of Illinois must have sensed the spirit and stamina back of what he called Mormonism. There was something there which even he could not comprehend. He feared its growth because he felt it was bound to go forward, regardless of its opponents, however ruthless and godless they might be. It could not be stifled nor frustrated by the enemy. Governor Ford wrote in his history of Illinois:

"It is feared that within the course of a century some man gifted like Paul, some splendid orator, will make the name of the martyred prophet ring as loud and stir the souls of men as much as the mighty name* of Christ itself." He refers to places like Sharon, Palmyra, Manchester, Kirtland, Far West, Adam-ondi-Ahman, Ramus, Nauvoo, and the Carthage Jail. "They," said he, "may become holy and venerable places of classic interest in another age like Jerusalem, the Garden of Gethsemane, the Mount of Olives, and the Mount of Calvary to the Christian, or Mecca and Medina to the Turk."

What did he fear, this governor of a sovereign state? What had he to fear? He feared that Mormonism would survive to tell the world what happened at Carthage and other places. He feared that his name would go down in history coupled with that of Herod and Pontius Pilate, who were connected with and in a measure responsible for the crucifixion of the Lord.

Joseph Smith's name is secure in the books of history. He has brought to the religious world more truth, bringing it nearer to God, than has anyone else in modern times. But Joseph Smith's leadership was tested in other ways.

I hold before me a list of the Twelve Apostles, the first Quorum of the Twelve, organized in the year 1835. As I read it from an historical record prepared by the late Andrew Jenson, I note beneath the names of these men these statements:

"In 1837 and in 1838 four of the Twelve apostatized," and then he names them: "John F. Boynton, Lyman E. Johnson, Luke S. Johnson, William E. McLellan." Four out of twelve had left the faith.

Later he wrote, "William Smith and John E. Page denied the faith. On October 25, 1838, David W. Patten was killed." Already six of these twelve, you will see, had fallen by the way.

Brother Jenson remarked: "These brethren were labored with and urged to repent." History has proved that the real setback was not to the Church, but to the men individually.

I bear testimony, brethren and sisters, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I bear testimony that the gospel of Jesus Christ was restored through his instrumentality. I bear testimony, also, that Jesus is the Christ; that he submitted to the world the plan of life and salvation. It is the only plan by which we can come back to our Father in heaven, and I bear testimony, that plan has been restored again to the earth through Joseph Smith, the Prophet. Hesitate, my friends, ere you doubt this great modern miracle, for the gospel is upon the earth, and the Holy Priesthood has been restored, by which men can officiate in the name of God.

May we be blessed in our endeavors to serve him and given strength to keep his commandments, everyone, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters: I would like you to give me a special interest in your faith and prayers as I attempt to edify this mighty congregation, those present in this building and those beyond. I need your faith and prayers because I desire to say a few words about "the royal law according to the scriptures," if you observe which, the Apostle James says, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." (James 2:8.) This matter is very important to me, it lies next to my heart, and it should be important to you.

Without attempting to catalog the many things which the keeping of this "royal law" entails, it may, from its use in the scriptures, be said with certainty that chief among them is caring for the poor. In the very first chapter in which the phrase, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" appears, the Lord commanded ancient Israel to provide for their poor.

And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest.

And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger: I am the Lord your God. (Lev. 19:9-10.)

During the last few weeks it has been my pleasure to meet with stake and ward welfare workers in 136 stakes. During the next few weeks I hope to meet the rest of you. In passing I might say that of the 136 stake presidents in these stakes, only three "fled the realm" when they saw us coming. All the rest of you stood and took it. Your courage and strength are admirable and very much appreciated.

Your performance in the fulfillment of this "royal law" gives me great joy and inspires in me a hope for an early redemption of Zion. With all my heart I salute you.

As evidence of your love for your neighbors, you carry on in your numerous welfare activities. At the coal mine, in the mills and factories, in canneries, you toil. In orchards, fields, and on the ranches, you endure the heat and the cold. On construction jobs and in sewing rooms, you labor. You battle floods and disease. You sit in council late into the nights, wrestling with problems of policy and procedure incident to your divine service. You find work for the unemployed. In times of distress, you administer to the suffering and give comfort to the bereaved.

Freely do you contribute of your means, not alone in acquiring welfare facilities, but also as a continuing practice you contribute the cash value of two meals each month, that your bishops may have, not only commodities with which to warm and feed the cold and hungry and clothe the naked, but money also with which to provide their other needs. Your accomplishments during the last twenty years in doing all this voluntarily and without expectation or hope of personal gain, is a modern miracle. It has brought you to a state of perfection in gospel living unmatched since the golden era of the Nephites.

As you thus labor for your brethren and sisters, you merit the assurance that you are in very deed ministering to your Redeemer. Such assurance you have in King Benjamin's words: "... when ye are in the service of your fellow beings ye are only in the service of your God." (Mos. 2:17.) You have it from the Lord himself in this dispensation, for "... inasmuch," said he, "as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me." (D. & C. 42:31.)

You also have the satisfaction of knowing that you are discharging an obligation which from the beginning has been laid upon the members of Christ's Church.

The method of implementation in force at a given time has varied with the degree of perfection in gospel living attained by the Saints. But the "royal law" has persisted. It is as much a part of the requirements of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and obedience thereto is as certainly a prerequisite to exaltation in the celestial kingdom, as are baptism and the laying on of hands. It has been taught, and practiced in some form, in every gospel dispensation.

We have already noted what the Lord required of the children of Israel with respect thereto, even as they emerged from four hundred years of slavery. Simple as were the instructions, they contained the two basic principles of every God-given plan for implementing the "royal law"—first, those who had were to give, and second, those who received were to labor for what they got.

Away back before the flood, Enoch, to a generation vexed with "wars and bloodshed," taught the gospel of Jesus Christ in mighty power, including the procedure required by the celestial law in loving one's neighbor as one's self. Those who believed, lived it, with the result that ... the Lord came and dwelt with his people, and they dwelt in righteousness.

And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them. (Moses 7:16, 18.)

Now, my brethren and sisters, they did not remove the poor from among them by turning them over to be cared for through some dole system sponsored by the warring nations. They provided for their own in the prescribed manner. By full observance of the law of Enoch, they became equal in all things, temporal and spiritual, thereby obtaining that "union required by the law of the celestial kingdom."

During his earthly ministry, the Lord placed the "royal law," in importance, second only to the love of God. (See Matt. 22:39.) His exchange with the rich young man illustrates the difficulty people of that day experienced in living it. (See ibid., 19:16-22.) However, the Saints of the Apostolic Church tried to live it. Being "of one heart and of one soul," they disposed of their lands and houses and laid the proceeds "at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need." (Acts 4:32, 35.)

Following the visit of Jesus, the Nephites lived the "royal law."

And they had all things common among them. (4 Nephi 2-3.)

As the Lord gave the "royal law" to the Saints in former dispensations, so he has given it to us. (See D. & C. 59:6.) Before the Church was a year old, he had, in three separate revelations, laid upon the Saints the obligation to care for their poor. (See ibid., Secs. 38, 42, 44.) Clearly alluding to temporal things, he said, "I say unto you, be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine." This command he followed with directions that certain of the brethren be appointed to "... look to the poor and the needy, ... that they shall not suffer," adding, "Behold, I say unto you, that ye must visit the poor and the needy and administer to their relief." (Ibid., 38:27, 35; 44:6.)

That the Lord contemplated no exceptions to the "royal law" is evidenced by the fact that he concluded his instructions to the brethren whom he sent from Kirtland to western Missouri in June 1831, with this admonition: "And remember in all things the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted, for he that doeth not these things, the same is not my disciple." (Ibid., 52:40.) These brethren, all but destitute, were to make their way across four states. The Prophet himself walked almost the whole distance from St. Louis to Independence, three hundred miles.

It occurs to me that if these brethren in their poverty could not qualify as disciples of the Lord without remembering the poor and the needy, the sick and afflicted, it will be most difficult for us to so qualify should we neglect them, enjoying, as we do in such abundance, the bounties of the earth.

I repeat, then, that in this divine service you have the satisfaction of knowing that you are discharging an obligation which has from the beginning been laid upon the Saints of God, and which obligation rests now in full force upon us, the Saints of the latter days.

In the early 1830's, the Lord directed the Saints to implement the "royal law" by living the United Order. In this they failed. Because they did not learn to impart of their substance as becometh Saints to the poor and afflicted among them, the Lord permitted them to be driven from Missouri, and the requirement that they live the United Order was withdrawn. But the "royal law" was not withdrawn. It remained in full force. At least partially to fulfil it, the Saints, since then, have been bound by the law of tithing and the "fast."

About twenty years ago, just a century following the United Order experiment, the Lord inspired the inauguration of the present Church welfare plan. In it, we are being given another opportunity to show our mettle, to stand up and be counted, to prove ourselves worthy—or unworthy, as the case may be—of rising toward a fuller compliance with the "royal law." Personally, I am very pleased with the progress we are making, and I believe the Lord is pleased also, for he is blessing our efforts remarkably.

Let us continue to merit his approval. We should not be discouraged if some Church members are not enthusiastic about the presently established Church practice for the implementation of the "royal law." Their apathy is due to a lack of appreciation of what the Lord designs to accomplish by it. Sometimes when I get a little low in spirits about this matter, I am revived by reading the following quotation from a sermon by President Brigham Young:

The Lord revealed to Joseph, that the people would gather out from Babylon, and establish the kingdom of God upon the principles of heaven. They went up to Jackson County, Mo., with this in their faith and with the express understanding that when they got there, everything was to be laid at the feet of the Bishop ... who was to distribute it among the people, according to the revelation. ... But they could not bear this; consequently, they were driven from Jackson County, ... and finally they were driven from the State. ... While we were in Winter Quarters, the Lord gave to me a revelation, just as much as he ever gave one to anybody. He opened my mind, and showed me the organization of the kingdom of God in a family capacity. I talked it to my brethren; I would throw out a few words here, and a few words there, to my first counselor, to my second counselor, and the Twelve Apostles, but with the exception of one or two of the Twelve, it would not touch a man. They believed it would come, O yes, but it would be by and by. (Journal of Discourses, Vol. XVIII, pp. 242, 244.)

Now, we've come a long way since President Young said this. Today, many of the Saints are catching a glimpse of the import of the "royal law."

Let us go forward, never slackening our efforts. And let us not be discouraged by the charge that some well-farees are unworthy of the help they receive. If such there be, they shall in due time be weeded out, for the Lord has said,

... he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer. (D. & C. 42:42.)

And the idler shall not have place in the Church, except he repent and mend his ways. (Ibid., 75:29.)

However, on this point King Benjamin taught that the man who withheld his substance from the poor, charging that they, through misconduct, had brought their distress upon themselves,

... hath great cause to repent; and except he repenteth of that which he hath done he perisheth forever, and hath no interest in the kingdom of God. (Mos. 4:18.)

Now the issues, brothers and sisters, which turn upon keeping the "royal law" are such as to challenge every soul who understands them to high endeavor.

The efficacy of our fasting turns upon it. So spake the Lord to ancient Israel. "Wherefore have we fasted?" cried they, "and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge?"

Because, came the answer, you do not keep the fast which I commanded. True, you bow down your heads as a bulrush and spread sackcloth and ashes under your feet, but you do not deal your bread to the hungry, nor provide housing for the poor, nor do you cover the naked. When you do these things, "Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer; thou shalt cry, and he shall say, Here I am. And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noonday: And the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not." (See Isaiah 58:3-11.)

The efficacy of praying turns upon obedience to the "royal law." So taught Amulek to his hearers as he counseled them to cry unto the Lord in their fields, in their houses, their closets and secret places, in their wilderness and over their households, "both morning, mid-day, and evening, . . . and when you do not cry unto the Lord," he continued, "let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are around you." And then he concluded his matchless sermon on prayer with this challenging statement: "And now behold, my beloved brethren, I say unto you, do not suppose that this is all; for after ye have done all these things, if ye turn away the needy, and the naked, and visit not the sick and afflicted, and impart of your substance, if ye have, to those who stand in need—I say unto you, if ye do not any of these things, behold, your prayer is vain, and availeth you nothing, and ye are as hypocrites who do deny the faith." (See Alma 34:17-38.)

King Benjamin went so far as to teach his people that imparting of their substance to the poor was a prerequisite to a retention of a remission of their sins (see Mos. 4:26), and Mormon taught the same doctrine. (See Alma 4:12-14.)

These teachings are in full harmony with the modern revelations on the subject, in one of which the Lord said he had given men their agency and made them stewards over earthly blessings, all of which had been prepared by him, for he had stretched out the heavens and built the earth; that it was full and there was enough to spare; that it was his purpose to provide for his Saints, but that it must be done in his own way, which was "that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low. . . . Therefore," said he, "if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." (See D. & C. 104:13-18.)

The very building of Zion and the escape of the Saints from the tribulations yet to be poured out upon the nations turn upon a full compliance with the "royal law." We can with profit let our minds dwell upon these things; for Zion, "the New Jerusalem," is yet to be built, and it is to be "a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the Most High God; . . . And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. . . . And every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor must needs flee unto Zion for safety." (See ibid., 45:65-71.)

When shall we build it? you ask. Well, according to the scriptures, not until we can fully and ungrudgingly yield obedience to the "royal law." For the Lord has made it plain that Zion cannot be built up until the Saints become united according to the "union required by the laws of the celestial kingdom," which laws, he explains, require us to impart of our substance "as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted" among us. (See ibid., 105:1-6.)

Surely, my brethren and sisters, we should take courage and great joy in our labors as we contemplate the many issues which turn upon keeping the "royal law." In fact, Jesus taught that the final judgment will turn upon it.

As he sat upon the Mount of Olives just two days before the final Passover, his anxious disciples plied him with many questions. Concerning his second coming, he said:

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory:

And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats:

And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:

For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in:

Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?

And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. (Matt. 25:31-40.)

I know President George Albert Smith understood this scripture. I remember when we were gathering clothes to ship to Europe for our people in distress. I remember the packages he sent. In one were two suits of clothes, direct from the cleaners. I doubt if President Smith had ever worn them. In another came shirts from the laundry, wrapped in cellophane paper, ready to be worn. In other packages we received were thousands of pounds of clothing, much of it ragged, dirty, and unfit to wear. I contemplated at that time, and I do now, how the donors of those goods would feel when they realized the truth of this statement of the Master, that "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Ibid., 25:40.)

Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels:

For I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink:

I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not.

Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?

Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.

And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal. (Ibid., 25:41-46.)

Surely, my brothers and sisters, we have great reason to be encouraged, and a great motive to go forward in this work. May we each, through full compliance with the "royal law according to the scriptures," be qualified on that great day for a place among the righteous, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just heard Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve. The Combined Scandinavian Chorus will now sing: "The Heavens Are Telling," from "The Creation," conducted by Elder Hulbert Kedding-ton. The closing prayer will be offered by Daniel S. Frost, President of the Kanab Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned until seven o'clock this evening, when the General Meeting of the priesthood of the Church will be held in this Tabernacle.

Only those holding the priesthood are invited to be present. The building will be inadequate even then to accommodate the priesthood, so persons not holding the priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. This priesthood session will not be broadcast.

Overflow meetings, however, will be held in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and by direct wire over a public address system to members of the priesthood assembled, in addition to Barratt Hall and the Assembly Hall, in thirty-nine other Church buildings in Salt Lake City, Logan, Ogden and Provo, Utah; Idaho Falls, Idaho; Las Vegas and Overton, Nevada; Evanston and Lovell, Wyoming; Denver, Colorado; Seattle and Tacoma, Washington; Portland, Oregon; Long Beach, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Huntington Park, Burbank, Reseda, Santa Ana, San Diego, San Bernardino, San Mateo, Palo Alto, San Jose, Pacific Grove, and Santa Rosa, California; and Phoenix and Mesa, Arizona.

It will probably be the largest assembly of priesthood ever held in the Church.

The session at ten o'clock Sunday Morning will be broadcast over Station KSL, and over fifteen other radio stations in Utah, California, Idaho, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, and Arizona, and by special arrangement over eight television stations in Utah, Washington, Colorado, Oregon, California and Arizona.

The Church of the Air Broadcast will be from 8:30 to 9:00 tomorrow morning. Elder Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve will be the speaker. The Tabernacle Choir broadcast will be from 9:00 to 9:30 tomorrow morning. Those desiring to attend these broadcasts must be in their seats by 8:20 A.M.

It is requested that the audience, during the broadcasts refrain from making any noise. Large crowds will undoubtedly be waiting outside the closed doors during these broadcasts. Here- tofore there has been a rush by those outside to get good seats. We suggest and earnestly plead that those thus standing will be courteous and considerate one to another. Avoid pushing or crowding, will you please. Courtesy is a great virtue. Let us show it one to another, and especially tomorrow morning to our visitors who are within the city's gates.

The regular session of the Conference will begin at ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

We shall now have "The Heavens are Telling" by the Scandinavian Choirs, and after the benediction by Elder Daniel S. Frost, this Conference will be adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

We must take time to express our appreciation to the members of these combined Choirs. I assume many of your countrymen were thrilled when you sang that second song in their native tongue. Some of us could not understand the words, but we felt your spirit. We thank you, Brother Kedding-ton, and all members of the Choirs, and say God bless you for the service you are rendering.

The Combined Scandinavian Choirs sang the anthem, "The Heavens Are Telling."

The closing prayer was offered by President Daniel S. Frost of the Kanab Stake.

Conference adjourned until Sunday, October 3, at 10 o'clock a.m. and another town in Arizona. We welcome you young men, deacons, teachers, and among them three priests.

The singing during this session will be furnished by the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder Spencer Cornwall as director, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ. We shall begin these services by the congregation singing, "Do What Is Right," with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting.

After the singing Elder John Kenneth Orton, formerly president of the Tahitian Mission, will offer the opening prayer.

The congregation and chorus joined in singing the hymn, "Do What Is Right."

Elder John Kenneth Orton, formerly President of the Tahitian Mission, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

If President Waite is not near the rostrum, will you please come forward and take your place here.

The Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "The Discovery," directed by Elder Cornwall.

The Tabernacle Men's Chorus sang the anthem, "The Discovery."

President David O. McKay:

Our first speaker this evening will be Elder William Noble Waite, president of the South Los Angeles Stake. The presidencies, the bishoprics, and the members of the Church in the temple area of the Los Angeles Temple, have during the last two years accomplished a great achievement. We believe you would like to hear a brief report of their most commendable efforts and their willingness to share in the expense of that great temple.

ELDER WILLIAM NOBLE WAITE

President of the South Los Angeles Stake

HUMBLY, my brethren, I accept the assignment given me, and pray for inspiration of the Lord to direct my remarks, that they may be appropriate and intelligent.

This is an inspiring sight to see this Tabernacle filled to overflowing with the priesthood of the Church. President McKay has asked me, as chairman of the Temple Committee in Los Angeles, to review for the priesthood of the Church the progress of the Temple. I am very happy to make this report.

Three years ago today the First Presidency assigned the stakes of southern California the responsibility of raising one million dollars to aid in the construction of the Los Angeles Temple. We accepted the challenge, and with the approval of President McKay and his counselors, the campaign was launched on February 4, 1952. Within two months of this time the people of the Los Angeles Temple area had pledged one million, six hundred forty-eight thousand dollars. In April of that same year, we began our collections. Quarterly reports were made regularly to the Expenditures Committee of the Church. The quarter ending September 30 of 1954, that was the day before yesterday, showed that we had remitted to the Presiding Bishopric of the Church, one million, forty thousand dollars. By the time the Temple is ready for dedication we will have raised every dollar pledged of the $1,648,000.

Today all of the presidents of the southern California area met with the First Presidency and unanimously accepted the proposal made by them that we finish the job.

I think I would be remiss in my responsibility if I were not to recognize my brethren, the presidents of the Los Angeles Temple area. We have been very close to each other. Together in a spirit of love and harmony we are resolved to do our duty.

I think I should take just one minute to identify each president and the Stake over which he presides: President John Russon of the Los Angeles Stake; President Howard Hunter of the Pasadena Stake; President Hugh Smith of the San Fernando Stake; President Edwin Dibble of the Glendale Stake; President Garrett Barlow of the Santa Monica Stake; President Austin Gudmundsen of the Inglewood Stake; President Alan Pettit of the Bakersfield Stake; President Arthur Godfrey of the Santa Barbara Stake; President Faun Hunsaker of the East Los Angeles Stake; President Vern Peel of the Mt. Rubidoux Stake; President Levern Hansen of the San Bernardino Stake; President Francis Zimmerman of the Long Beach Stake; President Max Bryan of the East Long Beach Stake; President John Dalton of the Orange County Stake; President Barry Knudson of the San Diego Stake; President Bunker of the California Mission.

I am very happy to recognize my brethren because they have so capably assisted in carrying the load.

May I at this time relate an incident that occurred in the South Gate Ward of the South Los Angeles Stake at the time the campaign was launched? A young boy of deacon age—he was a deacon—came to his Bishop, Ivan Magnusson, and asked for the privilege of making a pledge to the Temple. The Bishop gave him one of the little souvenir folders with a personal pledge card inserted. In a few minutes the boy returned with his card. When the Bishop noticed the amount he thought the boy had placed his decimal in the wrong place. But the boy assured him the amount was within his reach. He delivered papers and when this job failed he cut lawns. Little jobs came his way. The money from these was turned over to his bishop. I am happy tonight to report after 2½ years this boy has completely paid the $150.00 he pledged toward building a temple to the Lord. Another incident of love and devotion: an elderly lady, nearly blind, pledged $100.00 and paid it out of her meager savings—another $100.00 pledged and she paid it. The third pledge card for a hundred dollars seemed far too much. But within a short time it was paid. Today she is on her fourth pledge of a hundred dollars. She said to me a week ago, "I hope and pray the Lord will bless me and preserve my life until I can have the privilege of going through the Los Angeles Temple."

There are thousands of cases just like these. Children by the hundreds have pledged generously. There is a fervor and a spiritual tone that characterizes the people of the Temple area.

Now I should like to say a word about the progress of the grounds and the Temple. The landscaping has begun. Under the direction of Bishop Max Tolman, that hard, uninviting red clay is rapidly being changed into a veritable garden. Just today 70 men with rakes and hoes aided and assisted in seeding the terraced area from the Temple to Santa Monica Boulevard. The walks which lead from Santa Monica Boulevard to the Temple are lined with beautiful olive trees. The pines and the palms have been planted. Tropical and semi-tropical shrubs have been arranged in colorful design. Brother Tolman has told me that by next spring the lawn around the Temple will have been planted, the flowers will be in full bloom, all of the landscaping will be completed. The poet once said, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." This beautiful Temple adorned in all its beauty will be to us, I'm sure, a joy forever.

Most of the heavy construction work has been completed. The interior will take at least a year or more. Soren Jacobsen, the builder, and Edward O. Anderson, the architect, together with their co-workers, have done magnificently. There have been some upsets, of course, but it has been a great pleasure to see the Temple go up so rapidly.

The Angel Moroni statue is completed and is being shipped to southern California. It will be placed on top of the Temple, as a reminder to the world of the vitality of Mormonism and the ultimate destiny of this Church.

To the people in southern California who are listening, we have pledged to the First Presidency that we will complete the pledge made in your behalf. We cannot and will not fail! The forces of southern California will be mobilized and with the devotion and generosity of our people this challenge will be met.

We are growing rapidly in southern California. We appreciate deeply the missionary opportunities that are ours, and we are ready to meet them. People by the thousands, outside the Church, are interested in the Los Angeles Temple. They are asking if an opportunity will be afforded them to visit the "Mormon Temple." They have been assured they will. We want to take advantage of their interest and through the missionary effort in southern California bring to them the gospel message.

Tomorrow, my brethren, we will raise our hands to the square and sustain the Authorities of the Church. None of us quite realizes the great responsibility that rests upon the Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve, and the other General Authorities of the Church who go out into the stakes of Zion to direct our conferences. We propose to sustain and aid and help them in every way we can.

Suppose that 25,000 people listening tonight will resolve, each one in his heart, that he will do more than just raise his hand to the square, he will go back into the ward he represents and work with the boys and girls so that in ten years from now there will not be 90,000 Senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood and thousands of boys and girls who are inactive in the Church. There are no bad boys and there are no bad girls who cannot be reached with a sympathetic heart that understands the needs of youth. Let us work long and diligently, leaving no stone unturned, my brethren, until we have reactivated the inactive young people of our Church.

I testify to you that I know this is the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I sat in the audience today when Bishop Isaacson was speaking about the life of Christ, and cried like a child! I am thankful that I know he is the Savior of the world. We are guided and directed by Brethren who are divinely appointed to the positions they hold,—President McKay and his able counselors, and the Quorum of the Twelve, and all of the General Authorities of the Church. God help us to sustain them and do something about it in the stakes and wards we represent, so that there will be a spiritual uprise in this Church, and we shall be happy because of the good we do, is my prayer and my testimony, and I bear it to you humbly in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You will all agree, I am sure, that we have glimpsed an example of great devotion to a divine Cause, and we express to the people who have thus manifested their love by their deeds, your commendation and blessing with the commendation and blessings of the General Authorities of the Church. They have had to build their meeting houses, they are building them, they have paid their tithing just the same during the past two years.

In keeping with this temple idea, we shall now hear from Elder El Ray L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve, and President of the Salt Lake Temple.

ELDER ELRAY L. CHRISTIANSEN

IT BROUGHT great joy to my heart, as it would to yours, to hear the report of President Waite on the progress of that great temple in which we shall worship God and participate in the higher ordinances, performing those ordinances and receiving those powers and blessings that will entitle us and qualify us, if we are faithful, to receive the greatest of all the gifts of God, eternal life. I am sure that the people in the Los Angeles area are grateful that they have an opportunity to participate in the raising of the funds to build that great temple, for I feel we should participate with our hearts and our hands and our means in these great accomplishments.

Now, my brethren, I come before you tonight in humility and with hope and a prayer that I may say something that might encourage someone. This group here represents the priesthood leadership throughout the Church. The Lord has established and ordained a divine program for the benefit of his children, and it is through you leaders, as well as the others in the Church, that he must operate and proceed in order to bring about his purposes, to establish faith, and to help his children qualify for life in the Celestial kingdom of Heaven. It is almost overwhelming to me, when I think of it, to realize that the progress of his plan is determined largely by the effectiveness of the leadership throughout the Church, and in accordance to their devotion.

Not only does his plan provide a way of salvation for the living, but also the means and power whereby those who have died without a knowledge of the gospel may also be saved. This shows the love of God for all mankind, and the justice that he renders to all. Our obligation as members of the Church is not alone to the living, but likewise to the dead. For the dead, it is a program of love and Christ-like service on the part of the living.

John Taylor, the President of the Church, at one time made this statement: "We are here to cooperate with God in the salvation of the living and in the redemption of the dead, in the blessing of our ancestors and in pouring out the blessings upon our children and their children. That is the object of our existence," he said.

It is pleasing to witness the devotion of so many of the saints in this vicarious service on behalf of the dead. Last Wednesday in the Salt Lake Temple, 1364 endowments were given on behalf of the dead, besides hundreds of baptisms and sealings for the dead that went on during that same day. In the other temples this same program of activity is carried on day by day on behalf of the dead, and, of course, great numbers of the living come and receive their blessings as well.

Even with this great concourse of people that comes to the temples, the Lord is way ahead of us. He has helped us in these last days to provide modern means of recording, of micro-filming and of research throughout the libraries of the world, and has thus speeded up the work of making available records for research purposes. The inflow of micro-film records into the Genealogical Library approximates now 150,000 to 200,000 pages per day. Truly, the Lord has come to our help! But, sad to say, my brethren, a hundred thousand family group sheets are being held in the archives awaiting the endowment ordinances for the male names on those sheets. The endowment, of course, must be done before these parents and their children can be sealed together. The endowment work for the sisters' names on those sheets has already been done. The sisters are far ahead of the brethren in this endowment work for the dead.

The fact is, there are in the Salt Lake Temple alone, more than 100,000 surplus male names waiting there for some selfless individuals to engage in these ordinances in their behalf. At least another hundred thousand male names are in the files of the other temples in the Church. The dead, we are told, should bury the dead, but it takes the living to redeem the dead through this vicarious service.

President Brigham Young, pleading for the cause of the dead, once made this statement:

"What do you suppose the fathers would say if they could speak from the dead? Would they not say, 'We have lain here thousands of years, here in this prison house, waiting for this dispensation to come? Here we are, bound and fettered, waiting and waiting. . . .'" "Why," said Brigham Young, "if they had the power, the very thunders of heaven would be in our ears, so that we might realize the importance of this work! All the angels in heaven are looking at this little handful of people, and stimulating them to the salvation of the human family. . . . When I think upon this subject," he said, "I want the tongues of seven thunders to wake the people."

Now, brethren, in order to have the endowment work done for these two hundred thousand men like you, who are waiting to have their wives and children sealed to them—in order to get the endowment done for these surplus names, it has been suggested that the Melchizedek Priesthood in the various temple districts, through their quorums, organize themselves and assume greater responsibility in this activity, and take upon them the responsibility of bringing to an equal number the male and the female names in the temples; and to encourage your wives to permit you and urge you to attend these temple sessions on your stake days until there is an equalized number of male and female names in the temples. Then after that is accomplished, with the new system that is being adopted, of placing most all the names in the temples in the temple files, where anyone may come and use them, it will make much easier the process of balancing the male and the female names and maintaining that balance.

Bishoprics and the stake presidencies would do well to give their genealogical chairman their active assistance in these things. I feel that it is not sufficient merely to announce that "next Wednesday is our stake temple day." I think it would be helpful if at times the bishoprics and stake presidencies could announce that on their temple days, the presidency of the stake, the high councilmen, and the bishoprics will join with the priesthood and go to the temple. Many stake and ward leaders are doing this with satisfying results. If that could be done the endowment work for these names would soon be completed.

I am convinced through observation that where members of the ward go to the temple consistently the problems of the bishopric are reduced and minimized to a very few comparatively, and I am sure that if the parents will go to the temple at regular intervals it will result in happier, more harmonious homelife. We do not feel like being ugly and coarse and selfish after we have gone to the temple and participated in those great and holy ordinances. We feel better, we are better men, we are better women, and I am sure that if we would go regularly, we would become better fathers and more considerate husbands and our lives would have a more purposeful meaning.

I believe it was Melvin J. Ballard who made this statement: "If you would be eternally rich, invest in the human soul." When I was at the Logan Temple, a group of men from one of the stakes which was assigned to spend the day there had come together in a car and after the morning session had gone out to the entrance planning to go home. One of them needed to go, he thought, but the stake president came along and learned of their intentions, so he said to them, "Well, now, brethren, if you need to go, you had better go, but when you are travelling over those hills by the Bear River and you imagine that you hear some mourning, it could be those five men who had thought you were going to stay here and do the work for them today." Well, they twisted a little bit. We noticed they walked out to the gate, and there they had another conference, as they shifted their weight from one foot to the other. In about five minutes they came back into the temple to make redemption possible for five more persons. Those men had the proper feeling for the dead, who along with the living have a right to the blessings of eternal life.

Saturday, October 2

Now, may I say something about one or two other matters. We are desirous of keeping the temples themselves clean and immaculate. Everything about the temple should be clean and wholesome. Those who come to the temple should be clean in mind and in body and their temple clothing should be fresh and clean. Cleanliness becometh the House of the Lord.

If those who attend the temple have their own clothing, they will find it is more convenient for them and surely it is proper and appropriate. What better gift could be given to our children at the time of their marriage than their temple clothing.

May I speak on one other matter, briefly. Many, too many, of our young boys and girls are being married somewhere other than in the House of the Lord. It is a sad situation when we live in the shadows of these temples, when we know the history, the sacrifices, the faith and devotion of those who made these blessings and privileges possible, to have our young people married in the courthouses and other places, leaving their blessings behind them. A few of them wish to be married civilly with the intention of going into the temple later. That is a risky procedure. Many of them, most of them, will forsake their blessings and their divine destiny by so doing. I am convinced that the time to be married right is when we are married.

Now these conditions call for the sympathetic interest, understanding and help of every leader in supplementing the help and the teaching of the parents. The faces of our boys and girls should be turned towards the temple early in their lives, that is the time to do it! I feel that we make a mistake if we wait until they fall in love with and become engaged to someone who will not take them to the temple, before we begin to point out to them the blessings that await them in the House of the Lord. When they are five or six or seven years of age, that is the time for parents to begin instructing their children. Otherwise, they will be lured into the ways of the world and their blessings may be lost and the eternal association with their loved ones may never be realized.

I was walking past the new Relief Society Building a few days ago, and I passed by two little girls. They appeared to be about eight years of age. They were looking admiringly at the temple, and one of them said, "What do they do in there?" The other said, "I don't know what they do in there, but I know this, that when I get married I am going to be married in there." Now, those little girls were only eight years of age but the one had been properly taught somewhere by someone because her mind was made up. Those who are not taught and encouraged early in their years are often difficult to teach.

When I see the stake reports, I think—my goodness, if I were a bishop again, what I would do! I would try to become intimately acquainted with every one of these young people. I would talk with them, confer with them, privately and individually, from time to time, and find out what their plans are. I would find out who their associates are. I would desire to know who their boy friends or girl friends are; who they are going with "steady," and what kind of a person their boy friend or girl friend is. I would encourage them to select wholesome associates. I would want to know where they go at nights. I would warn them against the pitfalls, the enticements and allurements that are rampant in the world, which would lead them away from the desirable. I would talk to them and explain about marriage, even though they are in their early teens, and compare the civil ceremony with that which they receive in the temple and explain it in general so that they would know.

I am convinced that if we wait until after they fall in love to give them direction, we are usually too late to help them. I would tell them what President Woodruff said at one time, when he uttered these words:

"Why, bless your souls," he said, "if you live here in the flesh a thousand years and live in poverty and when you get through if, by your acts, you could secure your wives and children in the first resurrection, to dwell with you in the presence of God, that one thing would amply pay for the labors of a thousand years." He knew whereof he spoke.

I believe that when children see their parents hustling and bustling to get ready to go to the temple; Dad coming in from work in the fields or from the office, taking a bath and getting his clothes ready; Mother having them all pressed, both hurrying off to the temple on their stake temple days or night, they become aware that temple work is important. That is one of the best ways to convince young people that the temple work should be important in their lives. I feel that parents ought to do that.

Let us, brethren, as leaders in the various organizations and quorums and wards, collaborate with the families. Sometimes parents do not teach well enough. We must pick up then, from where they leave off in the process of preparing the youth for their blessings. If I were a bishop I would toss and turn at night and be unable to sleep, if I had not organized my forces in the ward and made every effort personally and through my associates to contact these young people while they are approachable and before they get into questionable habits.

I hope everyone of you saw or will see that film last night, entitled "The Bishop."

The temple presidencies and workers are conscious of the need of providing in these holy places, an atmosphere of kindness, an atmosphere and a feeling of patience and of love, so that those who come will long remember their visit and will want to come back again. We recognize the need of administering the ordinances in an impressive manner; of being reverent and dignified ourselves, and of making welcome those who come.

The temple presidencies are desirous of making each temple a house of prayer and meditation. What a wonderful place the temple is, if we come in the right mood, to meditate, silently and offer up our thanks to the Lord.

We are desirous that each temple be a house of faith, a house of learning, a House of God. In a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, given at Nauvoo in 1841, the Lord said this:

"And verily I say unto you, let this house be built unto my name." . . . (speaking of the Nauvoo Temple) "that I may reveal mine ordinances therein unto my people;

"For I deign to reveal unto my Church things which have been kept hid from before the foundation of the world, things that pertain to the dispensation of the fulness of times.

"And I will show unto my servant Joseph all things pertaining to this house," (some people ask, "Where do we get these ordinances." Well, there is the answer.) The Lord said, "And I will show unto my servant Joseph all things pertaining to this house, and the priesthood thereof, and the place whereon it shall be built." (D. C. 124:40-42.)

In the 55th verse of that Section, the 124th, the Lord continues: ". . . that you may prove yourselves unto me that ye are faithful in all things whatsoever I command you, that I may bless you, and crown you with honor, immortality, and eternal life." That is the purpose of these temples.

May we learn our duty and do our duty as leaders in making these blessings possible, both to the living who come under our direction, and to the dead, I humbly pray, bearing testimony that these things are of God. I do it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We shall now hear from President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., member of the First Presidency.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BRETHREN: It is a duty to respond to the call of the President of the Church and to stand before you and try to say something that will be helpful and that will upbuild all of us. Again I ask that you help me with your faith and your prayers for I have long since learned that only by such assistance is it possible for me to do or say anything either as it should be done or said or as will be helpful to those to whom I speak.

We are all impressed, I am sure, with the great gathering of Priesthood not alone here in this building, in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, but in the various Stake Houses throughout this entire Western country. I foresee in no distant future that we shall have wires running into the East and I can foresee that at this great Priesthood meeting we might have fifty or a hundred or a hundred and fifty thousand members of the Priesthood gathered together to listen to the instructions, the admonitions, and the encouragement that are given on these occasions.

I would assume from what we have been told regarding the potential attendance, that not only is this the greatest gathering of Priesthood that the Church has ever seen, but that it is the greatest gathering of Priesthood that the world has ever seen, up until this point of time. In the old days when Israel gathered together, the Priesthood was confined to one tribe. The great body of Israel did not possess the Priesthood and their great gatherings were therefore not of the sort of which this gathering is.

I am impressed with the number who bear the Priesthood today, here on earth. I have seen no figures showing how many bear it who are on the other side, but it must run into the millions. We are not so many here. There are in the Melchizedek Priesthood, approximately, a little over a quarter of a million bearing that Priesthood, and bearing the Aaronic Priesthood, there are a little over 153,000, a combined Priesthood membership, according to the figures which I have, of about 377,000. This Priesthood is organized into quorums; these quorums are presided over by officers; these officers are obedient to their superiors. The authority runs from the top clear down along a distinct line, and reaches the last ordained deacon.

It is a marvellous organization, one that has been framed and created and established by our Heavenly Father that we might be effective in our work and in our service. You know, I like to think of it with all of its organization, I like to think of it as the Army of the Lord, the Army to which the Lord looks to carry on his great warfare with evil. You have a Commander-in-Chief sitting here on the stand, with all the authority relating to your priesthood activity that any Commander-in-Chief possesses with reference to an Army. You have a great division of this priesthood, under the sub-command of the Presiding Bishopric, who have a little army of their own of 153,000 boys and men.

Years ago we used to hear that there was no comparable organization of men in the world, except the German army. We were better organized by that appraisal even than the armies of the world, with that exception. The Lord set up this great organization, man did not do it, and he set it up when we were few in number, but it is set up on such principles that however great it may become in numbers, it can still function, operating under our Commander-in-Chief. We are to fight evil, we are to fight the foes of righteousness, we are to fight a life and death struggle for ourselves, not only, but for those who are associated with us, for the membership of the Church.

Some of our Army is hospitalized, not many I suppose, but they have little disturbances, little sour stomachs over the bishop, or some of the General Authorities or somebody else. Somebody else has a pain in the leg, he cannot walk well to his meetings and duties. And then there are some who are A.W.O.L. Now, I hope there are not too many of them. And then there are still others, altogether too many, who have not yet been mustered in, and one of the jobs for us who are already in, is to get in the fellow who is not in.

To me, it is an enthralling thought that the priesthood of the Church of Jesus Christ is the Army of the Lord.

When Cromwell was fighting his battles to obtain the control of Britain, on one occasion he came to a stream, and across the stream was the enemy. Before his men plunged into the stream, he said, "Put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your powder dry." He did not say, "but keep your powder dry," because that would have had in it an implication of derision of the first statement, "Put your trust in God." Cromwell said: "Put your trust in God . . . and keep your powder dry."

That statement embodies a principle which is just as applicable to you brethren as it was to the army of Cromwell.

"Put your trust in God . . . and keep your power dry." And what is your powder? Well, there is one little thing I would like to suggest to you, before talking about the powder, and that is this: Do not cross over the line into the camp of the enemy, and beware of those who cross the line from your enemy and come into your ranks. They may be all right, but many and many a man, I think that is not an exaggeration, is coming over to us from the camp of the enemy. We welcome him and take him in, and he turns out to be a spy, one who is seeking to destroy us. Be on your guard.

Now, as to the powder. The man who is unchaste has wet powder. The man who is guilty of that filthy crime of homosexuality, has wet powder. The man who cheats his neighbor, his powder is not dry. The man who blasphemes, his powder is not dry. So the man who lies, and steals. Somewhat so the man who is selfish, who is unkind, who is uncharitable. So is the man who does not do his duty in the great Army, who does not stand guard to keep out the enemy, the man who does not live so that the Lord can give him inspiration and revelation according to his needs.

Any man who fails to live up to the standards of the Church, as we know them, as they have been prescribed, is not keeping his powder dry.

What kind of an Army are we going to be?

Now I come back to my theme song. As an Army, we must be united; we must, as the Army of the Lord, have no allegiance except to the great Cause and the officers of this Church who direct our work. We must do as we are asked to do. We must obey counsel. We must act as one, and we shall act as one, if we carry through on the idea that we are the Army of the Lord to fight evil and to establish righteousness and to do the works which the Lord has commanded us to do.

May God give us the power and the strength to be really an Army of the Lord, serving him, keeping his commandments, doing as we are told, saving men, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

MY DEAR brethren, gathered tonight in a vast congregation, both seen and unseen, I greet you in the fraternity of the Holy Priesthood, which in the providence of our Lord we have the honor and the privilege to bear. I esteem you as my brethren, my friends, and colleagues in the advancement of the glorious cause we have the honor to represent. I honor all of you for your noble aspirations, and for your devotion to this great cause of the Lord.

Saturday, October 2

The contributions made and to be made by the priesthood of God, as so well and beautifully outlined just now for us by President Clark, is one of the most encouraging of all the aspects of our work. The priesthood is integrated with our whole life. It is part and parcel of it, and there is nothing in life to us who hold it that we contemplate without the priesthood.

I am deeply concerned, as my Brethren are also, as indicated in the remarks of this Conference, about the fundamental institution not only of our Society, but the Society of the whole world, the home. President McKay alerted us to it as he spoke of the children and their delinquency, and the need for a home life that would give to the youth a better and greater outlook upon the world and their place in it. The thing that particularly concerns me is this terrible evil of divorce.

I spoke of it to the Relief Society the other day, and I would like to make further comment about it tonight. I trust that what I may have to say may not be incompatible with that which has been heretofore spoken in the Conference, but rather complementary to it.

In my talk to the sisters I tried to outline the contributions which the Church and its organizations throughout our whole history have made to the solidarity and well-being of the home. I pointed out the theology of the Church which so adequately and so beautifully furnishes the basic concept of the home,—that this sacred institution, ordained of the Lord, is charged with the primary responsibility for receiving the spirit children of the Father, tabernacled in the flesh, and then to nurture, train and develop these children in mortality, and then return them to the Celestial presence whence they came. I know that the priesthood is one of the greatest contributing agencies in the achievement of this glorious undertaking, and I would like to enlarge a little on the responsibilities and opportunities of the priesthood in this matter.

I made the statement, and I hope you will approve of it, that the remedy for domestic problems and irritations is not divorce, but repentance. I am thoroughly convinced in my heart that this is true, and I hope you will approve of that interpretation. I am sure that there is much that can be done to lessen this great evil.

A long time ago I was a practicing attorney. I have investigated domestic problems. I have seen and tried divorce suits, and heard the evidence of the parties. As I look back over my experiences and observations, I can recall few instances where repentance of bad conduct on the part of the man or woman or both would not have been the answer. We are commanded to repent of all sin, and while I hesitate to say it for fear of hurting the feelings of some, I am constrained to believe that divorce is sin. If sin is an infraction of God's law, then surely this separation is in that category. There has been repeated before in our presence that great commandment:

"For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife;

"And they twain shall be one flesh . . .

"What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." (Mark 10:7-9.)

So divorce contravenes the law of God. Now, I do not mean to say that there may not be exceptions to be treated with some tolerance, but for my own part I am fearful of any interpretation which does not put divorce in the category of evil and sin.

Now, the thinking of society has undergone a great change just in a generation. I and many others can well remember that a half century or less ago in nearly all the better circles stigma was attached to divorce. Families and people generally were ashamed of it. It was hidden in the family closet wherever it could be. Why? Because our forebears had a deeper regard for the laws of God and the sacred status of home and family. Has the Lord ever said anything to give justification for this change of attitude, and for increasing tolerance for this great evil? Not a word. His law stands today as it has always done, and members of his Church with the enlightenment of the latter-day revelations know better than anyone else in the world why divorce is an evil, attended with fearful consequences perpetuated into eternity.

It would seem that some other people are thinking a little along this line. I clipped from the paper the other day an item with the following heading: "BRITAIN PAPER RAPS DIVORCE, 'ONE-BY-ONE POLYGAMISTS'."

"London, Sept. 24 (AP)—The Weekly 'Church of England newspaper' blasted away Friday at 'one-at-a-time polygamy' and demanded tightening of British divorce laws.

"Changes should be made, the weekly said, so that 'a third divorce, happily rare in this country but common enough in America, should be impossible.'

"The editorial advocated making a second divorce much harder to get than the first one and declared that third parties in triangles involving married couples should be sent to jail."

I doubt that I could agree with everything in this editorial, but I bring it to your attention merely to show that even in the modern world there is great agitation over this subject.

Now, my brethren, I believe that if you will unite in emphasizing in all your teachings and contacts with the people the glorious concept of eternal marriage so well known to all, (it has been mentioned so well here this evening), and the evil inherent in divorce, the separation of parents, the breaking of family ties, we can do good among our own people at least. Our bishops, our ward teachers, our priesthood quorum officers, have an obligation to keep themselves informed of conditions prevailing in the homes of our people.

I asked the Relief Society visiting teachers who have such an intimate contact with the ladies of the house to be observant, to detect those indications of irritation and troubles leading to separation, and I am sure that we through the Ward Teachers and other agencies can likewise detect many of these troubles before they erupt into this terrible, cruel thing of divorce. I am certain too that our priesthood authorities, if they detect these difficulties in time, can exercise an influence that will deter the parties from precipitant action.

I said the remedy was repentance. The priesthood is the power that can call to repentance, the only true power that I know of that can do that. These sociologists of the world,—I do not think know how to call to repentance. I do not mean to deprecate their efforts in composing difficulties, but they do not know how to call to repentance, and they do not have the power to do it. There is no more effective means at your command in combating this evil than the power and influence of your own example. Your own loving companionship with your wife, so eloquently spoken of today, and your affectionate, dutiful family may be the ray of light and hope to give encouragement to many who suffer under the apprehension of domestic troubles. I call upon every man among you to review seriously, solemnly, his position as husband and father. If he discovers in honest contemplation anything in his conduct that gives rise to domestic irritation, or any neglect on his part, I call on him to repent, humbly and sincerely, and seek the help of the Lord in turning away from any acts or omissions incompatible with his priesthood and his obligations to his family. If his wife needs to repent, let him lead the way, and I believe there will be an excellent prospect that she will follow. I am satisfied that if all will ponder thoughtfully and prayerfully this great social problem and its alarming increase in the Lord's Church, you will reach the conclusion that almost universally the remedy for domestic estrangement and difficulty is repentance.

Now may I just say a word about a man of the priesthood as the head of his household. That too has been mentioned before. I believe that the Lord intended that every worthy member of the priesthood should have this recognition, and he can be accorded this recognition without impairment of the concept of partnership in marriage. Women of the Church have respect for the priesthood, especially those who go to the temple. They do not begrudge a man his position as head of the home. They know that all the greatest blessings the Lord has promised will be realized in their association with the priesthood, and every true Latter-day

Saint woman wants her husband to magnify that holy calling which has come to him. The difficulties that arise usually stem from an attempt on the part of the head of the household to exercise inconsiderate or autocratic authority. There is no position in the Church in which the constitution and doctrine of the priesthood as revealed by the Lord has more direct application than to a husband and father in the home. He must never cease to be guided by the divine direction that:

"No power or influence can or ought to be maintained . . . only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned . . .

"Reproving betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love toward him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy." (D. & C. 121:41, 43.)

Every head of the household may win respect for his position if he will but truly follow these divine directions.

I need not tell you how greatly broken homes contribute to juvenile delinquency, mentioned by President McKay. You know what lack of respect for law and order is doing to our society, but I believe that the first lessons in order, reverence, and respect for law and established institutions come from the home. The home itself should be an institution of law and order. Remember there is no order without law.

It is a kindness to children to teach them the necessity for law and also the penalties for violation. If they do not learn this in the homes, they will have to learn it in the hard ways which society enforces. Any wife and mother who fails to accord to the man of the priesthood who heads her household deference for his position, and who disparages him in the eyes of her children will live to regret her actions, and any man who heads a household who does not make himself worthy of the respect of his wife and children will be sorry.

My dear brethren, we have no greater and more pressing obligation than to establish and maintain the solidarity and the goodness of home and family. We have the power within ourselves to set the example for this whole world, and there are enough of us, even in comparison with the great populations of the world, to set this example so that it may be read by all the peoples of the world if we will but live to our opportunities and the responsibilities the Lord has given us.

For one, I pray for strength in myself and in all of you to live according to the Lord's word, to show gratitude and appreciation for our testimonies and for our membership in his Kingdom, that we may all give united support to his Holy Cause. I ask his blessings ever to attend you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

AS I HAVE said before in the presence of our fellow laborers in the Council and in this General Priesthood Meeting, I feel in your presence and sense more keenly what John the Beloved Disciple felt when he said, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." (1 John 3:14.) I say that tonight with all my heart, as I look upon this vast audience and sense, too, the number of additional groups meeting in various places named.

Several days ago I entered my study after a hard day's work, anticipating this moment. The general outline for this Conference had been prepared, outlined so far as those who should pray and those who should speak and when; we had asked the Lord to guide us regarding appropriate messages. On that particular evening, however, I had in mind this moment, and I was physically and mentally fatigued. I could not study, I could not get my mind on anything definite; so after a word of secret prayer I retired.

The next morning early I entered my study, reached for a little book that contains what I call "literary nuggets," taken from Church works, from poets, writers such as Scott, Burns, Longfellow and others, and the thought came, "I believe I should like to take some of these nuggets and apply them to the priesthood of the Church." May I give you one or two tonight.

The first is in harmony with the great comparison made by President Clark of the army and the battle, and it is also, as I shall develop it, in harmony with the impressive remarks by President Richards. "The greatest battle of life is fought out within the silent chambers of the soul."

I ask you fellow workers to do again what undoubtedly you have done frequently, to sit down and commune with yourself. There is a battle on with you, and with me, every day. Fight out with yourself and decide upon your course of action regarding what your duty is first to your family. Of somebody getting into your life who will make an unhappiness or do some unhappiness in your home, as we have heard tonight.

Second, your duty to your quorum. You decide whether you owe your quorum anything, and see if you have strength enough to do it after you decide.

Third, you decide in that silent moment what your duty is to your Church.

And fourth, what you owe to your fellow men.

Associated on that page was this comment from one of the most sincere writers we have. It is in "The Simple Life." "First, be of your own country, your own city, your own home, your own Church, your own workshop. Then, if you can, set out from this to go beyond it. That is the plain and natural order, and a man must fortify himself with very valid reasons to arrive at reversing it. Each one is occupied with something else too often than what concerns him. He is absent from his post. He ignores his trade. That is what complicates life, and it would be so simple for each one to be about his own matters."

Decide where your duty is, even remembering that "the greatest battle of life is fought out within the silent chambers of your own soul."

The second that I picked out is this: "What e'er thou art, act well thy part." That, of course, applies to moral and lawful endeavors, and not to harmful or villainous actions. That influenced me fifty-four years ago when, as I have told some of you before, Peter G. Johnson and I were walking around Stirling Castle in Scotland. I was discouraged, I was just starting my first mission. I had been snubbed that day in tracting. I was homesick, and we walked around the Stirling Castle, really not doing our duty, and as we re-entered the town I saw a building, half-finished, and to my surprise, from the sidewalk I saw an inscription over the lintel of the front door, carved in stone. I said to Brother Johnson, "I want to go over and see what that is." I was not more than half way up the pathway leading to it, when that message struck me, carved there: "What e'er thou art, act well thy part." As I rejoined my companion and told him, do you know what man came into my mind first? The custodian at the University of Utah, from which I was just graduated. I realized that I had as great a respect for that man as I had for any professor in whose class I had sat. He acted well his part. I recalled how he helped us with the football suits, how he helped us with some of our lessons, for he was a university graduate himself. Humble, but to this day I hold respect for him.

What are you? You are men who hold the priesthood of God, who hold divine authority to represent Deity in whatever position to which you have been assigned. When a man, an ordinary man is set apart in his community as a sheriff, there is something added to him. When a policeman on these streets, at the crossing, holds up his hand, you stop. There is something more about him than just an individual, there is the power that is given him. And so it is throughout life. No man can be given a position without being enhanced. It is a reality. So, too, is the power of the priesthood. It was so real in the days of Peter that Simon the Sorcerer, who was making money by his tricks, wanted to buy it, and offered the Apostles money: "Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost." Oh, what a denunciation Peter gave him! "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. . . . For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity. . . . Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." And so strong was the denunciation that Simon said, "Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me." (Acts 8:19, 20, 23, 22, 24.)

There was no doubt in Simon's mind about the reality of the power of the Holy Ghost. "What e'er thou art, act well thy part." Are you a deacon, do the duties of a deacon well. Are you a teacher, do your work well. A priest watching over the Church, visiting with them,—young men in this Church, if we could just do the duties of the teacher and of the priest, teaching people their duty, what a power for good to young men eighteen years of age, and nineteen. Not incorrigible, not recreants, but leaders. Brethren there is nothing in the world so powerful in guiding youth as to have them act well their parts in the priesthood.

In the same passage quoted by President Richards, the Lord says that many are called, but few are chosen, and why are they not chosen? Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world and aspire to the honors of men, that they do not learn this one lesson, that the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principle of righteousness. That they may be conferred upon us, it is true, but when men begin to exercise unrighteous dominion, then the power that is given to them is withdrawn, they are left to themselves to kick against the pricks, to fight against God.

I can merely mention these. You work them out for yourself.

The third: "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:12.) It was a most dramatic scene when that sentence was uttered, and so you have this thought expressed as follows: The world's hope and destiny, the world's hope and destiny are centered in the Man of Galilee, our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

In your moment when you are fighting out the battle of the day, will you look introspectively and see whether you really believe that? Paul Kane once asked this question: "Is Jesus only a legendary figure in history, a Saint to be painted in the stained glass of church windows, a sort of sacred fairy not to be approached and hardly to be mentioned by name, or is he still what he was when he was in the flesh, a reality, a man of like passions with ourselves, an elder brother, a guide, a counselor, a comforter, a great voice calling to us out of the past to live nobly, to guide bravely, and keep up our courage to the last?"

What is he to you, my fellow laborer? When you kneel down to pray at night, do you feel his nearness, his personality hearing you, do you feel a power that operates perhaps as the radio or a greater power so that you feel that you are communing with him? You are not just saying your prayers, you are praying. Do you know tonight that he is real, our Savior, the Head of the Church? I know he is, and I know, too, that a whole nation right tonight is trying to teach a million boys that Christ is but a myth and there is no God.

And now I will just pass to the fourth. "If my life is of no value to my friends, it is of no value to me," said the Prophet Joseph when he was on the way to Carthage. You hold the priesthood to bless others; not for selfish purposes nor for selfish advancement, but to bless others, and under that gem, or nugget, I have these lines from the great writer Browning, who puts in the mouth of Paracelsus, who thought learning would bring him everything—success, knowledge, etc., and he was going to rise above his fellow men and become great, and maybe hand it down to them if they would let him. He ignored the advice of Festus, his friend, not to leave his fellowmen.

Paracelsus obtained his knowledge, but he learned the lesson of life. Finally, an old man, Paracelsus was in Greece, and Festus heard about him and rushed to his old friend's bedside. There, that great philosopher and scholar said, "Festus, I have found the secret of life!"

"What is it?" said Festus.

Paracelsus said, "There was a time when I was happy."

"And when was that?" said Festus. "All I hope depends upon that answer."

"When, but the time I vowed myself to man?"

"Great God," exclaimed Festus, "Thy judgments are inscrutable!"

"There is an answer to the longing of the human heart," continued Paracelsus, "and it is this: Live in all things outside yourself by love, and you will have joy. That was the life of God; it ought to be our life. In him it was perfect, but in all created things it is a lesson learned through difficulty."

Time has passed. I give you these nuggets and ask you to fight your fight daily, and say nothing that will hurt your wife, that will cause her tears, even though she might cause you provocation. Realize that those children are your eternal possessions, treasures of eternity. Do not dare to set an improper example towards them. You are men of the priesthood and you are leaders. Never let them hear a cross word. You should control yourself. He is a weak man who flies into a passion, whether he is working a machine or plowing or writing or whatever he may be doing in the home. A man of the priesthood should not fly into a passion. Learn to be dignified. You cannot picture Christ flying into a passion. Indignant with sin? Yes. Overturning the money changers when they insulted God and defiled the temple. Yes: But so dignified and noble that when he stands before Pilate he makes that leader say: "Behold, the man."

God bless you, our dear fellow laborers as you go back now to your homes in stakes and wards and magnify the Holy Priesthood, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

(The Choir sang, "How Beautiful upon the Mountains."—Harker)

Announcer: We shall now hear on this Church of the Air Service Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, frequently referred to as the "Mormon" Church. Richard Evans has titled today's talk: "We Are Not Alone in Life."

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My Beloved Friends:

As we see and talk to other people (and even sometimes as we look into our own hearts), it is apparent that there is much of loneliness in life—not only the loneliness that comes from lack of companionship with people—but also the loneliness that comes with lack of purpose, with lack of understanding of the reasons why we live.

No doubt, some loneliness comes because we are always inseparably ourselves. Some thoughts, some experiences, some intuitions, some of the awareness we have within us we cannot fully share with anyone else. We come into the world alone. We leave it alone. We are always and eternally our own separate selves.

But loneliness is more than simply solitude. (A person can be very lonely in a crowded busy place). And there is a kind of loneliness that comes from a sense of not belonging, of not fitting in, of not knowing our part in the picture—of not knowing what we are, or who we are, or where we came from, or where we are going, or why we are here, or what life is basically all about.

The mortal years of life pass swiftly and soon. And except for some glorious, eternal certainties there could well be a universal feeling of frustration. We labor long for things that sustain life and for things that afford a little passing pleasure—but there is nothing of these tangibles that we can take with us. These things we call our own are ours only for a short time. The farmer's fields not long ago belonged to someone else, and soon again will belong to someone else. The stocks, the bonds, the buildings, the houses we have, whatever we have title to, we all shall leave in yet a little while—and our going will make a mockery of all the titles of our earthly tenancy.

About all we can take with us after all, are the knowledge and character we have acquired, the intelligence we have developed or improved upon, the service we have given, the lessons we have learned, and the blessed assurance that we may have our life and loved ones, always and forever—as assured us by a wise and kindly Father whose children we all are. And knowing Him, and what He is to us, (and what we are to one another), what His purpose is in sending us here from His presence, is one of the surest safeguards against loneliness and feelings of frustration.

Some few evenings ago, I sat at dinner by the side of a distinguished, successful industrialist, who told me simply and in a few sentences how he faced the heavy problems of his life, and met the decisions of each day:

"When I get up in the morning, he said, 'I often feel that I can't face it, but as I get down on my knees and say simply 'God help me to do what I have to do this day,' strength comes, and I feel that I am equal to it. And I think of Him as my Father, and talk to Him as simply and directly as I used to talk to my father when he was here."

And then he added: "Sometimes I do things I know I shouldn't do. But when I do, I don't lie to God about my motives. I know it's no use. I know He knows my heart, my thoughts. I know what I have done, and He knows what I have done. And I don't try to deceive Him or myself."

I was mellowed and humbled by the direct and simple spirit of this friend with whom I sat the other evening. He was not of my faith, but in my own earnest belief, he could not have talked to God with so much satisfaction or assurance if he had thought of Him merely as a force, or as an ineffable essence, the nature and purpose of which he knew nothing—or at least nothing that would bring to him the assured feeling that he was in fact talking to his Father.

It is urgently important in life to draw nearer to a knowledge of the nature of God, and of our relationship to Him and to one another. And what better place to begin than with the first book of the Bible—what better place to turn than to literal scriptural language?:

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. . . And God said, Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness: . . . So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; . . . And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." (Genesis 1:1, 26, 27, 31)

It was a good world; it is a good world—despite the foolishness and perversities of men. It is good because of its beauties and bounties, and because of the glorious purpose and limitless possibilities that a loving Father has given His children—a Father whom the scriptures testify is personal and approachable, even as Paul proclaimed in his Epistle to the Hebrews that Jesus the Christ was in "the express image" of his Father's person. (Hebrews 1:3.)

Scripture records that many men have seen God, among them Moses and Aaron and the seventy elders of Israel (Exodus 24:9-11)—even as John recorded in Revelation that "his servants shall serve him: And they shall see his face." (Rev. 22:3, 4.)

into heaven, and saw . . . Jesus standing on the right hand of God." (Acts 7:55.)

And Jesus frequently addressed His Father. In Gethsemane: "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." (Matt. 26:39.)

On Calvary: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." (Luke 23:34.)

And earlier with the Twelve: "These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come. . . .

"And now, O Father, glorify thou me . . . with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. . . .

"Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are. . . .

["And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent. . . ."] (John 17:1, 5, 11, 33.)

There is much more of scripture that affirms the oneness of purpose of the Father and of His beloved Son—and that also affirms their separateness of person as a literal, physical fact. And as Jesus approached Him, so also may we approach the Father, in all our needs. In every problem, in sorrow and success, in all the things we struggle with from day to day, we can reach out to Him with the assurance that He is there. He lives. He speaks. His voice is not unto the ancients only, but even unto our own day there is witness of His personal presence. He is a God of continuous revelation, of continuous mindfulness for all of us, and He does not shut Himself in the Heavens if we will let Him come into our lives.

He has sent us here, from where we were with Him before birth, for a brief period of mortal experience, with our free agency, our right of choice, with principles and commandments, and with His Spirit to light us through life, and has assured us everlasting life with the glorious promise of limitless and eternal progress and possibilities, with all the sweetness of association of family and friends in the peace and protection of His presence—if we will. He has assured us that "men are that they might have joy," (Book of Mormon, II Nephi 2:25) and has declared it to be His purpose "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 1:39.)

Sunday, October 3

Knowing our feelings for our own loved ones, for our own children, we can take confidence in the mercy and love and understanding and in the helpfulness of our Father in heaven, who will not leave the humblest child or the most lonely among us, alone in life.

You who are sick—you who are wracked with pain, you who are confined with physical infirmity—you are not alone in life. There is faith, there is hope, there is mercy, there is help from Him. "He that keepeth thee will not slumber. (Psalm 121:3.)

You who are discouraged, whose obligations are heavy, whose best efforts somehow seem to fall short of success; you who have been falsely dealt with; you who have met reverses and disappointments, you who have lost heart: There is a kind and just and merciful Father in heaven to whom you can turn, and who will see that you lose nothing that should have been yours. He can bring peace to your hearts, and restore faith and purpose. You are not alone.

And you who are tried and tempted, by appetites, by evil in its subtle shapes; you who have been careless in your conduct, who have lived the kind of lives that fall short of what you know you should have lived—and are contending with conscience and are torn inside yourselves: You also are not alone in life, for the Lord God who gave you life has also given the glorious principle of repentance, which, upon sincere turning away from false ways, can restore again the blessed peace that comes with quiet conscience.

You who have been hurt—hurt in your hearts, hurt in spirit, you who have been offended and have withdrawn yourselves and become a little aloof—you need not be alone. The door is open.

You who have unanswered questions (which all of us have); you who are torn between the teachings of contending teachers, who are confused by conflicting theories: Keep faith. Reserve judgment. Be patient. God lives. He is the source of all truth, and where there seem to be discrepancies it is simply because we do not know enough. The theories of men change swiftly, but "the glory of God is intelligence," (Doctrine and Covenants 93:36) and there is no truth in all the universe that the Father of us all would not wish you to seek and to accept—for man cannot be "saved in ignorance." (Doctrine and Covenants 131:6) Keep an open mind and an open heart and a teachable spirit. "Seek learning, even by study and also by faith." (Doctrine and Covenants 88:118.)

And you who are young, who have ambitions for the future, but who face serious uncertainties: Go forward and live your lives with faith. Look far ahead; decide on some good goal. Study, work, and prepare yourselves. Make solid plans and pursue solid purposes and don't place undue emphasis on the passing, trivial pleasures. When the proper time comes, make your homes and have your families, and face your problems with faith. Your Father in heaven knows and understands you, and will help and lead you to happiness and usefulness here, and to your high destiny hereafter, if you will keep close to Him and take Him into your confidence.

And you who have lost your loved ones: You are not alone. God, who is the Father of the spirits of all men, has sent us here from His presence until he calls us to return. And our loved ones who have left us will always be themselves, and we may see and know and be with them again, always and forever—if we will but take the steps that lead to eternal family reunion. They are nearer to us than we know.

We are none of us alone in life. We belong to an eternal family. We belong also to one, another—and God, who made us in His image, is the Father of us all. And there is justice and mercy and fair and adequate opportunity for all of us from Him who is and has been mindful of us all, from birth and before—through death and beyond.

He is there and within our reach. He will guide and enlighten and lift. He is the source of truth, of comfort, of protection, and of the peace that passeth understanding, and the source of the sweet and satisfying assurance that life and truth are limitless and everlasting, and despite all problems and all perplexities we are not left alone in life.

We would testify to all who hear this day of the living reality of Him who did make us in His own image—that He lives, that He has spoken, that He does speak; that He sent His Son into the world, who is our Saviour and of whose divinity this day we testify; and that the heavens have been opened in this day and dispensation.

We are none of us alone in life, but in the hands of Him to whom His Son, our Savior and Redeemer, offered this sublime prayer:

"Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen." (Matthew 6:9-13.)

(The Choir sang: "Faith of Our Fathers."—Hemy-Walton.)

(The Choir then sang: "For the Beauty of the Earth."—Kocher.)

Announcer: "Jesus, lover of my soul, Let me to thy bosom fly While the near-er waters roll, While the tempest still is high; Hide me, O my Savior, hide, Till the storm of life is past; Safe into the haven guide; Oh, receive my soul at last."

(The organ played "As the Dew," and on signal the Choir and Organ broke into the hymn, "Gently Raise," singing the words to the end of the second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The CBS Radio Network and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Frank Asper, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We open with the worshipful music of Will James: "Almighty God of our fathers . . . Lord God of Israel . . . Unto thy throne do we lift up our songs . . . Our pray'rs ascend to Thee: Our Father which art in Heav'n, Hallowed be Thy name."

(The Choir sang: "Almighty God of Our Fathers."—James.)

Announcer: Frank Asper first turns on Temple Square today to one of the writings of Benedetto Marcello, the celebrated 16th Century composer of Psalm settings: We hear "Allegrretto."

(Organ selection: "Allegrretto."—Marcello.)

Announcer: Richard P. Condie and the Tabernacle Choir now sing James MacDermid's setting for this comforting, reassuring New Testament text: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you."

(The Choir sang: "In My Father's House."—MacDermid.)

Announcer: With Dr. Frank Asper at the organ we hear now the thoughtful devotional phrases of the "Andante Cantabile" from the Fourth Organ Symphony by Widor.

(Organ selection: "Andante Cantabile"—Widor.)

Announcer: One of the most moving scenes of sacred writ is the one wherein the Savior said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." This, coupled with an earlier utterance, suggests the sweetness and cleanness with which children come here from the presence of the Father: "And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, And said, Verily I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." And then He added a sentence that suggests the weight of responsibility that the presence of children imposes upon us, and which suggests also the gravity of the offense of destroying faith: "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." In a well-known work of literature, Prince Myshkin had this sentence to say: "The soul is healed by being with children." Healed, yes—and also searched. Perhaps we are never more open to searching scrutiny than when the eyes of a child are upon us. And so often we underestimate their understanding. As Emerson observed, "[Boys] know truth from counterfeit as quick as the chemist does. They detect weakness in your eye and behavior . . . before you open your mouth . . ." Don't try to hide your heart from a child. Children have a way of seeing inside. And our teaching must be more than talking. We must be careful what they feel from us, what they see inside us, besides the things we say. They come here clean and sweet and teachable, from the Father of us all, and we have an inescapable obligation to teach and train them early, and not to leave their teaching to chance—to teach them reverence and righteousness and respect, honor and obedience, to teach them faith, to teach them truth. "And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, . . . that teach them not to understand . . . the sin be upon the heads of the parents." "And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." "I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth. . . . And whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that . . . he were drowned in the depth of the sea." Such is the inescapable obligation imposed by the presence of children, and such is the gravity of the offense of destroying faith—in children, in youth, or, for that matter, in anyone at all.

Announcer: Dr. Asper has presented Thomas Koschat's setting for the 23rd Psalm: "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

And now we hear the Choir recall Alfred Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar" sung to the music of Henry Holden Huss: "For though from out our bourne of time and place the flood may bear me far, I hope to see my pilot face to face when I have crossed the bar."

(The Choir then sang: "Crossing the Bar."—Huss)

Announcer: "Abide with me, fast falls the eventide; the darkness deepens; Lord with me abide: When other helpers fail, and comforts flee, help of the helpless, O abide with me!"

(The Choir sang: "Abide with Me." —Monk.)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the thirteen hundred and eleventh presentation, continuing the 26th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by CBS Radio, and originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the Tabernacle Choir with its three hundred seventy-five singing voices. Frank Asper was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

In another seven days, at this same hour, music and the spoken word will be heard once more from the Crossroads of the West.

SUNDAY MORNING GENERAL CONFERENCE SESSION

The Sunday morning session of the General Conference commenced promptly at 10:00 a.m., with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

The Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, great numbers were assembled on the Tabernacle grounds, it being a beautiful sunshiny day, the Assembly Hall just south of the Tabernacle was filled with listeners, the Barratt Hall was also fully occupied with people, and in addition unnumbered people by the tens of thousands listened to the proceedings over radio and television.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall furnished the choral numbers for this session. Elder Frank W. Asper was at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

The Fifth Session of this the One Hundred Twenty-Fifth Semi-Annual Conference of the Church was held last evening,—the General Priesthood Meeting. The speakers were Elder William Noble Waite, president of the South Los Angeles Stake; Elder ElRay L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve, and president of the Salt Lake Temple; and the First Presidency.

There were in attendance, it was reported, over 19,000 members of the priesthood. I am sure that there were over 20,000, because I noted in the count they gave only 6800 in the Tabernacle, and the Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, excepting only the aisles, so we can safely say that we had over 20,000 members of the priesthood in attendance at that Priesthood Meeting, and 19 overflow assemblies. We received this telegram this morning from the East Phoenix Stake presidency:

"Priesthood brethren of Phoenix and East Phoenix Stakes send love, greetings, and sincere thanks for the special wire carrying priesthood session proceedings. Reception was excellent. We look forward to this plan being a permanent practice."

We have an announcement here from one of our radio-television friends from North Hollywood, California: "Please make announcement that the 10 a.m. Sunday Session which will be heard in Los Angeles on your television broadcast Radio Station KBLA, Burbank, California, serving the San Fernando Valley and metropolitan Los Angeles will rebroadcast entire conference beginning October 10 from 2 to 3 p.m. and continuing for one hour each Sunday at the same time until the sessions have been broadcast. KBLA in 1952 was the first station to broadcast the conference in Southern California. With kindest regards and best wishes."

The Fifth Session of this General Conference, as I say, was held last evening. Elder Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve was the speaker this morning on Columbia's Church of the Air. I hope you all heard that excellent address, and also the Choir Broadcast this morning was excellent, as always. In fact, I thought, Brother Cornwall, you are getting better than ever. (Laughter)

We are now assembled in the Sixth Session of the One Hundred Twenty-Fifth Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. All the General Authorities are in attendance, excepting Bishop Joseph

Sunday, October 3

Third Day

L. Wirthlin and Elder Adam S. Bennion. Sister Bennion is here, and Brother Bennion is listening in.

These services and the services this afternoon will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall over a public address system and by television. We have announced the services heretofore of 15 radio stations in Utah, California, Idaho, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, and Arizona, and by special arrangement over 10 television stations in Utah, Washington, Colorado, Oregon, California, and Arizona. What a mighty congregation assembled this morning to worship the Lord, and to participate in this great semi-annual Conference. It is overwhelming. We are indeed grateful for those who are cooperating.

We note in the audience members of the U.S. Congress, representatives of our State institutions of learning, of the Junior Colleges, Seminary teachers, the Secretary of State, the Mayor, to all of whom we express a cordial welcome. We appreciate the spirit of harmony and the desire to cooperate in the effort to uplift humanity, and to establish truth.

We have with us the Secretary of Agriculture, Brother Benson, as you know, our United States Senator, Wallace F. Bennett, members of the House of Representatives, and others, Mr. Dawson, Douglas R. Stringfellow, Lamont Toronto, Superintendent Bateman and Dr. Lynn Bennion, President Olpin, President Dixon, President Miller of the Weber College, and others undoubtedly whom I have not seen.

We have also our stake presidents, their counselors, and bishoprics.

The Choir singing for this morning session of the Conference will be by the Tabernacle Choir, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin these services by the Choir and Congregation singing, "High On The Mountain Top," Brother Cornwall conducting.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Edward L. Clissold, president of the Oahu Stake, and formerly president of the Japanese Hawaiian Mission.

We shall now join with the Choir.

The congregation joined with the Choir in singing the hymn, "High On The Mountain Top."

Elder Edward L. Clissold, President of the Oahu Stake, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "Jesu, Jesu, Holy, Holy, Yet Most Lowly," conducted by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall.

Following the Choir singing we shall hear from President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency. He will be followed by Elder George Q. Morris.

Singing by the Choir, "Jesu, Jesu, Holy, Holy."

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, I propose on this occasion to present for the attention of members of the Church, and other friends who listen to our proceedings, some features of our missionary system. I shall not give statistical items. They appear in our publications from time to time. My concern is that our missionary efforts may be more thoroughly understood and appreciated by all people.

I recognize that I cannot hope to give an adequate understanding of this great activity in the Church without the Spirit of our Lord which underlies it, and I therefore solicit the aid of your faith and prayers in presenting it, and the direction of our Father.

I mention first a rather pronounced tendency in recent years to emphasize the value of the teaching process in the proclamation of the gospel. I do not mean to infer that our missionaries have not always sought to teach through their preaching. As teaching concerns itself largely with the impartation of knowledge, so of course all good preaching embraces teaching. The tendency of which I speak is directed more particularly to the organization and planning of our gospel teaching in missionary work. I feel that there is ample warrant for this planned teaching of the gospel to investigators.

The Savior commanded his disciples, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

"Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." (Matthew 28:19-20.)

Teaching with testimony is the epitome of missionary effort.

If you will bear with me, I will review for you briefly some of the major items included within the planned or standardized program used by the missionaries as they contact the good men and women all over the world who will listen to their message. Here is the outline of their gospel teaching, usually presented to their listeners in family groups in the homes of the people in what are called "cottage meetings."

First, the Godhead. The missionary calls attention to the necessity of a correct understanding of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, his personality and attributes, to the extent that it is possible for men to have understanding of Deity. Nearly all investigators readily assent that such an understanding is important and highly desirable in all religious considerations.

The missionary then reviews the concepts and teachings of the various denominational churches on this subject, and then brings forward, with the cooperation of the investigator through references pointed out in his own Bible, the support which the scriptures offer for the personality of Deity as opposed to his being merely an essence or spirit pervading the universe. To anyone believing the Bible, the composition of the Godhead with three distinct personalities is made clear, and then the missionary, with conviction and testimony, gives to the investigator the substantiating experience of the Prophet Joseph Smith, in which he beheld both the Father and the Son, felt and experienced the glory of their presence, looked upon their forms and countenances, and heard with his ears the sweet, comforting, exalting resonance of their voices.

What an abiding satisfaction to the searcher for truth is this first lesson and testimony of the missionary! Confusion with reference to this all-important theological principle is resolved, and the way is opened for further understanding of the whole province of religion, embracing as it does man's relationship to Deity, his origin, his purpose in earth life, and his ultimate destiny.

Next, the missionary presents to his investigating group a lesson on the apostasy. He reviews the Primitive Church set up by the Savior himself, and the essential features which the Lord prescribed for his authentic work of salvation to go forward. He has little difficulty in winning assent from his listeners that if men and churches depart from the essentials which the Savior established, they are not in a position to represent him authentically, and that the ordinances lack validity if not administered by his delegated authority.

After considering the many variations and departures from the essential features of the Lord's Primitive Church, it is not difficult for the investigator to understand why a restoration was necessary, with a new delegation of power and authority to set up the Lord's work and administer the ordinances of the gospel.

Then again follows the earnest, sincere testimony of the missionary as to the experiences of the Prophet Joseph and his fellow laborer, which manifestations of divine power serve not only to corroborate the apostasy, but also to substantiate beyond question the necessity for and the actuality of the restoration, and so the restoration is the next lesson, with its new commission to hold and exercise the Holy Priesthood with an interpretation of that divine power, which in my thinking has never been equaled in any writing, sacred or otherwise.

It is said that the most beautiful words in the English language are those of the Savior when in his Sermon on the Mount, he answered his own question:

Sunday, October 3

Third Day

"And why take ye thought for raiment?" with these matchless phrases:

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin:

"And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." (Ibid., 6:28-29.)

I compare with the words of the Savior those used in the revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, concerning the Holy Priesthood restored to man after the long apostasy from the true concept of that priesthood as the Lord exercised it and delegated it to his Apostles. Here are the words which I put in the same class with those of the Savior. They define the nature of the priesthood and the manner of its exercise, and they came from the Savior:

"Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven." (D. & C. 121:45.)

The next lesson presents the Book of Mormon and its place in the establishment of our Father's work among his children. The investigator readily agrees that our Father in heaven, who is a just God, is no respecter of persons, and that all of his children the world over are the beneficiaries of his mercy and his plans for their salvation. The scriptural predictions concerning the coming forth of this sacred volume of scripture are presented to the investigator. He is reminded of the prehistoric peoples who dwelt in the lands of the Americas and the demands of justice in bringing them the message of the Savior.

The investigator is particularly reminded of the injunction set forth in the book of Ezekiel (Ezekiel 37:15-20) that two sticks, meaning books, should be prepared, one for the house of Judah, and one for the house of Joseph, and that the Book of Mormon fills the requirement for the latter assignment. He is also reminded of the Savior's reference to his "other sheep," not of the Jews, whom he must visit, and that the Book of Mormon sets forth the fulfillment of the Lord's obligation to his "other sheep."

Understanding is given by the missionary of the great purposes served by the Book of Mormon in bringing to the world the history of the early inhabitants of the western continents, the experiences of their nations in dealing with the great political, moral, and religious problems of their day, and more particularly in presenting in even more clarity than they are to be found in the Jewish scriptures, the word of God and the principles of the holy gospel.

The investigator is made aware, sometimes with surprise to him, that the Book of Mormon is in no sense antagonistic to the scriptures of the Holy Bible, but it is rather a companion book containing revelations of the prophets, and an account of the administration of the Savior's work among his "other sheep," being in essence a new and additional witness to the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ. The experience of the Prophet Joseph Smith and his associates in the discovery and production of this book, recited under the convincing testimonies of the missionaries, seldom fails to bring to the investigator a new understanding and respect for this sacred book, this mighty messenger of Jesus Christ to all mankind.

With this background of understanding given by the missionary to the investigator regarding the true nature of Deity, the establishment of the Lord's true Church and kingdom in the earth through his Beloved Son in the Meridian of Time, the falling away from the true worship of the Christ, the withdrawal of his authority, its subsequent restoration, and the setting up of his kingdom in the latter dispensation, with a new volume of scripture as an additional testimony of the Lord's divinity and a necessary and invaluable expansion of man's knowledge concerning the gospel of Jesus Christ, the investigator is now prepared for the teaching of the principles of the gospel and the eternal plan of salvation as they affect the individual lives of all men.

Very often the investigator receives a new and satisfying understanding of the fall of man and the atonement of the Savior. He is brought to appreciate the difference between the immortality of the soul and the life hereafter vouchsafed to all men, good or bad, through the intercession of Jesus Christ, our Lord, on the one hand, and on the other individual salvation and exaltation made possible through obedience to the principles of the gospel and the commandments of God.

He is taught the real meaning and application of faith and repentance, and the necessity for baptism by the authorized servants of the Lord, for admission into his kingdom. He is taught the province of the Holy Ghost. He learns of the revelations and statements of the prophets regarding heavenly things which may be known only through our Father's revelations to man. He learns of the pre-existence, before earth life, of the Christ, our Elder Brother, the Firstborn of the Father.

He learns of his pre-determined mission and the terms upon which he was to perform it, and then he comes to understand that man also had a pre-mortal existence, that his spirit is the spirit-child of the Father, and that the purpose of earth life is to give that eternal spirit an opportunity for development and growth and probation in mortality. He learns that the body in which the spirit is tabernacled is in verity a "temple of God," and that it cannot be violated without affront to the Father whose spirit-child dwells within it.

He is made, perhaps for the first time, to appreciate the real significance of clean living. He is taught the principle of free agency, with power vested within himself to determine the course of his life, but he is also taught that the abuse of his God-given liberty will bring reproach and degradation to him.

In this new teaching of God's plans for his children he is given matchless incentive for the development of noble character and high service to his fellow man. He is taught that the revelations set forth with certainty the stations to which men of ambition and ideals may aspire; that there are preferential conditions and places in the hereafter as in this life; and that the reward to the truly faithful will be placement in the highest degree of glory in the presence of the Father and the Son, there to dwell forever in an eternity of progression in knowledge, power, and goodness.

Now, after these teachings and their assimilation by the investigator he is prepared for the call to repentance. He is prepared to review and appraise his life in light of the knowledge he has received. Perhaps never before in his experience has he thought seriously of the need for repentance. Now he knows that all men are called to repentance, not once only, but all during the course of their lives, that as they gain knowledge of the principles and laws of the perfect life, they have need to turn away from frailty, weakness, and imperfection.

He becomes more keenly conscious of the commandments the Lord has given, of their transcendent importance not only to himself, but to the great society of men everywhere. He begins to realize the real significance of God's kingdom in the earth, and in the hearts of men. When he understands the paternity of man, his appreciation of the fraternity and brotherhood of man is enhanced.

And so there arises within the heart of the investigator so led and instructed in the principles of truth a desire—a fervent, burning desire—to avail himself of the high privileges extended to him to ally himself with the kingdom of our Lord. He wishes for the kind of conviction and testimony he has heard and experienced from the missionary.

He sees the happiness, the contentment, and the satisfaction which flow from such testimony. He has been taught, and he now knows that this great happiness may come to him only through humble prayer and study, so he acquires the philosophy of humility. He no longer regards himself as self-sufficient. He depends on the Lord, and his faith assures him his trust will be rewarded.

Of course I have not set forth the experience of every investigator, nor every missionary, in this outline of our procedures. I set forth the opportunities of the plan, and I am pleased to state to you that thousands of truth-loving individuals have been the beneficiaries of it.

There is a feature of this missionary teaching not confined to any one lesson, but running throughout the entire program, which deserves special mention. It is the constant emphasis on the principle that it is the duty and the obligation of all men to seek and know the truth.

"And ye shall know the truth, and

Sunday, October 3

Third Day

the truth shall make you free." (John 8:32.)

"And truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come;

"The Spirit of truth is of God." (D. & C. 93:24, 26.)

Men not only have the privilege, they have also the obligation to study and know the truth. All will come to judgment. The truth is God's law by which all will be judged. They who have the truth have a solemn duty to share it with others. Our missionaries sincerely feel this obligation. They are sensitive to the proprieties involved in visiting the homes of the people. They enter only upon invitation, but they diligently seek opportunities to give their message of truth. I am sure there would be fewer rebuffs, and there are not very many, if their altruistic and generous attitude were more fully understood.

If I but had a way of sending a message to the homes the missionaries visit and the people they contact in their labors, I would appeal to them—all of them—to listen with an open mind, and with a measure of patience. I can assure any who will, that preconceived prejudices will disappear, and appreciation and gratitude will arise for the unselfish, friendly service of these ambassadors of truth.

There is a phase of this teaching process in the missionary effort for which I am extremely grateful. It is this. In this cottage meeting method of teaching the gospel to families and individuals we do not have to have a great body of trained and polished speakers to transmit our message to large congregations. I think generally our missionaries acquit themselves well before audiences, but in this family teaching what they need most is, first, a knowledge of the principles, and secondly, testimony as to their divine origin.

Our missionaries generally work with individuals in an individual capacity. Conversion is an individual matter. There is no such thing as a mass conversion. Many people may have yielded to the impressions of the spirit at one time, but the experience of each is a personal matter between him and his Lord, so I feel that the Lord approves of the individual teaching of the gospel such as we are carrying forward in the missionary service.

Another thing for which I am likewise grateful is that there is substantially no variance or uncertainty in our missionary teaching. It is not necessary that there be long debates or discussions as to interpretations of doctrine. What we teach is the revelations which, for the most part are direct, certain, and unequivocal in their import. If any mysteries seem to arise, we leave the solution of such mysteries for future revelation. The Lord has given us sufficient for this day and time, and for the people who live in the world.

When I read of the discussions, debates, and sometimes controversies, arising among religious leaders and learned men as to the problems and programs for Christian churches, I assure you I am profoundly grateful to be identified with a lofty cause, whose course is so fully and accurately and permanently charted that all you have to do to know the way and perceive the light is to ask and discover what the revelations say and what the priesthood directs. It seems to me that all that should be necessary to guide the course of any Christian cause is a simple declaration of the divine nature of the Christ and his supremacy in the world as the author of divine law which governs in the affairs of men.

So, my brethren and sisters, we send out from the body of the Church not so many as we would like, or as we need, but nevertheless a great army of young men and young women, and some older people, to teach honest people in the world of the re-establishment of our Father's kingdom, and the vital principles of life which have come to us with the revelations of the restored gospel.

We also call to assist these missionaries considerable numbers of those residing in the missions who are willing to devote all or a part of their time to the missionary effort. What wonderful people these missionaries are—unselfish, sincerely interested in their fellows, humble, prayerful, studious, giving their all to their Father in heaven and the promotion of his great cause in the world.

And you, my fellow members of the Church, make their achievements possible. Your homes contribute to the support of the young men and young women, and many older ones, who, with some assistance from the quorums, pursue their labors. These missionaries are constantly in our thoughts. We pray for them, and we bless them, and we have ample proof that the Lord blesses them, recognizes and rewards their service. No inconsiderable part of our time and effort is devoted to the missionary work of the Church.

We are ever seeking ways to improve, and we are pleased today to recognize this organized teaching of the gospel which I have outlined for you as a distinct contribution to the efficacy of missionary effort. Further improvements will undoubtedly come, and the Lord will fulfil his mighty predictions, "For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape; and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated." (D. & C. 1:2.)

There is something else that perhaps all of us can do for the missionaries and the great cause they represent. With the mention of it I shall close. Every one of us as it were furnishes a background for the missionaries' work. If we live and serve so that the missionary in his teaching can point with pride to the application of the gospel principles in our society, we shall be of infinite help in the process of conversion.

The consistency of our living will make an invaluable contribution. The influence of our living will spread far and wide, and will furnish eloquent and effective testimony to the principles we proclaim. By courageously living honorable, righteous lives we are all entitled to be counted members of the incomparable missionary force of the Church of Christ.

For myself, I pray for strength to be a consistent contributor and supporter of the cause which I dearly love. I offer the same prayer for you, my brethren and my sisters. The Lord help us to be exemplars and teachers of the truth which we have. I know we have it. The Lord help us to share it with our fellow men, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency has just spoken to us. This telegram has just come from Bakersfield First Ward, California:

"Brethren, we thank you for the privilege of enjoying Conference with you on television. Sincerely."

What a great blessing, what wonderful inventions are the radio and television when properly used for noble purposes.

This, for example, makes us sense clearly that tens of thousands are sitting with us this morning in worship.

Elder George Q. Morris of the Council of the Twelve, will now address us. He will be followed by Elder Clifford E. Young.

ELDER GEORGE Q. MORRIS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY DEAR brethren and sisters: I thank the Lord for the privilege of being with you this morning and of having fellowship with you in the Church of Jesus Christ, and I thank the Lord for the instructions, the simple, beautiful, convincing gospel instructions that we have received this morning and in all preceding sessions of this conference.

I am wholly dependent upon my Father in heaven and upon your assistance in that he shall lead me to say the things that I should say upon this occasion.

This Church for a century and a quarter has been declaring these truths to the world. The testimonies we have heard, the teachings of the gospel, the purposes of the Lord, have been preached to the world during all this period by men who have been called of God to do so, and the message to the world is and has been that the

Third Day

Church of Jesus Christ now exists in the world, and that prophets and Apostles are directing the affairs of his Church. Indeed, just as the Lord Jesus Christ in leaving the world to ascend to the Father left his Church in the hands of Apostles and prophets and the priesthood of the Church, so in this day he has placed in the hands of Apostles and prophets and the priesthood of his Church, his Church and his gospel, the only true and living Church in the world because it is his Church, and in it alone lies salvation for the human family.

What a glorious message of hope and faith and joy this should be to the distraught world. And it is such to the honest in heart, those who are seeking with all their hearts to know and keep the commandments of God.

When the Lord visited this continent and set up his Church among his people soon after his ascension into the heavens, they were querying after he left them one day, as to what they should name the Church, and when he came the next day to continue his instructions to them, he knew their contentions and queries and said:

And how be it my church save it be called in my name? For if a church be called in Moses' name then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name then it is my church, if so be that it is built upon my gospel. (3 Nephi 27:8.)

What a simple and logical and beautiful explanation of the facts! And that is something to guide us in the midst of all the religious confusion that exists in the world today. The Church of Jesus Christ by his direction bears his name. In this day when it has again been restored, the same instructions came to the Prophet Joseph Smith that this Church should be called the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the "Latter-day Saints" being added to distinguish it from all other dispensations.

The Lord continued in his instructions to the effect that: If the Church has his name and it is built upon his gospel, then it is his Church; and if they would pray to the Father he would hear their prayers, and his works shall be manifest in the Church.

Note the significant qualification added that not only must it have his name, but it must also be based upon his gospel. Then he adds that if churches are built that are based upon the works of men or the works of Satan, then these will have joy in their churches for a period, but the time will come when they will be hewn down and cast into the fire.

The Lord has very clearly set before us in this simple statement a guiding principle: There is one Church of Jesus Christ, bearing his name and preaching his gospel. All other churches are the churches of men, and there can be no salvation in them, and the time will come when they will be destroyed.

When the Prophet Joseph Smith was a youth, he had to come before the whole Christian world and declare to them the principle that there could be only one true church in the world. In his search for the truth he had been logical in his thinking; he wanted to serve God and keep his commandments; and as he viewed the denominations in Christendom, he concluded that all these churches could not be true, that they might all be wrong, but that they could not all be right, and then, as we have had explained to us by previous speakers, he received in the presence of the Father and the Son the latter's words that all the creeds were wrong and that they were an abomination in the sight of God. They were the creeds of men that were not true, and untruth God cannot tolerate.

After a century there has been some change in thought, perhaps the leaven has been at work. There are many Christian leaders in the denominations today who are declaring there can be but one true Church, and they have a most sincere desire to unify the divergent denominations making up the Christian churches of the world. About a month ago they held in the Chicago area a World Council of Churches, desiring if possible to work toward unity. It is interesting to note that this great council of nearly six hundred delegates representing forty-eight countries and about 160 denominations met within the precincts of one of the stakes of the Church of Jesus Christ that has been restored to the earth, and in the general location in our country where Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith became martyrs for their testimony concerning the one true Church, the Church of Jesus Christ, that had been restored.

It is interesting to note that in their desire for unity, many of the church leaders are speaking forthrightly to their people. One prominent speaker expressed this thought that if Jesus Christ should come to the earth today and see the denominations bearing his name, he would say, "If these are Christian churches, then I am not a Christian."

I want to read, not exact quotations, but some expressions here, because I want them to be accurate in representing what others are thinking. One particular Protestant writer in great clearness and sincerity, expresses his belief that the churches should become united, and states these reasons:

That Protestantism is conscious and the demonstrations agree that the true Church exists in the mind of Christ, but that he recognizes none of the denominations as his Church.

That there should be one united Church, that it now exists, but it is hidden by man-made denominational churches.

That the true Church can only come by a dissolution of the denominational churches as churches, which are but an apostate denominational system.

That the way to a united church is for the denominations to abdicate their churchism and the church functions which they have sinfully usurped.

That the desire of many leaders of Christendom is to release the believers of Christ from the Protestant apostasy into which it has been led by the evil spirit of sectarianism.

That in bringing about the united church the errors must be avoided which led Protestantism into the apostasy of sectarianism.

Such are the ideas now current in Protestantism.

Men are not satisfied with the conditions of the denominations in the world. To understand how the apostasy thus described came about, they need to understand the truth that has been referred to here, that there have been various dispensations of the gospel, that there were long periods when it was not on the earth. It should be understood that the Dispensation of the Meridian of Time was but a restoration of the gospel previously taken from the earth and that although that dispensation was glorified by the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ, himself opening it and in it offering his great atonement, yet it was to come to an end. It should also be clearly understood as was explained in this conference, that when the prophets and the Apostles, the very foundation of the Church of Jesus Christ, disappeared, then his Church of necessity disappeared. That dispensation ended. The true Church was again taken from the earth. This being so, then it is clear that men had no way of knowing the will of God, of preserving the true principles of the gospel, of continuing to know the true and living God. The revelations of God were not available to them. It must follow, therefore, that all the churches built up since the Apostles and prophets and the true Church were taken from the earth are churches made by men, and "the power of God unto salvation" could not be in them.

If people could but understand this principle, if our youth could, then they would look for the restored Church of Jesus Christ of the last dispensation which bears his name, is built upon his gospel, and which has in it his authority and power—his Apostles and prophets.

Just for a moment may we glance at what constitutes the setting up of the Church of Christ? Men set up their churches day by day, by private interpretations of the scriptures, but for the Church of Jesus Christ, which can come from God only, to be set up, the heavens must be opened, a dispensation of truth must come. First of all, God ordinarily, with an exception I shall note, appears to a man whom he has selected as his prophet, and reveals himself to him, for a true Church cannot be built on a false faith and a false God. So that it may be known not only what kind of being he is but who he is, he identifies himself as the true and living God. Then he gives this man his authority, the Holy Priesthood; thus he is equipped so that the Lord may direct him step by step to establish the Church in the earth. That was what the Lord did with Abraham who talked with God face to face, and he received the priesthood and the Urim and Thummim. The Lord gave him needful revelations, telling him what to do and where to go, and made covenants with him.

Regarding the Dispensation of the Meridian of Time, the Lord in that instance did not come and choose a prophet, but the Father sent his First-born, whom by divine investiture he had elevated to the Godhead, sharing with him the glory and the honor and the power of his own Fatherhood, he sent him to be his Only Begotten Son in the flesh; so that he came with all this power and authority that was in him. He, the Spirit of light, he from whom the priesthood comes, he from whom revelations come, he himself came as directed by the Father and for thirty-three years lived in the world, revealing himself and revealing through himself God the eternal Father, being in his express image, and taught the principles of the gospel of salvation as directed by the Father, atoned for the sins of the world and instituted the resurrection from the dead.

These are the simple truths as to a restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ and it is the simple truth, that by these means this gospel has again been restored in these last days by the Lord Jesus Christ, the sole source of salvation for the human family, through the Prophet Joseph Smith, who received the Holy Priesthood, followed his instructions, received his revelations and built up again his Church; and thus an open channel of revelation was established, which channel shall never be closed, for this is the Church of the last dispensation and it shall never again be taken from the earth.

I bear humble witness that this channel of communication is now open and that through it our beloved prophet, David O. McKay, receives instructions from God, that this is the Church and kingdom of God, and that in it is the power of God unto salvation, because it is the Church of Jesus Christ. May God touch the hearts of men and women to understand these simple truths, that they may receive this message with gladness and thanksgiving and embrace it for their salvation and exaltation, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder George Q. Morris of the Council of the Twelve.

The Choir and Congregation will now sing "We Thank Thee O God For a Prophet." After the singing, Elder Marion D. Hanks of the First Council of the Seventy will speak to us.

Here is an interesting message just received: Mr. Shirl Kimball, Servicemen's Coordinator in San Diego, reports that the members of the Church recruits at the Marine Corps Depot are receiving by television this conference session, and are grateful for the privilege of receiving it. The facilities for receiving it at the Base were provided by the Commanding Personnel.

The congregation and Choir sang the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

THIS experience makes me feel like a Marine lieutenant friend of mine. He had been in the last war for four years and when he learned they were considering his recall, he sent the board a telegram in which he said: "I desire to remind you that I spent four years in the last war, and I just want you to know I do not want to crowd in ahead of anyone else who wants the experience."

I am grateful for a great many things this morning. I am always grateful to be on these grounds and in this building, for daily association with them has never dimmed their beauty and their memories for me. I am grateful for the lovely flowers which festoon this stand, for many of us learned to love them and what they represent in the islands of the sea; and I am particularly grateful for the blessing of aloha or love which motivated the good people who sent them.

I am especially grateful this morning, for freedom. As a serviceman who had opportunity in an armed conflict to help defend this nation, as a young American, and as a Latter-day Saint, I am as grateful for freedom as my intelligence and capacity to understand it allow me to be.

But as I look at you and consider myself, I think of another kind of freedom which is even more important than that which we here enjoy to assemble and to teach and to worship. This freedom has no relationship to prison walls, or to any other aspect of physical restraint or deprivation. It may, in fact, be employed by one immured in deepest dungeon, penniless and starving and in ill health. On the other hand, it may be absent from one who is not physically restrained, who has an abundance of wealth, health, prominence. I think of the freedom taught by Jesus to certain of the descendants of Abraham many centuries ago. Having taught them of his Father, he gave them another great lesson, in these words, many having believed on him:

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed;

And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

They answered him, [angrily, you see, because they were already free, were they not?] We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?

Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.

And the servant abideth not in the house for ever: but the son abideth ever.

If the son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. (John 8:31-36.)

There is a freedom different from and superior to even that which we enjoy today, to meet, to teach, and to worship. What is it? Is it, as some suppose, the right to do as we please? Do we find this freedom in indulgence, in unrighteousness, in sin? Do we find it in giving loose rein to passion, to emotions, to appetites, to the unrighteous thought or act?

This freedom of which Jesus spoke does not company with unrighteousness nor is it the product of the evil act. This freedom, this freedom which he taught as being most important to mankind, comes to those who in righteousness have faith in God, learn his law, and seek to understand it, and who, obedient to it, and with responsibility, seek to do his will.

There are many among us, and throughout the world, young and old (though perhaps we too often confine the lesson to the young) who have the idea that freedom, the freedom of which we speak, can be found in unlicensed liberty. But this freedom which Jesus taught is not the freedom of irresponsibility or unrighteousness, but the freedom which accompanies obedience.

Is that husband free, for instance, who with disloyalty to his wife and family and with lust in heart, entangles himself in alliances outside his own home? Is that father free who, neglecting his children, turns them away and does not love them and teach them? Is that man free who hates his neighbor, and who will not forgive the trespasses his neighbor has committed against him?

Is that wife and mother free who will not perform the duties of her home with joy in her heart, realizing this to be her great calling? Is that woman free who gives her time to selfish social pursuits of doubtful worth instead of to her neighbor, her community, her Church, her God, in honest service, when there is so much to do?

Is that boy free who trifles with good habits, who cheats a little in school, who will not accept sound counsel and loving parental advice, but who, making his own stubborn way (for he is of the age when he thinks he knows better than they) chooses companions who are on the wrong path, goes about his activities with them, perhaps even stealing from some others the most precious things they enjoy? Is the young girl free who thinks so little of herself that she allows herself to be handled as if she were worth nothing, or who talks with evil tongue about her friends or acquaintances; who will not be counseled, who will not be helpful or humble in the home?

The obvious answer is that these people are not free. True, they have the right to choose, but they violate their agency in choosing that which denies them the very freedom which God would have his children enjoy; for how is this freedom achieved?

Let me quote two or three verses of scripture. In addition to the words of the Lord, telling us that truth makes us free, he said again as recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants, the sacred book of the restoration:

I, the Lord God, make you free, therefore ye are free indeed; and the law also maketh you free. (D. & C. 98:8.)

And He said to us, as John recorded it when he was among men:

Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

Abide in me, and I in you. . . .

. . . for without me ye can do nothing. (John 15:3-5.)

And the Psalmist sang, "And I will walk at liberty: for I seek thy precepts." (Psalms 119:45.)

And again, James:

But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. (James 1:25.)

And finally, and perhaps most importantly, out of the book of II Corinthians this simple statement:

. . . where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. (II Cor. 6:17.)

My humble testimony is that real freedom is not irresponsibility or license, but that real freedom accompanies faith in God, the understanding of his word, and obedience to it. (And each of us, I believe, knows personally the difference between the freedom of faith and obedience, and the bondage of sin.)

God bless us to realize as we seek to learn the marvelous principles of the gospel that he who will not in his heart forgive, he who will not be clean, he who will not seek to know the truths of the Lord as they apply not only to the obedience which is a word, but also to the obedience which is a way of living, is not free.

God bless us that we may have faith, that we may learn his word and live it, in order that we may have his spirit with us, for ". . . where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." (Ibid., 3:17.) In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

I FEEL AS if I had run through a red light!

My brethren and sisters: I join you this beautiful Sabbath morning in expressing gratitude for a testimony of the divinity of this work. As I drove up this morning from my home in Utah County, I could not help feeling grateful that I had a father and a mother who believed. My father, it is his 117th anniversary today, knew the Prophet Joseph, only as a boy, however, but his family knew the Prophet intimately, and they loved him. My father loved him. My mother loved his name. They have instilled in the hearts of us children an appreciation of this great work. They went through times that were rough. Father knew the criticisms that had been heaped against the Prophet, but he knew they were not true, and he knew in very deed that Joseph was all that he pretended to be.

I tried to think this morning, as I was driving along, what I would have thought, had I lived in the little village of Palmyra in 1820, when a young boy was to return to his home and tell his parents of the great manifestation that had come to him. I am wondering what I would have thought, had I even been a brother, as was Hyrum, six years older than the Prophet. Would I have believed him or would I have thought that there was something wrong with the boy? But I am sure if I had come under that parental influence and had felt the faith and warmth of those parents who knew, I, too, would have subscribed to his great message and would have believed.

A mother knows the weakness of her children; she knows those weaknesses before anyone else. She does not parade them, for which we are grateful, but she knows the weaknesses, and Lucy Smith would have known whether or not the Prophet, the boy, was telling the truth. She would have known whether his message was one of truth or one of error, and she did know it and she never wavered throughout her life; neither did the father, who stood loyally and truly by the side of the young Prophet. It was a fantastic message. It was not easy to believe. And I try to picture the Prophet as we picture the Savior as he stood before Pilate, alone; his disciples had left him, even Peter had said that he did not know him when he was pressed by some of the rabble; so Jesus stood alone. In that early day in the history of the Church, the Prophet stood alone, and yet think of this great work today. One and a quarter centuries have passed and here we have the evidence of the leaven that was referred to by Brother Morris, small as it was, leavening the lump; and this message of the restored gospel is spreading throughout the land.

I thought of these things as I drove along, and then I thought of Oliver Cowdery. Oliver Cowdery at one time lost the gift of faith. He was like many of us today! Some little thing had cankered his soul. We sometimes let little things canker our souls, and we lose the great values and blessings that come through faithful service in this Church. Oliver had let little things canker his soul. Phineas Young who was very close to my father's family, and who was a brother-in-law of Oliver Cowdery, labored with Oliver, wrote him letter after letter, telling him never to mind the little things but to remember that the truth had been restored and that he, Oliver, knew it and that he should come back in the Church.

In this very pulpit a number of years ago, Brother Alonzo Hinckley read a letter that Oliver Cowdery had written to Phineas Young, in which he set forth some of his grievances, feeling that he had been injured by some of his friends, and Phineas Young wrote back to him and said, "Never mind all that; suppose there was some grievance. You know the gospel is true; you know your testimony; you know where you belong." Following this, Oliver finally came up to Council Bluffs, and you know the rest of the story. He appeared before the people and then before the high council, and humbly he said to the high council, substantially as follows, "I do not ask to be restored to my former position . . ." the gift of faith had come back in his soul . . . "but all I ask is that I may come back into the Church, because I know it is true."

It is a marvelous testimony, my brothers and sisters. He had been out of the Church ten years. It was nearly twenty years since he had written the Book of Mormon, as it fell from the lips of the Prophet Joseph, as he, Joseph, translated. He could easily have wavered; he could have said, "We were mistaken. It was all a mistake. Joseph made us believe we saw the plates. We imagined we heard a voice, and somehow or another we thought we saw an angel." But he did not say that. He said, "The Book of Mormon is true. It was translated by the gift and power of God. We saw the angel, and we heard his voice as he declared the truthfulness of this sacred record."

So, my brethren and sisters, with a heart full of gratitude and a testimony in my soul of the divinity of this work, I stand before you acknowledging the goodness of God to me, and to my family, for the gift of faith, realizing that no matter what comes in one's life, if the gift of faith is there, one may safely walk without wavering and without complaint. I feel that in my soul today, as I bear you this testimony, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Of the First Council of the Seventy

THE FACT that President McKay, in the beginning of the conference, laid stress upon the auxiliaries of the Church, his statement being followed up by two of the auxiliary groups of our young people singing, gives me license, my brothers and sisters, to speak to a special group. I realize that there are many listening who do not belong to this group, but those to whom I refer have a great deal to do with the destiny of about twenty-five thousand or thirty thousand of our young boys, so I feel justified in addressing them this morning. I refer to the scoutmasters and the Explorer post advisers of the Church. There are about twenty-five hundred of them, in total. In their hands are the weekday activities of our young boys.

First, my brethren, I can address you as brethren I am sure and as a co-laborer of many years standing, I should like to call to your attention the fact that the best teaching is subtle. The declared statements of the Scout oath and the Scout law do not necessarily teach morals, although they help. It is the unspoken thing, the act from a man's heart which really does the teaching. I should like to make three simple illustrations in my own life concerning that, and I shall mention names with no apology.

Looking back to my beginnings as a deacon there was a man who stood out in my life. At the time I was not particularly conscious of it, although even then it seems to me the Lord's Spirit whispered to my spirit that here was one whom I should follow. He was my Uncle Fred. You know him better as Bishop Thomas A. Clawson, who was for so many years bishop of the Eighteenth Ward. He ordained me a deacon. I used to go to priesthood meetings on Monday night with my cousin Cannon Young and my brother Hiram. We would sit in preliminary exercises. Uncle Fred did not say much of anything to us, but each evening, before we were dismissed to go to class, his eye caressed each one of us individually, and those eyes, as they met ours, seemed to say, "Good work, boys. We are glad you are here."

His serene countenance, as he sat there, seemed to be the assurance to me that all was well in Zion so far as I was concerned. It was not words that did it, it was the fact that he was that kind of man. Sometimes, I wish we could have it today as it was in those days when, after the priesthood class was over, we would gather again and let the bishop give his final benediction before we departed for home. I think that was the highlight of my deacon's experience, happy as it was. As we filed back into the old Eighteenth Ward chapel, Uncle Fred's eye again went down the line of his deacons, engaged our eyes, each, as the final song was sung and the final prayer was said. And we often walked home feeling lifted up spiritually. This could not have been given by anyone but a man who lived what he preached without doing any preaching.

As an adolescent youth, there were two men who taught me lessons in the same way without saying anything. I enjoyed a happy athletic career in high school. I tried everything. Willard Ashton, the coach, never did tell me I had to obey any rules of the game, but I just knew that I had to; there was no other way to play it. Why? Because that was the way he played it. He did not talk about it, he did it. During that same period, there was Adam Bennion; I had four happy years under Adam S. Bennion. I cannot recall that he ever mentioned to me in all those years how I ought to conduct myself, but I knew how I should. I knew what he expected without his saying a word. There came a time in our young lives when there was a crisis in our school as against another school, when there had to be honor vindicated. We knew that when the time came Adam Bennion would vindicate our honor; we knew he could do nothing else, because he was that kind of man.

Those are three men, scoutmasters, out of many who without saying words influenced lives.

Now, you work with boys. Let me tell you several subtle things which you can do, if you believe them, or can do them as though you believe them, which will immeasurably increase the work and the happiness and the joy of the boyhood of this Church.

When Sunday morning comes along, Mr. Scoutmaster, will you be found sitting in the class with the deacons, or will you be so anxious about your own salvation that you will be up in the elders' or the seventies' or the high priests' quorum? I advise you to feel the importance of these young men under your care so greatly that when they walk into their class, even though you may not be their adviser in that deacons' quorum, there you will be sitting next to them, letting them see with their eyes that what is in your eyes in the reflection of what is in the teacher's eyes.

I have often thought what effect it must have on a boy to reach out the sacrament plate to his scoutmaster sitting in sacrament meeting. Boys love their scoutmasters, usually, and here sits the scoutmaster where he belongs, and the boy hands him the plate or the cup and smiles at him, and the scoutmaster smiles back. Not a word has been said, but the boy knows what it means to do his duty to God. He does not have to put his hand up and say it, he just knows it.

Do you scoutmasters realize that every time you pass a grove of trees in your hiking programs and in your camping out, that it is possible for your boys to duplicate in a measure the experience of the Prophet Joseph? What a lovely thing it would be if a scoutmaster could subtly teach a boy that whenever he came into a grove or passed a grove, if he cared to go in there and kneel down and offer a prayer to his Father, perhaps the Father would hear the prayer. He might not show Himself to him, but he would reveal Himself to him by a method which we have been told is sure, by the Holy Ghost.

The forests of our land, where God might influence boys are not confined to New York state, my brothers and sisters and fellow scoutmasters. They are here and around us.

I have been a Scout executive a long time, but I cannot recall many occasions that I have heard a scoutmaster bear his witness at a campfire that Jesus is the Christ. I have been guilty of that myself. Could I do it over again, I would use many more occasions before the last embers died, to stand there and tell my boys of the living Christ and of the goodness of him in these days to reveal himself to the boy Prophet.

What can teach observance of the Sabbath day more effectively than the quiet ways of the leader as he guides his boys in the breaking of camp on Saturday evening. As he lets them out of the car at each home his cheery, "See you tomorrow in priesthood meeting" is a powerful sermon. Conversely the noise of wheels turning against the pavement on Sunday is louder than any words of advice.

And finally, I would be remiss indeed if I did not teach them to talk to their Father in heaven. Campfire programs and camping out programs and hikes and trips, when boys are away from home, put them on their own as to whether they shall talk to their Father or not. They can do it individually, as I have suggested, in groves, but they must do it collectively at times. I should like to ask you one favor. There has been given to the Boy Scout organizations, I think righteously enough, a pattern of prayer which is used throughout scouting, and which, while all right for the boys of other faiths, does not belong in our groups. I can repeat it in about ten words; it is very short. I say it with all reverence both toward the Lord and respect toward the men who think it is a good prayer: "May the great Scoutmaster of all good Scouts be with us until we meet again," they say, and then they dismiss the boys to go to bed.

Sunday, October 3

Third Day

My fellow Scout leaders, at your campfires and in your dismissals, teach your boys that the Lord is not a great Scoutmaster. He is our God. When you pray to him and when they pray to him, address him as he suggested himself. Let them say, "Our Father, which art in heaven," asking for the favors of the night, for the protecting care, for love and peace at home, and for all things concerning which they should inquire. Then let them always close it by saying, "In the name of Jesus Christ," thus bearing their witness that they believe in his holy name. That is the kind of prayer we ought to have our Latter-day Saint Scouts say. For its kind, I have no objection to the other, but we have our kind which is better. It makes boys vocally free and can be given inspirationally to fit many occasions.

My testimony is that God lives, and that he who sits on this stand, presiding, is his prophet and his servant. I would that all the boys in our care will develop the same testimony with the help of their leaders, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

SINCE the day that the Angel Moroni gave the gold plates to the Prophet Joseph Smith from which he translated and published the Book of Mormon, vast amounts of marvelous evidences have accumulated. These evidences sustain the divine authenticity and truthfulness of that holy ancient record.

Also, during the same period of time, enemies of truth and light have done everything within their power to oppose the Book of Mormon, trying to prove that its claims are false. Some of these men, no doubt, were merely misled; but the majority of them did what they did with evil intent. The result has been that all of their works have come to naught. The evil results of their efforts have vanished as the dew on earth's verdure vanishes in the presence of the rising sun. Thus, the Book of Mormon stands today in higher repute than ever before in the history of the Church. None of its claims have been proven to be false. On the other hand, a vast accumulation of evidences—some of which speak as it were from the dust and others from the ancient past—continue to bear witness to the divinity of this sacred book and to its truthfulness.

Beyond a shadow of doubt, the Book of Mormon is the word of God, a divine and sacred book, preserved by the Lord and his holy angels to come forth in the latter days as a new witness to Jesus Christ and the gospel which he proclaimed.

I shall point out some of the astounding Book of Mormon evidences, listing them under three major headings: first—archaeological evidences; second—testimonies of sixteenth century Indian historians; and third—writings of Catholic padres of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, which writers secured their information firsthand from the Indians.

American archaeology had its birth shortly before the death of the Prophet Joseph Smith. John Lloyd Stephens had visited Guatemala, Honduras, and Yucatan, had come back to the United States, and had written a glowing report of the beautiful temples, pyramids, and other archaeological remains which dotted the jungles of Central America and Mexico.<sup>1</sup> From the time of the publishing of Stephens' books forward, the governments of Mexico, Central America, and portions of South America, as well as archaeological organizations from the United States and her neighbors to the south, have spent vast amounts of money, and have exerted an untold amount of effort at numerous of these archaeological sites. Also, considerable work has been done in reconstructing the ancient buildings. In reconstructing these marvelous pyramids, temples, and other archaeological ruins, the archaeologists and their helpers have placed the stones as far as possible back as they were when the ancient Americans first erected the buildings. The result is that today the country from north of Mexico City southward to Chile is literally dotted with numerous archaeological sites, many of which have been excavated by archaeologists.

Before proceeding further, I desire to point out, definitely, that the majority of the archaeological ruins that have been excavated postdate Book of Mormon times, and some of them were originally erected several hundred years following the close of Nephite history. Then you may ask, "What evidence do these ancient ruins give to sustain the Book of Mormon?"

I shall answer as follows: The Book of Mormon claims that great civilizations lived in ancient America. In fact, that sacred record points out that three separate peoples came to America in ancient times and established their civilizations. These peoples were known as Jaredites, Nephites, and Mulekites. The best archaeologists at the present time claim that many of the archaeological remains that have been excavated were built over earlier temples, pyramids, and other buildings, connoting earlier civilizations; and in many respects these earlier peoples were more highly developed, or more civilized, than were the people who erected the buildings of the archaeological remains that are now extant; for example, Miguel Covarrubias, speaking the views of the Mexican archaeologists, places the La Venta site within the period of 200 B. C. to 300 A. D. To quote from this writer:

Everywhere there are archaeological treasures that lie hidden in the jungles and under the rich soil of southern Vera Cruz, burial mounds and pyramids, masterfully carved colossal monuments of basalt, splendid statuettes of precious jade, and sensitively modeled figurines of clay, all of an unprecedented, high artistic quality. The tantalizing presence of a great and remote past in what is now uninhabited, impenetrable jungle is all the more puzzling because archaeologists now agree that many of these artistic masterpieces date back to the beginnings of the Christian era. Appearing suddenly out of nowhere in a state of full development, they constitute a culture that seems to have been the root, the mother culture, from which the latter and better-known (Maya, Totonac, Zapotec, etc.) cultures sprang.

This oldest of native American high cultures is also the newest, since it was "discovered" only a few years ago and still awaits exhaustive scientific study.<sup>2</sup>

Latter-day Saints know that the three oldest "native American high cultures" were the Jaredite, Nephite, and Mulekite cultures, the latter two fitting well within the La Venta period.

The La Venta archaeological site, located near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, was excavated by Dr. Matthew W. Stirling in 1939-1940. He is credited with dating this culture from 450 B.C. to 600 A. D.<sup>3</sup> He made an archaeological find there of great importance, a carving of a statue of a man which reminds one of the usual portrayal of "Uncle Sam."<sup>4</sup> This figure had a full flowing beard and an aquiline nose, constituting a good representation of a Hebrew priest. Covarrubias described the figure as one representing a person having "... surprising pronounced Semitic features."<sup>5</sup> Stirling points out that the figure is depicted as wearing "... shoes with odd, pointed, upturned toes."<sup>6</sup> Neither the shoes nor the face and flowing beard of "Uncle Sam" could have been a representation of a red-skinned Indian;<sup>7</sup> but, as stated, it strongly resembles a Jewish priest of pre-Christian times.

Dr. Stirling also found in southwestern Mexico at Izapa a stone covered with carvings which have been interpreted by Dr. M. Wells Jakeman of Brigham Young University as a representation of Lehi's dream of the "Tree of Life," recorded in 1 Nephi 8:1-38. To quote Dr. Jakeman:

... the resemblance of this sculpture to the Book of Mormon account cannot be accidental. . . . It practically establishes . . . an historical connection . . . between the ancient Central American priests responsible for the sculpture and the Lehi people of the Book of Mormon! Indeed, the accurate and detailed knowledge of Lehi's vision . . . displayed by these priests in this sculpture, can be explained only by their identification as an actual group of the Lehi people.<sup>8</sup>

Of special interest to Latter-day Saints is the temple of Quetzalcoatl, located at Teotihuacán, north of Mexico City. This temple is decorated with serpents' heads, surrounded with quetzal feathers. Quetzal is the name of a beautiful bird with resplendent long, green feathers, found mainly in Guatemala and Honduras.<sup>9</sup> Coatl is the ancient Mexican word for serpent.<sup>10</sup>

The Book of Mormon gives a beautiful account of Christ's appearance to the Nephites following his crucifixion and resurrection.<sup>11</sup> To them he gave the true gospel plan of salvation, and the people lived in almost perfect righteousness for over two hundred years. Certainly Christ's visit constituted one of the greatest events, if not the greatest, that transpired in ancient America.

Following the apostasy of the Nephites and the Lamanites from the true religion of the Master and the extermination of the Nephite civilization (about 400 A. D.), the Lamanites or Indians retained in their traditions a memory of the appearance of the resurrected Savior to their forefathers. This white-bearded God, according to one tradition, came to the people through the air, and as he descended to earth the sunrays sparkled on his beautiful white body and clothing. The quetzal bird as it flew through the air reminded the people of the glorious beauty and radiant splendor of the white-bearded God who had appeared to their ancestors; and so they added a pagan touch to that memorable event by selecting the most beautiful and highly prized bird of the New World, the quetzal, as a symbol of the white God, or Jesus Christ. Also, coatl, or serpent, was an ancient symbol of Israel's Anointed One. Thus, the Indians commemorated their white-bearded God with the symbol of "Quetzal-bird serpent" or Quetzalcoatl.<sup>12</sup>

Traditions existed among practically every American Indian tribe, especially the more civilized peoples of Peru, Central America, Guatemala, Yucatan, and Mexico, to the effect that their ancestors were visited by a white-bearded God, who gave them their culture, their civilization, and their religion, and who promised that someday he would return to their descendants. These traditions account for the easy conquest of Mexico and Peru; but, more important, they all bear witness to Christ's appearance to the ancient Americans, as accounted in the Book of Mormon.

Also, of special interest to members of the Church of Jesus Christ are the beautiful and famous archaeological ruins in Yucatan, especially those at Chichén Itzá, Uxmal, and Kabah. The massive pyramids, temples, and other important structures were erected during the tenth century A.D., constituting the workmanship of the New Mayan Empire. Those Mayas of Yucatan, as had the Toltecs of Teotihuacán, worshiped the white-bearded God, whom they called Kukulcan. They carved motifs to Kukulcan on their buildings similar to those at Teotihuacán and at other Mexican sites, i.e., the plumed serpent.<sup>13</sup> In fact, the plumed serpent is extensively used in decorating all of their buildings.

Also, the Mayas decorated their buildings with another motif or symbol—that of a bearded white man wearing quetzal feathers. The latter carvings represented priests of Kukulcan (Quetzalcoatl), or probably Kukulcan himself. They are definitely not of Indian type but are of Hebraic type. To quote Theodore Arthur Willard:

An interesting sidelight . . . is the distinctly Semitic cast of countenance of some of the ancient sculptures and murals found at Chichen Itza and in other old Maya cities. The dignity of face and serene poise of those carved or painted likenesses is strikingly Hebraic.<sup>14</sup>

The marvelous archaeological finds at Palenque in the Usumacinta Valley—especially the cross and the Egyptian-type burials, the famous ruins of the Old Mayan Empire in Honduras and Guatemala—especially those at Copan, Uaxactún, and Quiriguá, all bear testimony to the Book of Mormon's claims that high civilizations lived in ancient America. The late Dr. Sylvanus G. Morley maintained that the Maya history had its beginning as early as 300 B. C.<sup>15</sup> and that pre-Maya history extends back to about 3000 B.C.<sup>16</sup> The former date would reach in the earlier part of Nephite history, and the latter would extend to the beginnings of Jaredite history.

When one considers all of the wonderful archaeological remains in Mexico, Honduras, Guatemala, and Central America, and those of South America, one comes to the conclusion that those of the northern hemisphere do not surpass the marvelous archaeological ruins found in Peru, Ecuador, Bolivia, and Colombia. Numerous buildings have been excavated and some of them reconstructed. Thousands of graves have been opened and from them have been taken the most beautiful and artistic workings in gold, silver, copper, and precious stones of various kinds.<sup>17</sup> Also, from those graves have been taken the most finely woven, beautiful laces, the most gorgeous wool and cotton cloths, and "fine-twined linen." In fact, various archaeologists maintain that the world has known no races of people who surpassed the predecessors of the Inca civilization in these various handicrafts. Some of them maintain that the earliest South American civilization dates as far back as 3000 B.C.;<sup>18</sup> for example, A. Hyatt Verrill states:

Despite the high attainment in art, engineering, astronomy and government which were reached by the Aztecs, the Incas, the Mayas and others, in a way these unknown, forgotten races of South America were more remarkable, and were unquestionably far more ancient. From the Chibcha district in Colombia to northern Chile, numerous races rose to a civilized state, vanished and were forgotten centuries before the first Montezuma or the first Inca saw the light of day.<sup>19</sup>

As a general rule, when we find a race excelling in some one art or occupation we find the people deficient in some other art or industry, but the Chimus appear to have been masters of all trades. Their textiles, especially their laces, were marvelous examples of weaving, and their mosaic and mother-of-pearl work was exquisite. Many specimens of these are truly wonderful examples of this highly developed art. There are vases, cups, ceremonial utensils, ear plugs, breastplates, wooden utensils, objects made of clay and of bone that are highly and most artistically embellished with mosaic inlay of mother-of-pearl, the red Spondylus shell, colored stone and precious metals. Many of their robes and ponchos of magnificent textiles are completely covered with ornaments of gold, silver, mother-of-pearl and sections of bright colored sea shells arranged in charming patterns so as to give the effect of a mosaic cloth.

They were also highly skilled wood carvers and there is scarcely a wooden object that is not handsomely carved. . . . They had developed a unique method of weaving feathers into cloth thus producing feather robes, tunics, head coverings, etc., that are gorgeous in color and design. . . .

Even in their ordinary metal work the Chimus exhibited the greatest skill and a most artistic taste. Metals were cast, embossed, etched, engraved, pressed, hammered, spun or built up into innumerable forms by welding and soldering. In fact every means of working metals known to modern artisans was employed by the Chimus.<sup>20</sup>

It is to be recalled that the Book of Mormon history is confined to the period between the building of the Tower of Babel and 421 A. D., the period during which the ancient Americans made their greatest achievements in the various handicrafts as described by Mr. Verrill. Also, we should recall that the Book of Mormon made such claims as follows:

[The Jaredites had] . . . all manner of fruit, and of grain, and of silks, and of fine linen, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious things.<sup>21</sup>

[The Nephites and Mulekites also had an abundance] . . . of all things whatsoever they stood in need—and abundance . . . of gold, and of silver, and of precious things, and abundance of silk and fine-twined linen, and all manner of good homely cloth.<sup>22</sup>

Again we read:

And behold, there was all manner of gold in both these lands, and of silver, and of precious ore of every kind; and there were also curious workmen, who did work all kinds of ore and did refine it; and thus they did become rich.

Behold their women did toil and spin, and did make all manner of cloth, of fine-twined linen and cloth of every kind, to clothe their nakedness.<sup>23</sup>

Certainly all of these archaeological remains fit well with the Book of Mormon claims regarding the Jaredite, Nephite, and Mulekite civilizations; thus archaeology speaks as it were from the dust, verifying the Book of Mormon to be true—to be the word of God.

The second evidences verifying the Book of Mormon which I shall discuss are the writings of the sixteenth century Indian historians. When the Spanish conquistadores and the Catholic padres were conquering Mexico and Yucatan, they found that the Indians had many books—large libraries. Many of the Indians knew how to read and write and were more civilized than were their conquerors from Europe. In order to destroy as far as possible the natives' civilization and do away with what the Catholic fathers termed "the Indians' wicked paganism," the Catholic padres burned all of the books that they could find, completely destroying the libraries. This terrible act of vandalism resulted in a terrific loss to our understanding of the history of the Indians and their ancestors.

It was fortunate, however, that three or four excellent manuscripts written by Indian historians during the first century of their contact with the Spaniards escaped the ruthless destruction. These writings have been translated into English during the past several years.

One of these important writings was produced in 1554, in the Quiché-Maya Indian language of Guatemala, and " . . . signed by the kings and dignitaries of the Quiché court."<sup>24</sup> It is known as the Title of the Lords of Totonicapán. At the request of the Quiché Indians, Dionisio José Chonay, a Catholic priest, translated the document from the Quiché language into Spanish in 1834. It was first translated into English by Delia Goetz and published in 1953. However, Dr. M. Wells Jakeman published in English extracts from the Spanish version in 1945, this being the first time that any of this work had appeared in English. The Totonicapán claims that the ancestors of the Quiché-Mayas

. . . came from the other part of the ocean, from where the sun rises, a place called Pa Tulán, Pa Civan [meaning Bountiful] . . . and they came from where the sun rises, descendants of Israel, of the same language and the same customs . . . they were sons of Abraham and Jacob.<sup>25</sup>

And then the authors of Totonicapán close their account as follows:

Now on the twenty-eighth of September of 1554 we sign this attestation in which we have written that which by tradition our ancestors told us, who came from the other part of the sea, from Civan-Tulan, bordering on Babylonia.<sup>26</sup>

These statements are all in perfect agreement with the claims made in the Book of Mormon.<sup>27</sup> We should recall that Nephi and his brethren built their ship at a place which they named Bountiful which was located on the southeastern shores of Arabia or "bordering on Babylonia"; and from that place they set sail for America.<sup>28</sup>

The Totonicapán also claims that God gave to their original prophet-leader a peculiar instrument, called Giron-Gagal, through the power of which the people were guided to their new home.<sup>29</sup> One is reminded of the Liahona which was given by the Lord to Father Lehi.<sup>30</sup>

Another Quiché-Maya book, the Popol Vuh, much more detailed than Totonicapán, was written between 1554 and 1558 A. D. In its present printed form, it is a book containing over two hundred pages. It might be termed the Lamanite account of their history and religion, as the Book of Mormon is the Nephite account. Regarding this book, Brasseur de Bourbourg wrote:

The Popol Vuh appears to have been written, in part, from memory, following ancient originals, and in part, copied from the sacred books of the Quiches, . . . This manuscript . . . is written in a Quiché of great elegance, and the author must have been one of the princes of the royal family, who composed it a few years after the arrival of the Spaniards, when all of their ancient books were disappearing.<sup>31</sup>

The Popol Vuh was first translated into English by Delia Goetz and Sylvanus G. Morley and published in 1950.

beautiful and complete account found in the Book of Mormon.

A third book written by the Indians of Guatemala, The Annals of the Cakchiquels, also bears witness to the teachings of the Book of Mormon. The writers, the Cakchiquel Indians, were a branch of the Quiché-Mayas. I shall quote from this writing:

I shall write the stories of our first fathers and grandfathers, . . . that from the other side of the sea we came to the place called Tulan [Bountiful], . . .

Thus, then we were four families who arrived at Tulan, we the Cakchiquel people, oh, our sons! so they told us.<sup>38</sup>

The greatest book of the Indian writings of the sixteenth century is the Works of Ixtlilxochitl, written about 1600 A. D. by an Aztec prince named Ixtlilxochitl who lived near the City of Mexico.<sup>39</sup> This Indian writer claimed that ancient America was settled by three distinctive groups of people. The first settlers, termed the Ancient Ones, the Giants, or the First Tultecs, he claimed came from the Tower of Babel at the time of the confounding of tongues. They came to this land across the sea from the East. Many details of their history are given by Ixtlilxochitl which correspond closely to the Jaredite history in the Book of Ether.

The second group of settlers Ixtlilxochitl called the Tultecs. His account of these people, although much briefer, corresponds very closely to the account given in the Book of Mormon of the Nephites, event after event agreeing in the principal points. He even tells of the last great wars between the two people with dates almost identical with those recorded in the Book of Mormon.

The third people, whom Ixtlilxochitl called Olmecs and who are identified as the Mulekites, exterminated the last of the first colonizers. This event reminds one of Coriantumr, the last Jaredite, who lived for nine months with the Mulekites before his death. Ixtlilxochitl even tells of the merging together of the Tultecs and Olmecs (Nephites and Mulekites) and of the dominance of the Tultecs' culture, which is in complete agreement with the Book of Mormon account.

Throughout the entire Works of Ixtlilxochitl, point after point, both in history and doctrine, are reasonably comparable to the historical events and teachings of the Book of Mormon. Merely for the purpose of illustration, I shall give one quotation from Ixtlilxochitl. He tells of the terrific destruction that took place at the time of Christ's crucifixion, as follows:

It was 166 years since they had adjusted their years and times with the equinox, and 270 since the Ancient Ones had been destroyed, when the sun and the moon eclipsed, and the earth trembled, and the rocks broke, and many other things and signs took place. . . . This happened in the year of ce Calli, which, adjusting this count with ours, comes to be at the same time when Christ our Lord suffered, and they say it happened during the first days of the year.<sup>40</sup>

We recall that in 3 Nephi it is written:

And it came to pass in the thirty and fourth year, in the first month, on the fourth day of the month, there arose a great storm, such an one as never had been known in all the land.<sup>41</sup>

And then the Book of Mormon account continues with a description of the terrific destruction that took place while Christ hanged on the cross and the intense darkness which prevailed for three days while the Master's body lay in the tomb. Observe that the Book of Mormon gives the time of this event as the first month of the year and the fourth day of the month and during the period of Christ's crucifixion while Ixtlilxochitl states ". . . at the same time when Christ our Lord suffered, . . . during the first days of the year." There is no way under heaven whereby this Indian could have known such facts except through direct revelation from the Lord or from records which were in his possession. He claimed the latter.

Some authors are prone to discredit the writings of Ixtlilxochitl and the other Indian historians on the grounds that they could have been influenced by the Spanish Catholic priests. It is a fact of great significance, however, that these Indian writers recorded numerous historical facts, as well as items pertaining to the social and religious teachings and customs of their ancestors, of which the Catholic padres could have had no knowledge save only through possessing the Book of Mormon or comparable records. Such writings of the Catholic priests did not have; but the Indians did possess records and traditions of their ancestors, which resulted in their writings comparing so favorably with the Book of Mormon.

The third item I suggested that I would discuss is the writings of the sixteenth century Catholic missionaries who got their information directly from the Indians.

One of the most important of these writers was Bernardino de Sahagun. He lived in Mexico from 1529 to 1590 A. D. and produced his scholarly work in Aztec in the latter part of the sixteenth century.<sup>42</sup> It is one of the most reliable and comprehensive reports concerning the ancients of Middle America. It was first published in Spanish in 1829, and since then portions of it have been published in English. Sahagun states:

Concerning the origin of these peoples, the report the old men [of central Mexico] give is that they came by sea . . . in some wooden boats. . . . But it is conjectured by a report found among all these natives that they came from seven caves, and that these seven caves are the seven ships or galleys in which the first settlers of this land came. . . .

The people first . . . came coasting along the coast disembarking in the port of Panuco, which they called Panco, which means "place where those arrived who crossed the water." This people came in search of the terrestrial paradise, and they had as a family name Tamoanchan, which means "we are looking for our home."<sup>43</sup>

Recall the Jaredite history which tells that the forefathers crossed the ocean in eight barges in search of ". . . the land of promise, which was choice above all other lands of the earth."<sup>44</sup> Sahagun's writings give numerous proofs which sustain the teachings and history of the Book of Mormon, but time will not permit giving more of them here.

Bishop Bartholomé de Las Casas, a prominent Catholic missionary, writing in 1552-1553, said of the Indians of Guatemala that ... they had among them information of the flood and of the end of the world, ... and so they believe that another Butic is about to come which is another flood and judgment, not of water, but of fire which they say will be the end of the world. ...<sup>45</sup>

Las Casas found an abundance of teachings among the Indians which resembled Christian doctrine, and so he concluded that the devil had arrived in America ahead of the Christians and implanted in the minds and hearts of the natives many teachings closely akin to Christianity.<sup>46</sup> Since the Book of Mormon peoples had a thorough knowledge of the gospel, some of the divine truths would naturally be handed down from age to age, probably in altered forms.

Diego de Landa, a prominent Spanish missionary in Yucatan, writing in about 1556, says that, according to the Mayas, "... the world was destroyed by a deluge."<sup>47</sup> He also stated:

Some of the older people of Yucatan say that they have heard from their ancestors that this land was occupied by a race of people who came from the East and whom God had delivered. ... If this were true, it necessarily follows that all the inhabitants of the Indies are descendants of the Jews.<sup>48</sup>

Juan de Torquemada, a Spanish missionary in Mexico whose book was first published in Spain in 1613 A. D., declared that "... the ancients ... put [i.e., wrote or inscribed] many things in two columns, one of metal, and another of brick or stone."<sup>49</sup> It should be recalled that the Nephites inscribed their history on metal plates.

Harold Gladwin quotes Torquemada's description of the clothing worn by the Olmecs and then comments that the description of the garb reminds one "... of the robes of Biblical times in Palestine."<sup>50</sup>

I have given some strong evidence from archaeology, from Indian historians of the sixteenth century, and from Catholic padres of the sixteenth century, which all corroborates the claims made by the Book of Mormon; however, the greatest testimony we have of the Book of Mormon is the book itself, especially Moroni's testimony and admonition, which reads as follows:

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost.<sup>51</sup>

Thousands of Latter-day Saints have put that exhortation to the test and know as they know that they are alive that the Book of Mormon is true. When I was a child and first heard the stories of the Book of Mormon, the Holy Ghost touched my heart and bore a sweet witness to it of the divine authenticity of that ancient record. I knew then as I knew that I was alive that the Book of Mormon is true, is divine, is a sacred record of the inhabitants of ancient America. As I grew older, I read the book many times, and each time the same sweet testimony came into my heart, sometimes coming so forcefully that I was filled with emotion to the extent that tears ran down my cheeks. As I read the Book of Mormon now, the Holy Ghost still bears testimony to me that it is the word of God.

I know that the Book of Mormon is one of the greatest books in the world. It contains the gospel of Jesus Christ to the Jews and to the Gentiles. It is a new witness to Christ and the great work which he performed. I challenge any honest man or woman in the world to put Moroni's exhortation to the test; and I promise that if it is done with real intent, having a true desire to receive a testimony, and having faith in Christ, God will reveal through the Holy Ghost a testimony of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon to each one.

May God bless the honest in heart throughout the entire world that they will study the Book of Mormon and receive a testimony; and may he bless the members of the Church that we will study this sacred book and live in accordance with its teachings, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Those interesting facts regarding the Book of Mormon, were given by Elder Milton R. Hunter, of the First Council of Seventy.

I hold in my hand, twenty-seven telegrams received from grateful groups who have been worshipping with us during this hour. Time will not permit reading them, but they come from presidencies of stakes, bishoprics of wards, and some from private individuals in Arizona, California, Oregon, Washington. One I shall read, for the comfort of mothers whose sons are at Fort Ord, as I read the one from San Diego:

"Servicemen at Fort Ord express gratitude for conference being aired over KRON-TV. Over five hundred servicemen are assembled in the post chapel and enjoying Sunday morning session. Reception excellent. Faithfully Chaplain Ben F. Mortenson."

The closing song will be by the Tabernacle Choir: "Worthy is the Lamb that Was Slain," from "The Messiah," conducted by Elder Cornwall, and the closing prayer will be offered by Elder Ernest A. Nelson, formerly President of the Hawaiian Mission.

I am sure those members from Hawaii whom I see in the audience, will feel at home with these lovely flowers and with the invocation by President Clissold and the benediction by President Nelson. We have a touch of Hawaii this morning.

Following the benediction this Conference will be adjourned until two o'clock.

It is evident that President Hunter omitted some vital items. This is to authorize him to include them in the Conference pamphlet when his sermon is printed.

The Tabernacle Choir sang, "Worthy Is the Lamb," after which Elder Ernest A. Nelson, formerly President of the Hawaii Mission offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

THIRD DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 2 o'clock P.M., Sunday, October 3.

Again the Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, as were also the Assembly Hall south of the Tabernacle, and the Barratt Hall, and again great numbers assembled on the Tabernacle grounds, where they listened to the services by means of amplifiers that had been installed. Again untold numbers listened to the services as they were broadcast by television and radio.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the choral music for this session, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

Members of the Church are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah, in the concluding and seventh session of the One Hundred Twenty-Fifth Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. For those who are unable to enter the building we announce, as heretofore, that these services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall, in Barratt Hall, over the public address system, and by television; also that these services are being televised over KSL-TV, and are being heard by radio through KSL over 16 radio stations in Utah, California, Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Colorado, and Arizona, the names of which stations have already been announced, and in appreciation of the services these stations are rendering, we have since I reported this morning, 25 or 30 other telegrams, coming from people who express gratitude for the opportunity they have of worshipping with you. There is a note here that the total potential radio audience listening to the services of this General Conference is 7,223,240.

The music for this season will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ. We shall begin by the Choir singing, "Let All Mortal Flesh Keep Silence."

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Clarence F. Johnson, formerly president of the Swedish Mission.

As the opening musical number, the Choir sang the anthem, "Let All Mortal Flesh Keep Silence."

Elder Clarence F. Johnson, formerly

President of the Swedish Mission, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Clarence F. Johnson, formerly president of the Swedish Mission, has just offered the invocation.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "His Yoke Is Easy," from the Messiah, conducted by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, and Dr. Schreiner at the organ.

The Choir sang the anthem, "His Yoke Is Easy."

President David O. McKay:

President Clark of the First Presidency will now present the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church, for the sustaining vote of this General Conference, after which we shall hear from Elder Ezra Taft Benson.

SUSTAINING OF THE GENERAL AUTHORITIES OF THE CHURCH

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

My brethren and sisters, this is not a pro forma proceeding. We meet as a constituent assembly. You represent the entire Church, and when, in an affirmative vote, you raise your hand to sustain the Authorities, you make a covenant to that effect with the Lord.

This, of course, applies to those listening in. I beseech you regard this as a most important ceremony.

President Clark then presented for the vote of the people the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church as follows, and they were unanimously sustained by those present.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

David O. McKay, Prophet, Seer and Revelator, and President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

(President McKay's name was presented and all present voted in the affirmative. President Clark overlooked asking for a negative vote, and upon being reminded by President McKay that he should do so, he made the following comment: "Excuse me, I did not see anything but all upraised hands. (Laughter) If anybody wants to vote negative, now is your opportunity. President George Albert Smith, on a similar occasion, said, 'All who want to vote negatively, raise the left hand.'")

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters and friends: I deem this a signal honor, a truly great privilege, but a sobering responsibility. I pray for the inspiration of heaven and for an interest in your faith and prayers. My heart is full to overflowing with gratitude for the blessings which we enjoy and which are mine. I thank God that in his infinite wisdom he has seen fit to call these great conferences of the Church. No one, I am sure, has benefited more richly from these conferences than I have. I have literally received a spiritual uplift, for which I am most grateful to my heavenly Father.

In addition to attending the conference, I have had the glorious privilege of spending an hour or so in meditation in the temple of God to the east of us. I humbly acknowledge the sustaining power of my heavenly Father throughout my entire life, for which I am most grateful, and particularly for his sustaining power during the last twenty months.

I am grateful for the faith, the love, and the confidence of my associates in the General Authorities; for the support of my wife and family; for the prayers and the support of the Saints of Zion, as well as the millions of good people outside the Church. I know I shall never be able to express adequately the gratitude I feel for those who have so loyally and so helpfully sustained and supported me with their love, confidence, and prayers.

I am very grateful I have received a witness from the Almighty that at the present time, at least, I am serving where he wishes me to serve. I have never had any doubts of that fact since that early morning hour when I met our great leader, my beloved associate, President David O. McKay, on the parking lot of the Church Office Building, and he made the statement to me, "My mind is clear. I know what the Lord wants you to do."

So, my brethren and sisters, I am happy in the assignment which is mine. My one fear, and my one anxiety is that I may inadvertently sometime do something or say something that will cast an unfavorable light or bring discredit upon the Church and kingdom of God and the people whom I love so dearly, and upon this great nation which we all love. I pray that this may never happen.

I love this nation of which we are a part. To me it is not just another nation, not just a member of a family of nations. It is a great and glorious nation with a divine mission and it has been brought into being under the inspiration of heaven. It is truly a land choice above all others. I thank God for the knowledge which we have regarding the prophetic history and the prophetic future of this great land of America.

When I contemplate the great events that have transpired here, going way back to the days when our first parents were placed in the Garden of Eden, and recall that this garden was here in America, that it was here also where Adam met with a body of great high priests at Adam-ondi-Ahman shortly before his death and gave them his final blessing, and that to that same spot he is to return again to meet with the leaders of his people, his children—when I contemplate, my brethren and sisters, that here in this land will be established the New Jerusalem, that here in this land will Zion be built—when I contemplate that prophets of God anciently served here in this land, and that the resurrected Christ appeared unto them—and when I contemplate that the greatest of all visions, the coming of God the Father, and the Son to the boy Prophet in our day took place in this land, my heart fills with gratitude that I am privileged to live here, and that I have the honor and pleasure of not only serving in the Church, but also of serving in the government of this great land. I consider it an honor and privilege.

I am grateful for the Founding Fathers of this land and for the freedom they have vouchsafed to us. I am grateful that they recognized, as great leaders of this nation have always recognized, that the freedom which we enjoy did not originate with the Founding Fathers; that this glorious principle, this great boon of freedom and respect for the dignity of man, came as a gift from the Creator. The Founding Fathers, it is true, with superb genius welded together the safeguards of these freedoms. It was necessary, however, for them to turn to the scriptures, to religion, in order to have this great experiment make sense to them. And so our freedom is God-given. It antedates the Founding Fathers.

I am grateful, too, my brethren and sisters, that they saw fit to state, among other things, that “we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights”—rights which cannot be conferred by any man or nation, rights which only the God of heaven can bestow—“that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.” As Brother Thomas E. McKay said, “not happiness, but the opportunity to pursue and earn happiness.”

When the God of heaven said to one of his ancient prophets, “. . . men are, that they might have joy,” (2 Ne. 2:25) he also implied that men should have free agency. They might have joy if through their efforts and the wise exercise of their free agency they lived to merit that joy.

You will recall that through Moses the Lord said that Satan was cast out of the great council in heaven because he “. . . sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him.” (Moses 4:3.) There is the source of free agency—“. . . which I, the Lord God, had given him.”

I have rejoiced, my brethren and sisters, that in recent years our great leader has raised his voice from one end of this land to the other, and in foreign countries, pointing out the great blessings of freedom and free agency, and explaining so clearly the source of these priceless blessings.

I am grateful for the Constitution of this land. I am grateful that the Founding Fathers made it clear that our allegiance runs to that Constitution and the glorious eternal principles embodied therein. Our allegiance does not run to any man, to a king, or a dictator, or a president, although we revere and honor those whom we elect to high office. Our allegiance runs to the Constitution and to the principles embodied therein. The Founding Fathers made that clear and provided well for checks and balances and safeguards in an attempt to guarantee this freedom to those of us who live in this land.

I am grateful that the God of heaven saw fit to put his stamp of approval upon the Constitution and to indicate that it had come into being through wise men whom he raised up unto this very purpose. He asked the Saints, even in the dark days of their persecution and hardship to continue to seek for redress from their enemies "According," he said, "to the laws and constitution . . . which I have suffered to be established and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh." (D. & C. 101:77.) And then he made this most impressive declaration:

And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood. (Ibid., 101:80.)

It is gratifying that the Constitutions in many of the other lands of our neighbors in the Americas are patterned very much after this divinely-appointed Constitution, which the God of heaven directed in the founding of this nation. It isn't any wonder, therefore, that Joseph Smith, the Prophet—a truly great American—referring to the Constitution, said,

Yes, my brethren and sisters, we have a rich heritage, but may I remind you that nations oftentimes sow the seeds of their own destruction even while enjoying prosperity, even before reaching the zenith or the peak of their power. I think history clearly indicates that this is often the case. When it appears that all is well, oftentimes the very seeds of destruction are sown, sometimes unwittingly. Most of the great civilizations of the world have not been conquered from without until they have destroyed themselves from within by sowing these seeds of destruction.

People who are willing—and we have some of them in this country—to trade freedom for security, are sowing the seeds of destruction and deserve neither freedom nor security. Yes, we have, and have had for a good many years, in evidence in this country—this land choice above all other lands—certain trends that strike, in my judgment, at the very foundation of much that we hold dear. There is not time to discuss these trends today, but I would like to emphasize that as nations tend to enjoy higher and higher standards of living, greater and greater comforts, greater and greater material blessings, there seems to be a tendency for them to become more and more interested in preserving their luxuries and their comforts than in preserving and safeguarding the ideals and principles that have made them great. In other words, there is a tendency for them to become infected with the germs of decadent morality.

As we look to the future and contemplate our responsibilities as American citizens, what is the duty of Latter-day Saints? What is the duty of the elders of Israel in safeguarding this freedom which has been purchased so dearly with the blood of millions of our brothers and sisters who have gone before?

Here again the God of heaven has given us guidance, as always, both in the revelations and in the word that has come from his living Oracles. He has told us some of the things we must do in order to preserve this freedom and safeguard the blessings we have today. May I refer to one of these revelations, a revelation given at a time when the Lord was counseling the Saints to accept patiently their persecutions and their hardships with the full assurance that all these things would eventually be for their good and benefit.

And now, verily I say unto you concerning the laws of the land, it is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them.

And that law of the land which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before me. (D. & C. 98:4-5.)

It is very clear, my brethren and sisters, that the Lord disapproves of force, coercion, and intimidation. It is also very clear from the history of the world that only free people are truly happy. The revelation continues:

Therefore, I, the Lord, justify you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending the law which is the constitutional law of the land;

And as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than this, cometh of evil.

I, the Lord God, make you free, therefore ye are free indeed; and the law also maketh you free.

Then he points out this danger:

Nevertheless, when the wicked rule the people mourn. (Ibid., 98:6-9.)

Those of us who had the opportunity of traveling in war-torn Europe at the end of the last war saw ample evidence of what befalls people when the wicked are permitted to rise to positions of leadership. "... when the wicked rule the people mourn." Saith the Lord,

Wherefore, honest men and wise men should be sought for diligently, and good men and wise men ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these cometh of evil. (Ibid., 98:10.)

Now that is a commandment to his Church and to his Saints. To me it means that we have a responsibility as Latter-day Saints to use our influence so honest men and wise men and good men will be elected to public office in the community, in the county, in the state, and in the nation. To me this commandment of God is just as binding upon the Latter-day Saints as is the law of tithing, or the Word of Wisdom, or any other commandment which the God of heaven has given us.

As I read that for the first time some years ago I thought, "What an indictment of corrupt would-be political leaders in many parts of the world—demagogues who deal in half-truths, innuendos, and falsehoods! Here the God of heaven has pointed out the type of men he wants elected to public office among his people." It is not enough, my brethren and sisters, just to stand on the sidelines and criticize what is taking place, and to point the finger of scorn at some political leader. It is our job, our duty, and our responsibility to take an active interest in these matters, and carry out the admonition and the commandment which God has given us to see to it that men of character—good men, as measured by the standards of the gospel—are elected to public office.

So, today, I would like to throw out a challenge to the elders of Israel, my brethren of the priesthood, that we put forth an effort to prepare ourselves for statesmanlike work. The Prophet Joseph, as you will recall, had something to say regarding the important part which the elders of Israel would play in the safeguarding, if not the saving, of the Constitution of this land.

I recall the words of the Savior in which he said,

... for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light. (Luke 16:8.)

I hope and pray that we will be wise as the children of light, as the children to whom God has revealed these glorious truths. It is my conviction that only in this land, under this God-inspired Constitution, under an environment of freedom, could it have been possible to have established the Church and kingdom of God and restored the gospel in its fulness. It is our responsibility, my brethren and sisters, to see that this freedom is maintained, so that the Church can flourish in the future.

Today I would like to propose four questions which every Latter-day Saint might well ask as he attempts to appraise any program, policy, or idea promoted by any would-be political leader. I mention these because I think they will provide a safeguard in electing to office men who will meet the requirements which the Lord has set forth in the revelations.

First, is the proposal, the policy, or the idea being promoted right as measured by the gospel of Jesus Christ? I assure you it is much easier for one to measure a proposed policy by the gospel of Jesus Christ if he has accepted the gospel and is living it.

Secondly, is it right as measured by the Constitution of this land and the glorious principles embodied in that Constitution? Now that suggests that that we must read and study the Constitution, the Declaration of Independence, and the Bill of Rights, that we might know what principles are embodied therein.

Sunday, October 3

Thirdly, we might well ask the question: Is it right as measured by the counsel of the living oracles of God? It is my conviction, my brethren and sisters, that these living oracles are not only authorized, but are obligated to give counsel to this people on any subject which is vital to the welfare of this people and the upbuilding of the kingdom of God. So, that measure should be applied. Is it right as measured by the counsel of the living oracles of God?

Fourthly, what will be the effect on the morale and the character of the people if this or that policy is adopted? After all, as a Church we are interested in building men and women, building character, because character is the one thing we make in this world and take with us into the next. It must never be sacrificed for expediency.

So, my brethren, the Lord's priesthood has a mission to perform for liberty-loving people everywhere. We cannot, any more than Jonah of old, run away from our calling. If the people shall accept the Lord's solution of the world's problems, even as those who listened to a repentant Jonah, then all shall be well with them. If they do not, however, they will suffer the consequences. Our responsibility, as in Jonah's case, is to see to it that the people have a chance to choose decisively after they have been shown clearly the Lord's way and what the Lord expects of them.

We must provide effective and courageous, God-inspired leadership so that the people among whom we labor may choose wisely between the issues. The choice is theirs, but providing them the opportunity to choose the right with a knowledge of the revelations of God and the counsel of the living Oracles, that is our responsibility as leaders in the priesthood.

The Prophet Joseph said in substance at one time: It is our duty to consecrate all our influence to make popular that which is sound and good, and unpopular that which is unsound.

It is right politically for a man who has influence—of course, influence for good—to use it.

I thought last night, my brethren, where could there be a greater influence for good in this world than in a magnified priesthood? Nineteen thousand members of the priesthood assembled last night. One quarter million hold the Melchizedek Priesthood! What a power and influence for good could be wielded in this blessed land if we would heed the admonition which the Lord has given and see to it that men who are wise and good and honest would have our vigorous support and receive our interest in their selection and election to high office in the community, county, state, and federal government.

Let us, my brethren, seek to take an active part in our local, state, and national affairs. We are commanded by the Lord to do so. It is as binding on us as any of the Lord's commandments. Actually, it is when good men do nothing that evil flourishes.

The priesthood of the Church and kingdom of God who magnify their callings are good men. Of course there will be opposition. There will be conflicts. There will be misrepresentation. We must stand firm, however, for that which we believe to be right as measured by these standards, for those things which we know to be good and true, and the God of heaven will sustain us.

We have approaching us a great election in this country. My plea with you today, my brethren and sisters, is that regardless of the political party with which you are affiliated, you will remember the standards which the God of heaven has given us, and that you and all of us will use our influence as a means of helping to safeguard the liberty of this country, and those noble concepts established under the inspiration of heaven. We must see to it that honest men, good men, wise men, are elected to public office in this land, choice above all others, men who will use their influence to protect and strengthen those basic concepts that have made this nation great.

In closing I quote these words from J. E. Hamilton:

How much now we need a leadership that will tell the truth and talk straight, not about what is expedient, . . . but about what is everlastingly right, and call our people to a crusade for it, and pledge America to the defense of it, so that all nations will be convinced that we mean it! We need men who will ignore the consequences, tell the truth, and take a long chance with God.

It is my prayer that the great promises which have been made by the prophets of God regarding this land will be realized because a righteous people will merit their fulfilment. May we do our duty as citizens and as members of the Church to see to it that the right kind of people are elected to public office, so that rich blessings which we now enjoy and which have been promised to us, may be realized in all the days to come.

I testify to you, my brethren and sisters, that this is a choice land, that God held this hemisphere, as it were, in the palm of his hand for hundreds, yea, thousands of years in order that the great mission of this land might be undertaken and might be accomplished. The kingdom of God is again upon the earth. I testify to you that God has spoken again from the heavens in this land, in our day; that God the Father, and the Son did appear to the Prophet Joseph; that they revealed themselves unto him, and that through that greatest of all visions, a new gospel dispensation was opened up in preparation for the second coming of the Master.

With all the power that I possess I invite men everywhere to investigate the truths of the claims of this people, that they too may join with us in building up the kingdom in preparation for that glorious day when the Redeemer will come again to dwell upon the earth as King of kings, and Lord of lords. I pray that this day may be hastened, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

CERTAIN basic truths must be accepted by all men now living if they would gain for themselves the fulness of that reward which is prepared in the mansions of the Father. These great truths are known only by revelation. They are revealed in the gospel, and are most devoutly believed by faithful members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Many of them have been taught with power and conviction (in the sessions of this conference) by the living Oracles who stand at the head of this kingdom. They have been taught in plainness, and with that authorization and power which comes from the Holy Ghost and from no other source. May

I be so bold as to recapitulate, as we near the close of the conference, a few of these great fundamental truths.

We believe that there is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, an almighty, all-powerful being—a personage of tabernacle, a being in the express image of whose body we mortal men have been created.

We believe that he has all power and all wisdom; that he knows all things; that in his infinite grace, love, and condescension for us, he has ordained the plan of creation, of redemption, of salvation, and of possible progression to an eternal exaltation on high.

We believe that he is our Father in heaven, literally; that we are his spirit

Sunday, October 3

offspring; that we dwelt with him in the pre-existent eternities, were taught by him, saw his face, knew of the terms and conditions that apply to the plan of salvation, and desired with an overwhelming longing that we, his spirit offspring, might progress to the state where we would have glorious bodies, and would attain the state of exaltation he then had.

We believe that he directed the creation of this earth, and all things that are on it; that he placed Adam and Eve, the first man and the first woman, here; commanded them to multiply and fill the earth with posterity, and to provide bodies for the hosts of spirit children who yet lived and dwelt in his presence.

We believe that Adam fell that men might be; that the fall of Adam brought into the world a temporal death and a spiritual death—the temporal death being something that accompanies mortality and results in due course in the separation of body and spirit; and the spiritual death being to be cast out of the presence of God and to die as pertaining to things of the spirit or the things of righteousness.

We believe that after the fall of man, the voice of God was heard by Adam and his posterity; that angels from the presence of God ministered unto them; that the gift of the Holy Ghost was poured out upon those who diligently sought the Lord—by all of which means the fulness of the gospel, the plan of redemption and salvation, was made known; and that this plan was revealed from age to age in periods that we call dispensations of the gospel.

We believe that in the Meridian of Time the promised Messiah was born into the world as the literal Son of God; that he came into this world with life in himself, was the life and the light of the world; and by command of the Father (having the power to lay down his life and take it up again) to work out the infinite and eternal atonement.

We believe that he is literally the Son of God as you and I are the sons and daughters of our parents, and, as the angel said to King Benjamin, that "salvation was, and is, and is to come, in and through the atoning blood of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent." (Mosiah 3:18.)

We believe that he did in fact work out the infinite and eternal atonement; that he was lifted up upon the cross; that he died, was resurrected, rising again the third day to ascend to the Majesty on High.

We believe that he ransomed all men, unconditionally, from the temporal effects of the fall of Adam, in that all men will be raised in immortality and live eternally in that state, body and spirit inseparably connected; and that he offered to all men a conditional ransom from the spiritual effects of the fall of Adam, provided that men would repent and abide in the truths and laws of the everlasting gospel that are revealed from age to age.

We believe that the predicted era of gross darkness, of apostasy, came and succeeded the meridian dispensation, and that it was not until our day that the fulness of light and truth again burst upon the earth.

We believe that God has spoken again; that his voice has been heard again among men; that again angels have ministered from his presence; that again the gift of the Holy Ghost has been poured out upon those who have sought the Lord—by all of which means once again the kingdom of God has been set up among men, the Church of Jesus Christ has been established, and the decree gone forth that it will remain until the coming of the Son of Man, and of course, ever thereafter.

We believe that Joseph Smith, Jun., was the mighty prophet of the restoration; that by the grace and condescension of God (the young prophet having been prepared from eternity for his mission) he received line upon line, precept upon precept, key, power, and authority upon key, power, and authority, until all things were restored, and every power and grace was had again that would enable men to be saved and exalted in the kingdom of the

We believe, as our scripture so plainly recites, that

Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer of the Lord, has done more, save Jesus only, for the salvation of men in this world, than any other man that ever lived in it. (D. & C. 135:3.)

We believe that this plan of salvation—had of old, restored anew in our day—consists in these things: that men must come to a knowledge of the nature and kind of being that God is. They must learn his character, attributes, and perfections. They must have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; must repent of their sins; must be baptized in water and of the Spirit by legal administrators who have power to bind on earth and to seal in heaven; and that then they must endure in righteousness and in faith, living by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God; unto the end of their respective mortal probations.

We believe something more, as several of these brethren have said during this conference: that neither is the man without the woman nor the woman without the man in the Lord, but that the gate to exaltation and the fulness of eternal life in the kingdom of the Father is the new and everlasting covenant of marriage; and just as men may enter in at the gate of repentance and baptism, and work out for themselves a salvation hereafter by faith and diligence, so they may enter in at the gate of celestial marriage, and, conditioned upon keeping that covenant, come up in the resurrection as husband and wife, the family unit continuing through all eternity, and thus, eventually—as members of the family of God, members of the Church of the Firstborn—become joint heirs with Jesus Christ, and receive, inherit, and possess all things.

Now, we believe that God is no respecter of persons; that a soul is just as precious in his sight in this day as a soul has ever been in any age of the earth's history; and that he is just as willing now as he was in the days of any ancient prophet or any faithful people who have gone before to reveal to his children on earth the truths of salvation, and he will reveal them to any man who will come before him in faith, believing, seeking wisdom, as the young boy Prophet came when the hour had come for the opening of this final glorious dispensation.

I am grateful beyond any measure of expression that I have for the absolute certainty that there is in my heart of the divinity of this work, and I know that God Almighty will give any man this knowledge and open the door to possible, eventual salvation and exaltation to any man who will come in faith, believing, knocking at the door, and asking that he may receive the truth.

In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Bruce R. McConkie of the First Council of the Seventy has just spoken to us. Elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve who just returned the other day from an assignment to the Orient, will now speak to us.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

IT SEEMS incredible to me, as I think about it today, that six months ago yesterday my dear companion lay critically ill in the LDS Hospital, her body cruelly broken in an unfortunate accident. For someone to have told me and the doctors six months ago that before another six months should pass, that she would accompany me on an assignment to the Orient, where in two months we would travel 20,000 miles and visit six countries and peoples, it would seem to me to have been such an impossibility as to have been wholly unthinkable.

But when our beloved leader, the President of the Church, took us into his office and gave us blessings for this mission, little did I realize how the Lord could even then, beyond the skill of doctors or human minds and skill, bless that dear companion and fulfil to the letter the words of the President when he said to her: "You will come back from this trip increased in strength and healed in body." It has been one of the greatest testimonies that has come to me, and I stand today humbly and bear witness to the effectiveness of the prayers and blessings of, not only our President, but also of the faithful Saints everywhere.

Sunday, October 3

If I could take as something of a text, then, the words of the Master, perhaps my feelings today could be best expressed in His words. John the Baptist had sent his disciples to Jesus, after John had received reports about the work of the Master, and they came asking him, "Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?" The answer that Jesus gave for them to carry back to John the Baptist was this:

Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached. (Luke 7:20, 22.)

To you, President McKay, before the body of the Church today, as a humble servant, whom you sent out into the Far East to check on affairs there, to visit our boys in military service, our scattered Saints in that far-off land, I come back to you testifying, as the Master told the disciples to testify to John, the miraculous power of divine intervention is out there, which is one of the signs of the divinity of the work of the Lord.

We have seen one "nigh unto death" raised miraculously during this visit. We have seen the hand of the Almighty stay the storms and the winds, and overcome obstacles that otherwise would have made impossible the fulfillment of our mission. We have passed through danger-ridden country only a few hundred miles from where a war is brewing. We have seen the humble and the poor having the gospel preached to them. The signs of divinity are in the Far East. The work of the Almighty is increasing with a tremendous surge.

I do not know whether it was just a coincidence, or whether President McKay had some thought about it, but one of the commanding generals, when I was introduced to him in Korea, said, "Well, you have a lot of relatives in this country." The five most prominent names in Korea are Yi, Chang, Kim, Pak, and Lee. In China I discovered that there were over five hundred thousand Chinese who have the surname of Li (Lee), and actually, some of the immigration authorities, when I signed my name, or they saw my name on my passport, would ask: "Chinese?" And I answered, "No, American." Then the comment, "You look Chinese."

So, I was accepted, President McKay, as almost a native. My coloring as to hair and eyes and skin seem to fit the general terrain.

Some years ago I read a statement contained in Parley P. Pratt's The Key to Theology. I wondered then at the meaning of this statement, and I come back to you today testifying that it was a prophecy that is today being fulfilled. I read from that inspired statement:

Physically speaking, there seems to need but the consummation of two great enterprises more, in order to complete the preparations necessary for the fulfillment of Isaiah and other Prophets, in regard to the restoration of Israel to Palestine, from the four quarters of the earth . . . under the auspices of that great, universal and permanent theocracy which is to succeed the long reign of mystery.

Then he names those two great enterprises, one, the Europe-to-Asia railroad which was then in the process of being consummated, and the other the Great Western Railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific in this country. Then he said this:

Politically speaking, some barriers yet remain to be removed, and some conquests to be achieved, such as the subjugation of Japan, and the triumph of constitutional liberty among certain nations where mind, and thought, and religion are still prescribed by law. (The Key to Theology, 75-76.)

Subjugation means conquering by force. I want to say to you that one of the most significant things that I have seen in the Far East is the fulfillment of what Elder Parley P. Pratt testified would be one of the significant developments necessary to the consummation of God's purposes, "the subjugation of Japan and the triumph of constitutional liberty among certain nations where mind and thought and religion are still prescribed by law."

I traveled on this assignment with Sister Lee and President Hilton A. Robertson and Sister Robertson. We had visited our native Saints and servicemen in all the districts of the mainland of Japan from Hokkaido on the north to Kyushu on the south, and representatives from the great cities. I then went across with President Robertson to Korea and then to Okinawa, Hong Kong, the Philippines, and Guam. I want to say to the parents, who are anxiously inquiring about their boys, something that I hope will calm your feelings, and will encourage you in your faith.

From the time that the First Presidency announced this appointment our telephones were ringing at home and at the office from anxious parents, and the substance of their anxiety was summed up in what one father said: "Will you see my boy over there, and take him the love from a lonesome dad?"

We met with a total of 1563 Latter-day Saint boys in military service, in our conferences in Japan, Korea, Okinawa, the Philippines, and Guam. They had arranged district conferences which simulated our stake conferences, and it was like holding a stake conference every other day all through this trip, because of the thoroughness with which they had organized their work.

I have never listened to better sermons than I heard preached by our five Latter-day Saint chaplains and our group leaders over there. They are studying the gospel. The excellence of their organization and the orderliness of their procedures under a mission committee comprising three lieutenant colonels, answerable of course to the mission president, and they in turn supervised by chaplains and by group leaders, is worthy of note. In every camp where we went, under military orders, we were accorded every privilege that could be accorded one going into those areas, and the first procedure was invariably an introduction to the commanding general of the camp, and a brief interview, during which he extended to us all the courtesies of the camp, and bade us welcome, and in a number of instances, came to our meeting.

They know of our boys. They know of the work of the Latter-day Saints, and perhaps their attitude towards our boys is best summed up in what General Richard S. Whitcomb said to us down at Pusan, Korea, after we had been at the general's mess the night before, and he had indicated he would like to come to our meeting the next morning.

With 109 of our boys present, General Whitcomb rose to speak to them, and after a word of greeting, he said this, and I asked him if I might repeat it to you, President McKay, and to the fathers and mothers back home. (General Whitcomb is characterized by our boys there as one of the toughest disciplinarians in the United States Army.)

"I have always known the members of your Church to be a substantial people.

"Here in the Pusan area I have the largest court-martial responsibility of any command in the United States Army, but I never have had one of your faith brought before me for a court martial or disciplinary action, in this command. Wherever I have been, I have never known of a Latter-day Saint ever to be brought up for any disciplinary action."

On Guam I was furnished with a little paper from the camp which indicated that for the month of August one of our boys there, a Brother Douglas K. Eager, had been designated as the "Airman of the Month of August," and the citation read: "He won the award on the basis of his devotion to duty, character, appearance, industry, and military bearing."

One of the supervising chaplains, to take another example, from Clark Field in the Philippines, said this to me as we walked out of a meeting with the Protestant chaplains on the base: "I have never known any group of men in my military experience who have greater devotion to their country, and to their God, and to their Church—no finer characters than are to be found among the boys of the Latter-day Saints."

All through our visits, they had arranged their own programs—they sang three songs over and over again without anybody suggesting it. They sang, first, "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet," and in every district conference they sustained the General Authorities of the Church. It was one of the highlights of their conference.

Sunday, October 3

Third Day

The other that seems to have become their theme song while in military service is:

Come, come ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear
But with joy, wend your way . . .

Why should we mourn or think our lot is hard?

'Tis not so, all is right . . .

And should we die before our journey's through

Happy day, all is well.

We then are free from toil and sorrow, too,
With the just, we shall dwell.

And then, finally, you must know what they were singing otherwise. They were singing about the hills of home, "O Ye Mountains High, where the clear blue sky, Arches over the vales of the free," and time and again I heard the wives of our few men, who are permitted to be with them in some places, and our boys everywhere, as they would shake hands, say, as tears would fill their eyes: "I wasn't homesick until I shook hands with you, Brother Lee." Someone from home!

Then they would say something like this: "Tell the folks back home not to worry about us. We are all right, but we worry sometimes about the folks back home."

I think my appraisal of what I saw among the boys there might be expressed in what Ralph Waldo Emerson is quoted as having said: "It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion. It is easy in solitude to live after ones own, but the great man is he, who in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude. . . ." Such is the way I found our boys, with the marks of true greatness upon their brows, keeping "with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude."

From the contributions of our military men in the Far East, sufficient money is being raised each month to sustain 21 full-time missionaries from Japan, who otherwise could not fill missions as full-time missionaries in the Japanese Mission. That amounts to forty dollars a month for each missionary, or a total of between eight and nine hundred dollars each month. This is the second group of missionaries, which, when completed, will mean that our boys over there have contributed from out of their meager military allowances a total of over forty thousand dollars for sending local missionaries to do the work that otherwise could not be done.

Directly as a result of the work of the Latter-day Saint servicemen there were 47 converts last year, while another 103 have been baptized so far this year by the missionaries of the Japanese Mission. It was on the first Sunday of last month at 6:30 in the morning, just at the break of day, in Seoul, Korea, that we baptized a native Korean student and a young serviceman. At Clark Field last Sunday morning at 7:30 we baptized four, one a young native Filipino mother, who later bore her testimony in the conference session. What this means to servicemen as they come into the Church is perhaps best expressed in a humble testimony from a young seaman that came to Tokyo off the aircraft carrier, Hornet, which had docked at Yokohama. Later we met him down at Manila Bay. He came up at the close of the meeting in Tokyo, his arm in a sling, and explained that he had a badly infected arm. As he shook hands with me he said, "I am getting ready to be baptized a member of the Church, and if we are down at Manila when I meet you there, I hope to tell you I have been baptized."

At Manila he came, his arm now was perfectly healed, and said: "I was baptized on August 27. Something happened to me after I left that conference in Tokyo. My arm was swollen and was painful all through the meeting, but after I had shaken hands with you, I got on the train going back to the boat. Suddenly the pain ceased, my arm was healed, and now I am going back to that lovely wife who has been praying that I would straighten my life. I smoked, and I drank, and I did a lot of things to cause her sorrow, and I am going back to that sweetheart of mine, and I am going to spend the rest of my life trying to prove myself worthy of her love." His faith had brought healing to his body and his soul. That is what the gospel meant to this seaman, who became a convert to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Over there we have boys who are homesick for home. How they are thinking about their mothers and their wives and sweethearts is suggested by the fact that when Sister Lee would speak, they would oftentimes come up at the close of services and they would say to me some words of appreciation, but then they would say: "We really appreciated Sister Lee's talk," and they gathered around her because she was a touch of mother. They would tell her how she reminded them of their mothers. She was the symbol of the home to which they one-time hoped to come, and I think they almost filled a notebook for her of the names and addresses and telephone numbers of the folks back home they wanted her to call and to talk to.

Perhaps, what our boys are doing over there can best be illustrated in what Elder Aki, a young Japanese missionary up at beautiful Nikko, a recipient of the missionary contributions of our servicemen, who is just completing a two-year mission, said as he bore his testimony in English: "As terrible as was war in Japan, it proved a great blessing. Because as a result, it brought the Latter-day Saint servicemen back to Japan who paved the way for the reopening of the Japanese Mission."

President McKay, one of the things that is startling to me and significant, pertains to the language there. Difficult as it is, because of the peculiar characters as well as the difficult language, the Lord is seemingly helping us even to solve that problem. Since the troops came in, every school in Japan and in Korea is teaching English, and most of those young students, who are being attracted by the gospel, can speak some English. They are helping to break down the language barrier and making easier the work of the missionaries.

Down at Osaka where we had 179 in attendance, as I looked over that audience, and tried to estimate the ages of those in attendance, I would say that out of 179 in attendance, there were fewer than 16 who were over 30 years of age. What these young people will do in aiding in that conversion is best illustrated by two incidents.

A year ago last April while I was in the Hawaiian Islands I interviewed and set apart under instructions from the First Presidency six lovely young girls to go over to Japan as missionaries. One of them, a young Japanese sister, was a bit hesitant to go because she had come of a Buddhist family. Her mother had opposed her going. Her brother had beaten her rather cruelly because of her insistence on Church activity. She was almost a nervous wreck, but she had the faith that somehow the Lord would help her through her problems, and we sent her on her way.

I met her at one of these conferences, and she whispered to me, her story. She said: "Twenty-three people, Brother Lee, are being attracted to the gospel partly by my efforts," and then she introduced me to an elderly grandmother, whose husband is an Episcopal minister, and the little girl, the granddaughter of this elderly grandmother, was the one who played for our singing during the conference. This little girl came home after she had joined the Church and said to her grandmother: "Grandma, your church is not true because you do not understand God, and you do not understand about the Godhead," and then she proceeded to teach her the missionary lesson about the Godhead.

This elderly grandmother said, "Any Church that can teach a child like that must have something." Our young Japanese missionary sister from the Hawaiian Islands now reports: "That grandmother is now preparing to become baptized a member of the Church through the missionary efforts of her little granddaughter, perhaps not more than eleven or twelve years of age."

There is another evidence of an awakening in Japan. Representatives of some of the leading newspapers in Japan, many of them, interviewed us, and wrote articles, both in English and Japanese. Our Japanese Saints were a bit amused about one of these articles where the heading was: "Mormon Polygamist Visits Japan." Fortunately the misleading statement was corrected in the body of the article. Following that announcement we received an invitation from a group who styled themselves, "The League of New Japan's Religious Organizations," who claim to have a following of ten millions of people. For the first time Japan is enjoying religious freedom. They asked that I meet with fifteen leaders of these fifteen religious organizations, comprising the league, and there discuss with them Mormonism, and then submit to a discussion following that time.

Third Day

Their invitation is a bit interesting!

Invitation to the friendly talk meeting with one of the leaders of the "Mormon" Church. As Rev. Harold B. Lee who is one of the highest leaders of "Mormon Church" (The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints) which is one of the most influential churches in America, is visiting Japan on his journey to fulfil his mission in the Pacific Ocean area. In order to promote good will we would like to hold a friendly talk meeting, . . . Also, paying respect to the laws of Mormonism no refreshment of tea or cake will be served at that meeting.

For that hour, with Brother Tatsui Sato from the mission office translating my words, they listened. Of these men, none claimed to be Christians, and yet in the discussion that followed I learned that they were in truth more Christian than many of the so-called Christians who neither accept the divinity of the mission of Jesus nor of his reality as the Son of the living God.

They recorded my talk on a tape recorder, and when the half hour was finished for discussion, they were still asking questions, so that our interview extended into two hours and a half, and that recording they promised later would be presented in their quarterly paper where they proposed to give it publicity. I told them that if they were interested and would send me their names and addresses, I would see that each got a copy of the Book of Mormon for them to study.

A few days later I received a letter in Japanese, which Brother Sato translated, and wherein the president in charge gave me the names and addresses. His letter reads:

We have no words to express our thanks for your very instructive address, which you gave us the other day. Although you were very busy and must have been tired on your way to preach the gospel in the Oriental area, yet you shared your very precious time for us, for which we have to be very grateful.

Then he said:

May we take advantage of your words that you would present us the Book of Mormon that we may understand better? We send you the list of names who attended the meeting.

Copies of the Book of Mormon have been sent to these leaders.

There is one thing more I should like to tell you about. At Pusan we have only three members on record, and when we arrived at a meeting, that was something of a surprise party for us, we found to our astonishment that we had in attendance not just three members, but besides our more than 100 servicemen we had 103 Koreans, mostly all young people of about high school age, and as a part of the proceedings they presented to me this scroll, written on silk parchment, both in Korean and in English, in which they had written these words, mind you, this was written and presented by a group most all of whom were non-members:

We sincerely welcome Apostle Harold B. Lee who come to Korea. The mission of his visiting Korea is very important and we are thankful to our Father in heaven from our heart deeply for the great support you have given us for the people of Korea.

Here we would like to express our gratitude to the soldiers who stayed in Korea. And preached the true gospel to us and also the chance we have had of gathering together with them under the name of our heavenly Father, therefore we are under a vow to repay their kindness. With thanks with all of our eulogy to you for your distinguished service of the faithfulness which will perform your important mission to come our Korea. And visiting our Korea in spite of it is long distance. We humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, A Men. From: Korean Group in Pusan of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Well, that is significant, because for the first time they too are enjoying religious freedom.

I must tell you, President McKay, about the meeting with our lovely Chinese folks down in Hong Kong. We had no meeting place. They have not had much opportunity since they were baptized. It has now been nearly a year since they received the sacrament. But in our hotel room overlooking the harbor from Kowloon to Hong Kong we held a sacrament meeting. We bore testimony to them. We had gone up to that high point overlooking Hong Kong, where Brother Cowley, in company with President Robertson, President Aki, and their wives, had dedicated that land to the opening of a mission, July 14, 1949. There, too, we bowed our heads and thanked the Lord for the degree of Brother Cowley's blessing that had been received, and asked the Lord for a further outpouring of his blessing. Then, after we had visited briefly with these young Chinese students, one of these was a young girl—little Yook Sin Yuen—they call her Nora, a beautiful little girl who speaks good English, as taught her by the missionaries. As our bus pulled out from the hotel the next day to take us to the airport, she reached up her hand through the window, and said to me as a parting word: "Apostle Lee, tell President McKay to please send the Church back to China." And I said to her, as the tears were in my eyes also, "My dear sweet girl, as long as we have a faithful, devoted band like you who without a shepherd, are remaining true, the Church is in China."

Well, I say, President McKay, as I commenced, I have gone now under your appointment to the Far East. We have seen the miracles of God's divine intervention. We have seen how the gospel has been preached, to the poor as an evidence of its divinity. God grant that the time shall not be far distant until the deathgrip of communism shall be unloosed, and those peoples shall be free to receive in fulness the gospel of Jesus Christ, for I am convinced that there are hundreds of thousands of souls who are begging for the truth.

I bear you my solemn testimony that I know these things are true, that God lives, and that this is his work, and I bear it humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

AT THE closing hour of this great conference, I know you would have me express appreciation to persons and agencies that have helped in taking care of all who have been in attendance. I know in naming individuals and groups that I may omit some, but to you all we express appreciation and gratitude for your services:

To the public press, to you reporters, for your care and accuracy in reporting the proceedings, to the audiences for their responsiveness and attentiveness throughout the sessions of the conference; to the city officials; the traffic officers in handling increased traffic. As we have driven up and down South Temple we have noticed how attentive, how careful to duty, how considerate of the pedestrians you have been. Thank you! We mention the fire department also. They went to the trouble of seeing to it by actual tests that the fire wagons could in an emergency come through the gates. To the Red Cross, who have been on hand to render any assistance to those who might need their tender care. For the semi-tropical flowers from Hawaii, we have already expressed appreciation. To the ushers, we say thank you. We have noted your attention to your assigned duties as given by your superiors under the Presiding Bishopric.

Gratefully we mention again the assistance rendered by the various radio and television stations here in our own city and state and in other states named in the various sessions of this conference. What a means of permitting hundreds of thousands of people to hear the proceedings of this conference of the Church! We thank you congregations assembled in the stakes in California, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Wyoming, and Colorado for the messages of appreciation you have sent in. Everyone has said that the proceedings have gone over the wire perfectly and then added: "Thank you and God bless you for the opportunity we have had this day of joining and worshipping with you."

Sunday, October 3

We must mention again gratitude, not only appreciation, but gratitude for the groups of singers who have contributed so much to the inspiration of this conference, beginning with the Relief Society Mothers, and followed next day by those lovely little girls—the Bee Hive chorus. Just their presence and their sweet voices, aside from their singing, brought tears to many a mother's eye. Then the combined Scandinavian choirs, and the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir last evening in the priesthood meeting, and finally, our own Tabernacle Choir. Do you know, they have been here since seven o'clock this morning?

I am happy to re-announce to you that in appreciation of the great service that this body of devoted singers is rendering under the able directorship of Brother J. Spencer Cornwall and the organists, Elders Alexander Schreiner, Frank Asper, and Roy Darley, they will be given a trip to Europe. They will go as ambassadors of good will—representing in honor and artistry the state, as well as the Church. With all our hearts, here today we say, thank you and God bless you in the preparation of that great trip!

All that has been said and done and sung, all the testimonies borne have directly or indirectly led to this divine admonition: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6:33.)

Let us then make God the center of our lives. That was one of the first admonitions given when the gospel was first preached to man. To have communion with God, through his Holy Spirit, is one of the noblest aspirations in life. It is when the peace and love of God have entered the soul, when serving him becomes the motive factor in one's life and existence that we can touch other lives, quickening and inspiring them, even though no word be spoken. There is operative in the world a spiritual force as active and as real as the waves that have carried the message today to those tens of thousands by radio and television.

"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle?" cried the Psalmist. That means, who can come into that realm, that spiritual realm . . . "who shall dwell in thy holy hill?"

"He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart." (Psalm 15.)

Who will fail in getting into that divine presence? "He that backbiteth, he that doeth evil to his neighbor, he that taketh up a reproach against his neighbor." (See Psalm 15.)

Let us, as we seek first the kingdom of God, avoid backbiting and evil speaking. Gossip bespeaks either a vacant mind or one that entertains jealousy or envy. Let us avoid self-righteousness. There is a proverb that says, "Every way of a man is right in his own eyes: but the Lord pondereth the hearts." (Prov. 21:2.) "Whoso boasteth himself of a false gift is like clouds and wind without rain." (Ibid., 25:14.)

Finally, brethren and sisters, "be perfected, be comforted, be of one mind, live in peace and the God of love and peace will be with you." (See II Cor. 13:11.) Keep in mind the Savior's prayer: "Make them one, Father, as thou and I are one."

I wish that all within the sound of my voice at this moment, all who have any prejudice in their hearts, might have glimpsed the General Authorities in the House of the Lord last Thursday morning, when they met in fasting and prayer to prepare themselves spiritually for the responsibilities awaiting them in this great conference. You would have glimpsed the unity of the First Presidency and through this transmission of heart to heart, soul to soul, you would have known the love I bear for these two counselors, for their clear vision and sound judgment and their patience with their leader when necessary. You would have glimpsed the unity and love of these twelve men, of their Assistants and of the First Council of the Seventy, the Patriarch, and the Presiding Bishopric. We pray that the love and unity in that meeting may extend to every stake presidency, mission presidency, every bishopric, every priesthood quorum and auxiliary throughout the Church. With such unity and love there is no power on earth which can stop the progress of this, the work of God.

May his blessings attend you, now, as you go to your homes. We bless you that the spirit of unity and the spirit of testimony of the divinity of this work may abide in your hearts always, that peace and love may be in your homes as never before, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Tabernacle Choir will now favor us with "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," Elder Cornwall conducting, and the benediction will be offered by Elder Davis Green, President of the Minidoka Stake, after which this conference will be adjourned for six months.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

The closing prayer was offered by President Davis Green of the Minidoka Stake.

Conference adjourned for six months.

President David O. McKay:

Just one moment, please. I overlooked to tell you that tonight the Deseret Sunday School General Semi-Annual Conference will be held in this building at 7 o'clock.

The congregational singing of the Conference was conducted by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Tabernacle Choir furnished the choral singing for the Sunday morning and afternoon sessions, J. Spencer Cornwall conducting.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished musical numbers at the General Priesthood meeting.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Salt Lake, Cache Valley and Southern Idaho areas, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, furnished the music for the Friday morning and afternoon sessions.

At the Saturday morning session the Bee Hive Girls 40th Anniversary Chorus (Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association), under the direction of Sister Margrit Lohner, furnished musical numbers.

Saturday afternoon, the choral music was by the Combined Scandinavian Choirs, with Hulbert Keddington conducting.

J. Spencer Cornwall directed the singing of the Tabernacle Choir and Frank W. Asper was at the organ on the Church of the Air program, and also the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner, Frank W. Asper and Roy A. Darley.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

FIRST DAY

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held in the Tabernacle at 7:00 p.m., Saturday, April 2, 1955.

The Tabernacle was filled to overflowing. The Assembly Hall just south of the Tabernacle and the Barratt Hall were also filled to capacity with people. In both of these buildings provision was made for those present to see and hear the services by television as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle. In addition the services were broadcast by direct wire to members of the Priesthood who had assembled in 17 Church buildings in Utah, 10 in Idaho, 2 in Wyoming, 3 in Nevada, 1 in Colorado, 4 in Washington, 2 in Oregon, and 32 in California.

The singing for the session was furnished by the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir.

President David O. McKay presided and conducted the services of this meeting, which commenced promptly at the time appointed.

President David O. McKay:

This is the second most happy surprise we have had today. This afternoon, in the midst of the snowstorm, we found this Tabernacle filled to overflowing by members of the Primary Ward and Stake Boards,—an overflow meeting even during that blizzard. Now tonight, in the midst of this most unprecedented snowstorm, we find the Tabernacle filled, people standing, overflow meetings, well attended. It is an indication of the interest, faith, and loyalty of members of the Church.

We have here a notice from Bishop

Isaacson that the plane carrying the flowers for Conference was not able to land on account of the snowstorm and had to fly to Denver. The flowers will be sent back as soon as possible. Another surprise! A demonstration of the means of transportation in this age.

What I am going to read now must not be taken as a precedent, but I am going to read it. I have a letter here from Mr. Hendry, the Vice President and General Manager of Intermountain Theatres:

"All stake presidents, Bishops, and their wives are invited to attend a special preview showing of the new motion picture, 'A Man Called Peter,' deeply spiritual story of Mr. Peter Marshall, to be held on Tuesday, April 5, at 9:30 a.m. at the Utah and the Capitol Theatres. The picture is being shown at both theatres simultaneously at this time."

You are all invited. I read it because "A Man Called Peter" is well worth seeing, and has a message of spirituality most timely for the nation at this time. We thank Mr. Hendry and his associates for this courteous invitation to Presidencies of stakes and Bishoprics, who may make arrangements accordingly.

This General Priesthood session is the opening session of the One Hundred Twenty-Fifth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. You will be interested to know that these services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall, in Barratt Hall, over a public address system, and in addition are being broadcast by direct wire over a public address system to members of the Priesthood assembled as follows:

In Utah, 17 Church buildings; In Idaho, 10; Wyoming, 2; Nevada, 3; Colorado, 1; Washington, 4; Oregon, 2; Arizona, 2; California, 32; a total of 71 sessions in addition to these on this Temple Block.

The singing during this session will be furnished by the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall as director, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ. We shall open by the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir singing, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," conducted by Elder Cornwall, after which Elder Gordon M. Romney, president of the Central American Mission, will offer the invocation.

Singing by the Men's Chorus, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

Elder Gordon Romney, President of the Central American Mission, offered the invocation.

The Men's Chorus then sang the hymn, "O Say, What Is Truth?"

President David O. McKay:

Last December Elder Wendell B. Mendenhall was appointed to go on a special mission to New Zealand to attend to matters important to the building of the School near Hamilton, New Zealand, and to have in mind some ideal locations, any of which might be suitable for the building of a temple. He performed his duty well. We should like to hear from him tonight. I think you will be pleased to get the spirit of that mission.

We should like to hear as our first speaker, Elder Wendell B. Mendenhall, who is president of the San Joaquin Stake.

ELDER WENDELL B. MENDENHALL

President of the San Joaquin Stake

PRESIDENT MCKAY, President Richards, President Clark and President Smith, fellow members of the Priesthood of God, I pray that the Spirit of the Lord will give me utterance this night, that I may bring to you a message of the people who dwell deep in the South Pacific. I ask our Heavenly Father to bless me that I may bring to you the spirit of these people who have lived for many hundreds of years, tucked away in the South Pacific Islands, a people who have the blood of Israel flowing richly in their veins.

I thank President McKay and the First Presidency for the assignment which was given me, and I was very humble in the performance of this duty, knowing something of the nature of the mission which I had to perform.

My good brethren, I invite you tonight to indulge with me and imagine that each of you was a returned missionary from one of the many South Pacific Islands. I invite you to do this in order that you may fully appreciate the things that are being done in the interests of those people who are members of the Church. I am grateful I know them, that I know their hearts and their feelings. I am above all grateful for the simplicity of their souls, for the implicit trust they have in God, their eternal Father.

Saturday, April 2

First Day

I pray to my Heavenly Father daily that I shall never in all my life be anything but one of them, that I can keep the spirit of their simple faith, their humility, and their trust in things that are divine. They literally believe in the words of God and in the words of the prophets of God. They believe if they keep the commandments of God, God will bless them and this is the premise upon which they live. I only wish every member of the priesthood of the Church could have been there and could have witnessed the manifestation of the spirit of those men and women and children when they, for the first time, saw the Prophet of the Living God in this age.

We must remember that in the land of New Zealand the Prophet of God has never stood, and to our knowledge it is the first time in recorded history that the Prophet of God had set his foot in this land. These people truly appreciated this glorious experience.

One night, as we were getting ready to hold a meeting to set up the itinerary for President McKay, a woman got up in the audience and said, "President Mendenhall, we do not care whether we hear a single word from the Prophet of God. All we want is to see him. If I can just bring my six children and let them see him, it will serve them all the days of their lives."

I wish all the membership of the Church could have heard her humble testimony. I wish every member of the Church could have the same simplicity of faith, that humility to believe in very deed in the greatness of the Prophet of the Living God. The experiences which followed President McKay's visit there were many and touched the hearts of thousands.

As President McKay told you, one of my assignments was to select several likely spots on which a temple could be built. Several spots which looked like they might be desirable were found, but as I was traveling in a car one afternoon I came upon another spot and without any question of a doubt I knew the reason why the temple should be there. I drove up over the top of a hill overlooking the area and my decision was confirmed.

The next morning at daylight I went back by myself to look around and take some pictures. About ten days later President McKay came. He arrived at the college at Hamilton after dark. At daylight the next morning we set out to look over the properties. We drove up over this hill, opened a gate and went out into the paddock. We drove up to the spot I had seen. There were five of us in the car and as we stopped, three of the brethren got out on the right side while President McKay and I got out on the left. He took me by the arm and we walked about 15 or 20 paces from the car and he turned to me and said, "What do you think?"

I had not said a word to him. No one else knew a thing. When President McKay looked around the area and saw this beautiful hill, he said, "This is the place where the temple should be," and this statement confirmed the thing which was in my heart. Then a week later President McKay came back to this beautiful spot and I bear witness to you, my brethren, that I saw the Prophet of this Church in the spirit of vision and when he walked away from that hill, he knew the House of the Lord was to be erected upon that particular spot.

The property was not ours. It lay between two pieces of property owned by the Church. We had to investigate and find out if it was possible to purchase this property. It was owned by three brothers, their sister, and mother. I went to see these people. I had been to see them before, however, and they had told me they did not want to sell. One day as we were leaving the college the three brothers came up to the car and said they would like to see me. President McKay went on up to the house and I stayed and talked with them. They said, "President Mendenhall, we have decided we do not want to sell the property at all, but after President McKay has finished his tour, will you come and see us?"

The day President McKay left for Australia, Elder George Biesinger, who is in charge of the construction, and I, went back to see the Murray brothers. We sat on the hill that morning and talked to them about their property, and about eleven o'clock we decided we would go see an attorney. There were two of the brothers present so they called the other brother who was fishing. They called the sister from another community and they got their mother and all went into town. At three o'clock that afternoon they had decided to sell the property.

Elder Biesinger and I had gone over the property very thoroughly and had put a valuation on it by breaking it down into various lots and acres. We met with the attorney and he overpriced the property considerably. After discussing the matter for about an hour, he said, "Would you be willing to consider this purchase if I break this property down my way and arrive at its valuation?" And we hazarded the chance and said, "Yes."

He figured the property his way, not knowing what was in our hearts or that we had our own valuation on paper in our pockets. He passed his paper to us. We looked at it. It was exactly the same figure, right to the penny, we had figured that morning before going to his office. At five-thirty that evening we had the signed papers. The attorney had his stenographer go to his home to draw up the contract. It then had to go through the Land Court, the Aggregation Court, to determine whether the government would approve this purchase.

We had already been to the House of Parliament. President McKay and his party had had a visit with the deputy prime minister and we had visited with the Minister of Lands and Maori Affairs and others concerned. Following our visits to the different offices, and due to the favorable impression President McKay had made on these men, we were assured that the Minister of Lands and Maori Affairs would come and view the property.

In the meantime the property was turned down by the Aggregation Court but the Minister did not know this. At ten o'clock the next morning he came and we escorted him over the property and later he said, "It will take about two weeks to determine whether we will approve this purchase or not." And as we drove by the beautiful buildings under construction around the college, he turned to me and asked, "Mr. Mendenhall, what are your intentions concerning this school? Is it for Maoris only?" I said, "No sir, Mr. Corbett. This school is for Maoris and Pakihas (meaning English) alike. We believe in developing the Maori people to the highest standard of any people in this land," and he replied, "That is the very policy I believe in."

As we drove out of the gate Mr. Corbett turned to me and said, "Will you please take this dictation?" I took a pad from my pocket and he said something to this effect: "Received personal assurance this day from the Minister of Lands and Maori Affairs that the New Zealand Government will not oppose the acquisition of this property." And the transaction was closed. The property is now owned by the Church and will soon be ready to be used for the purpose of building a temple and the development of the school and farm lands. To my knowledge there is no other project underway in the Church that is comparable to this one in New Zealand.

In 1949 President Gordon C. Young bought the first piece of property in New Zealand for the Church on which the college was to be built. There is a very spiritual story back of this purchase and the way it was purchased, similar to the one I have just related. However, a portion of the property was acquired and later on additional property was purchased. Elder George Biesinger was sent to be the building director. They started out. They had no transportation permits. They had nothing with which to build. They had no timber. One of the first things they had to have was a brick plant. Then they had to have concrete. Then they had to have someone teach them how to proceed. They had to have labor, and so they established themselves on this basis.

They acquired a rock quarry and more than 4,000 acres of timberland.

Saturday, April 2

First Day

They purchased a sawmill and started to saw timber. They started to crush rock. The concrete started to arrive from America. They taught the Maori boys how to make bricks. They built a big planing mill in which to do their shop-work. They had to get all their machinery and materials as well as all the instruments that are necessary for building. They had to develop the property for farming and they went out and called about 200 boys to give of their time and service to this building program.

The boys came to the college and were supported by their parents and by the mission district. By the time President McKay arrived most of the boys had already worked for two years. Some of them had returned home. President McKay asked many of them if they knew anything about their trade when they first came to work and they told him no, they knew nothing about construction work.

Under the direction of Brother Biesinger the group sent there from Zion have done a marvelous job in directing this work. The women who have gone from here are working 12 and 14 hours a day on this program. Every one is working in the sawmills, in the rock crushers, in the lime pits, in the cement plant, in the planing mill, in the timber, and some are laying brick. You have never seen such a pioneer organization in your life, or conditions under which they are working. They have built 5 chapels and have made all the materials for these chapels right at the college site. The school is, undoubtedly, in progress now. Families are learning how to produce. They are learning how to live. Boys are learning trades. Every one is learning something about life during the construction of this school. It is amazing what is being done under the direction of these people who have been called to go there to direct this great work. It is the finest single missionary in New Zealand, and without a doubt it is the dawn of a great period of progress for the Church in New Zealand. Everyone has his eyes on this vast building program.

Brother Biesinger is on his sixth year in New Zealand. He has his wife and six children there, three of the children having been born in New Zealand. We cannot give this man too much credit for the things he has done. I want you to know that he has put in many more hours than most of us can appreciate, and his life is dedicated and devoted to this work, to the building of the school and to the building of missions and other projects in the Pacific.

President McKay assigned Elder Biesinger and me to go through the mission to call men to come to help build and to help finish the school. We were going to locate 15 or 20 men. We covered all but four districts of the mission and came back with 100 men. Some of them owned their own business. Some were carpenters, bricklayers. There were farmers, plumbers, and they just dropped their work and said, "We are willing to give our time and our services to the building of this college." They knew nothing at all about the temple at this time. They were only coming to build the college in response to a call.

About six o'clock one morning I was talking to a man and he said, "President Mendenhall, I have only been a member of the Church for two weeks. May I bring my wife and go to the college and build? I will spend the rest of my life doing anything you want me to do." Following this conversation another man came up to me and said, "I have milked cows all my life. You must have a dairy at the college. I have 12 cows and a milking plant and if you will bring a truck and take the 12 cows, I will give you both the milking plant and the cows and I will devote the rest of my life on the dairy."

We had a man who has spent most of his time in bed for over two years call to us one morning as we went by and wave a 50 pound note from his window. He asked us to come in, which we did. He said, "I can't help build this college but I will support one man for two years and here is a 50 pound note for my first installment in keeping that man on the job."

I was talking to a man on the college grounds one day and I said, "Who are you?" He replied, "I belong to so-and-so, who is my wife and she is a member of the Church." I said, "What are you doing here?" He answered, "I came here because my wife asked me to come." I said, "Do you do everything your wife asks you to do?" and he replied, "Sure I do. She is a Mormon and I believe what she says." I said, "Are you a member of the Church?" and he answered, "No sir." Then I asked, "Why aren't you a member of the Church?" and he replied, "Because my wife hasn't asked me."

Well, that is the way these things go. Today, that man is a member of the Church. Someone besides his wife asked him.

My brethren, these people have real faith. They are willing to respond to the call of authority, and this vast program that is in progress in New Zealand merits our humble prayers and our humble attention. I pray humbly that all of us may have an interest in these people. We owe a great deal to Matthew Cowley who spirited this program to a great extent and I testify to you and as President McKay would do also, that on many occasions while we were there, Brother Cowley's presence was actually felt.

President McKay talked of this one night in the little town of Tauranga, where Brother Cowley first started his early mission, and I testify to you that the grand and powerful spirit of that man, as well as his influence, was felt many times while President McKay was touring that mission.

At the close of the tour there was a great farewell given for President and Sister McKay at the Auckland Airport. Following the dancing and singing prepared for this farewell, an announcement was made over the loudspeaker that there would be a closing prayer. Everyone, including the airport officials removed their hats. A very personal friend of President McKay's stood up to the microphone and offered a most beautiful prayer. As I looked around I saw hundreds of people with their heads bowed. Jim Elkington, a Maori man whom President McKay has known for 34 years, gave this prayer and asked the blessings of the Lord to remain with President and Sister McKay and Brother Murdock. It was most touching indeed.

parting message to the people of New Zealand was read and I should like to read it to you.

"Our assigned week in New Zealand is ended—one short week. Truly time rushes by us like the wind. The welcome extended to Sister McKay, President Murdock and me by the people of this great country will ever remain one of our hearts' treasures. To the Government, County, Municipal and City Officials, to the many non-member friends, to the Church officials, missionaries in the field, and at the college, to the thousands of loyal members of the Church, who have so graciously expressed their love in the meaningful 'haere mai, haere mai', to each one and to all, we say with hearts full of gratitude to you, and especially for the Gospel of Jesus Christ that makes us one, 'Thank you. Goodbye, and God bless you.' Affectionately, David O. McKay."

The influence of the prophet of the Lord in all the Pacific is historical, and the blessings of the temple in the Pacific will do more for those people such as nothing in all the history of Mormonism has done for them. This brings to them the fulness of the Gospel.

God bless them for their desire to serve him and to keep his commandments, and I bear my witness to you I know that these things are true, and the Gospel is true, and my life is only important to me and to others as I keep the commandments of God and serve him, all of which I ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Typical of the world mission of the Church of Jesus Christ, we shall now ask you to come from under the Southern Cross of New Zealand up to near the Arctic Circle, where in June there is no night, as we hope the Gospel will shine in the hearts of all some day, night and day and forever.

When the Finnish Mission was first organized, President Henry A. Matis was appointed president. He has just recently been released. He is with us here tonight, and will be our next speaker.

Former President of the Finnish Mission

PRESIDENT MCKAY, President Richards, President Clark, President Smith, fellow brethren of the Priesthood, I am privileged to be with you this evening. I bring you greetings from Finland, as we would say—"Terveisia lähetyssaarnajilta ja jäseniltä Suomen lähetyksentältä"—or greetings from the missionaries, and members of the Finnish Mission.

I am appreciative, brethren, being the weakest of the weak, of standing before you and testifying to the goodness of our Heavenly Father to me in his work of the ministry. I am appreciative, also, of the opportunity that we have had of serving him, particularly in the country of Finland.

As a great missionary in the Book of Mormon, the Prophet Alma said, "O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people!" (Alma 29:1.)

Brethren, I have had the wish of my heart, I have been a missionary. I have had the opportunity of crying repentance to the Finnish people. Possibly a little personal history would give you some background as to why I am appreciative of this opportunity, and of this blessing.

I was born near the borders of Utah in a little mining town called Telluride, Colorado. After finishing college, I went to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in the Eastern States Mission, to hear the Gospel message. The Lord needed to prepare me, brethren, so that I could accept the truths of the Gospel. I bear testimony that he prepared me for the Gospel as well as that he prepared me to go to Finland. You see, it is unusual in that I am of Finnish descent. My father and mother were Finnish. They came to a land of promise not knowing about the Gospel. I was reared without the Gospel.

In 1904, Elder Francis M. Lyman dedicated the land of Finland to the preaching of the Gospel. Because there was no religious freedom at that time, very little proselyting was done, even in the Swedish language, which was universal at that time. However, the Lord blessed this little country, and in 1917 Finland gained its independence from Czarist Russia. In 1921 the Finns received their religious freedom. We know from history the Lord spared Finland, and in his wisdom and in his kindness, blessed that country so that it would receive the Gospel in its fullness, taught in the Finnish language.

It was under such circumstances, when the war-ridden but humble Finns thanked their God, our Heavenly Father, for their preservation, that Elder Ezra Taft Benson visited Finland during his tour of the European Missions in 1946. There, Elder Benson, accompanied by President Eben R. T. Blomquist of the Swedish Mission, in the little farming community of Larsmo in Northern Finland dedicated the land to the preaching of the Gospel, and particularly in the native Finnish tongue. After a very successful tour of the European missions, Elder Benson returned to his home and the Lord's work in Zion. Early in the spring of the following year, Elder Ezra Taft Benson left this city by train to go to an eastern city on business. The Lord, in some miraculous way, caused that Elder Benson would get off the train to make a purchase and that the train would leave without him. Brethren, this was unusual, but what was more unusual about the circumstances was that President John K. Edmunds of the Chicago Stake asked me to meet Elder Benson at the airport. I did this, thanking my Heavenly Father for the opportunity of being of service, but Elder Benson, who was looking for someone to open the mission in Finland, observed that I was interested in that country and that I was of Finnish extraction. I am thankful for that small incident, because I bear testimony to you that it was arranged by our Heavenly Father so that my wife, I, and our family could go to Finland to serve him.

We have been in Finland seven years. It is difficult to compress seven years into the few minutes that I stand before you, but, brethren, I wish to bear testimony to you that our Heavenly Father's spirit was with us during our time in the Finnish Mission. We have been proselyting among a sincere, humble people. The missionaries we have received have been the best in the Church and the Lord has sent them at a particular time to that mission that they might further his work there.

We enjoyed every minute of our mission. In fact, when we left Finland it was like leaving home. Also, when we left there were five hundred members, as well as eleven meeting places which were evidences of the Lord's blessings to us.

Time in athletic Finland is computed either before the XV Olympic Games or after the Olympic games in 1952 which were held in Helsinki. By permission of the First Presidency, we in the Finnish Mission received permission to assist in these Olympic Games. We not only assisted the American officials and athletes, but we also had the opportunity to teach them the Gospel principles, to make the Church known to the leading athletes of the world. One event, however, overshadowed the Olympics in 1952, and that was the visit of our beloved leader, President David O. McKay. The Finns will never forget the visit of President David O. McKay, Sister McKay, and their party. We were grateful to have Sister McKay spend her seventy-fifth birthday in Finland, on John's Day of "Juhannus" as the Finns would say. I wish to take this opportunity to thank President McKay again in behalf of the Finns, the Finnish members and those missionaries who were in Finland, for his visit during that time.

We remember that Finland always pays her debts. This is one thing that we as Americans remember. But do we as members of the Church know how that has been of benefit to the Church and to the Gospel? In 1948 Congress passed Public Law 265 in which all of the money that Finland pays on her war debt will be returned back to her in the form of scholarships and purchase of educational equipment. This gave the missionaries opportunity to hold English classes, to teach English, but primarily to teach the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Also, Sister Matis was asked to be the English examiner, which gave her the opportunity to contact many hundreds of Finnish citizens who have applied for these scholarships. Brethren, when we needed help the most, the Lord blessed us through the war debt that Finland owed the United States.

Probably little did President Brigham Young know when he sent the pioneers into Western Canada that his vision would assist the Finnish Mission. But, brethren, during the recent Korean War when very few missionaries were sent from the wards and stakes here in the United States, the missionaries from Canada saved the day for the Finnish Mission, as I am sure they did for other missions. The missionaries from Canada were a God-send to our little, young Finnish Mission.

In 1948, we had the opportunity of registering the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Finland, that is, to have the same status as any other church in that country. It gave us the opportunity of proselyting and of owning property in the name of the Church. It gave us the opportunity of printing literature and of holding meetings, but it also gave us the responsibility of keeping a register of all our Finnish members. Now, what did that mean, brethren? It meant that each member of another church who wanted to join the L.D.S. Church must go to his priest and say, "I want to be a Mormon." This is necessary before baptism. You see that our baptisms were reduced, but the strength of our members and the testimonies of our members were increased. We received sincere members, humble members, but, brethren, best of all, the Finnish Saints cannot be like Nicodemus of old, who went to his Master by night. The Finnish Saint must go to his Master and Savior, Jesus Christ, openly.

Another very important blessing from our Father in Heaven to the Finnish Mission and to the people there was the microfilming program. When permission was given to microfilm, the blessings that resulted from that were beyond measure. I was grateful, brethren, that I received my own genealogy on my mother's and father's lineage back to 1600. But more important is the fact that I received a further testimony of the Lord's goodness and of his plan in that one of my ancestors was the first Archbishop of Finland, Bishop Isak Rothevius. This Archbishop of the Lutheran Church began the keeping of Lutheran Church records, while I, his descendant, was instrumental in the microfilming of those same records.

Any story of the Finnish Mission, brethren, would not be complete unless I mentioned the names of Anders Johannsen and Lovisa Johannsen. This fine Swedish-speaking couple were the true Mormon pioneers in Finland. They joined the Church over seventy years ago. What is remarkable about this is that for about twenty-five years they had very little contact with the missionaries who came over from the Swedish Mission. Regardless of this loss of contact, they remained true and faithful to their covenants that they had made with their Heavenly Father in baptism. The descendants of Anders and Lovisa Johannsen were among that small group of Saints who met with Elder Benson in Larsmo on July 16, 1946, when he rededicated Finland to the preaching of the Gospel.

I bear testimony to you, brethren, that I know this Church is true. I know that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of our Heavenly Father sent to restore the Gospel truths on this earth. I bear you my testimony that I know that God lives, and that he answers prayers. I bear testimony to you that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the Redeemer of all mankind. I ask the Lord to bless you, to bless us during this Conference time and to bless his work throughout the world. I do this in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We shall now hear from President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BRETHREN, I pray that the Lord will bless me and will bless you in the very short time that I shall stand before you. The time is slipping. I know that President McKay has some very important matters to take up and likewise President Richards.

I had thought when I came that I might read to you from I Corinthians 12:11 and following, in which Paul, after reciting the blessings which come from the Gospel, and the gifts, compared the body of the Church to a human body. In the course of his discussion he said something to the effect that the head is not without the feet, the eyes not without the ear. He spoke of the unity necessary in the Church, spoke of the members that were seemingly important and of those who were not so important, and yet bound them all together as essentials in one whole.

I had thought that I might read that and then apply it a little differently, because in the latter part of his address on that point he noted that some were called to be apostles and some other members to the administration of the Church.

But I had thought I might give just a little different turn to that great sermon on the unity of the Church in Christ. I thought I might point out that our Gospel comes in "one package." We may not choose the particular thing that we like and ignore everything else, nor submerge nor subdue it. Everything that the Lord has revealed, except those things which have been fulfilled by his own life and mission and those things which in his wisdom he has relieved or absolved us from doing, such as the carrying on of the United Order, the building of the temple in Missouri, and like things,—everything else is part and parcel of the Gospel. We may not, I repeat, say to ourselves, nor to one another, that this is the important thing or that is the important thing, the others being non-essential or unessential. We have no right to draw distinctions and differences among the commandments of the Lord.

The Lord has given us nothing that is useless or unnecessary. He has filled the Scriptures with the things which we should do in order that we may gain salvation.

When we partake of the Sacrament we covenant to obey and keep his commandments. There are no exceptions. There are no distinctions, no differences.

And so I had thought that I would urge as a part of the unity concerning which I have taken the liberty always to speak in this meeting of the Priesthood, as a part of this unity we should try to be united in the matter of Gospel doctrines and practices, each and all of us trying so to serve the Lord that we might meet and satisfy the covenant which we make when we eat the bread and drink the water in remembrance of his body and of his blood.

I do not think this is a slight matter. There are groups, not many but some, who take this road to the left and call it the most important, another takes the road to the right with the same plea, another emphasizes this point, another that point, belittling some other points, and declaring that certain things are of the essence, and other things may be ignored. I do not read anywhere that the Lord has given to us, individually, the right to say which is most important. We should seek to keep all of the commandments. I repeat, speaking in the language of today, the Gospel is "one package."

I hope and pray that the Lord will give us that unity, along with all the other unities about which we know. I repeat what I have said so often here, that we being truly united, there is nothing that the Lord wants to be done that will fail of doing if we set our hands and our hearts thereto. And I pray again that we may see the necessity of accepting the Gospel and all of it, that we may be saved and exalted in his presence.

I bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Atoning Sacrifice and all that that involves. I bear my testimony to the Restoration of the Gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith, to the reality of the First Vision. I bear my testimony to the powers and to the authorities which were first given and then exercised by the Prophet, and that have been bestowed upon and exercised by all those who have followed in his place from Brigham Young down to President McKay. And I bear you my testimony that if I did not believe these things and accept them I should not feel that I was worthy to be a member of this Church. We must accept it all, belittling nothing, shadowing nothing, but openly espousing, advocating, living the principles of the Gospel.

God give us this power, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The congregation will now join in singing, "Do What Is Right." Under the leadership of Elder Cornwall.

The congregation and chorus sang the hymn, "Do What Is Right."

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

IT IS A HIGH privilege to greet you, my brethren of the Priesthood of our Lord. It is a very humbling thought to realize that I stand in the presence of this great congregation in the Tabernacle, and that my words are heard by the vast numbers gathered in the meeting places mentioned by President McKay. The power and the influence and the potentialities of this vast group of men overwhelm me. I think of what they have accomplished, and what they are still to accomplish in the advancement of our Father's Kingdom in this world.

I rejoice tonight in the brotherhood of the Holy Priesthood, in the regard and the love which we hold for each other, in our common purpose, and our mutual understanding. I love my brethren

Saturday, April 2

First Day

ren. I think I understand them. I never feel strange in their presence. We speak the same language. We are dominated by the same spirit, and I am sure that there is a bond uniting the brethren of the priesthood that transcends any earthly ties among men, and if the peoples of this world could only understand the bond that binds us together, they would begin to comprehend what is meant by the brotherhood of man.

So I rejoice, my brethren, in association with you. I am grateful to be united with you in giving our service to this greatest of all the causes in this world. I am grateful, as are you, for this remarkable power that God has given to us, this authentic endowment of his own divine authority to administer the ordinances of the Holy Gospel, to bless our fellowmen, and to bless our families and ourselves.

I look upon the priesthood as an investiture of power and wisdom which can come in equal measure from no other source of which I am aware. A man of the priesthood, as I understand it, is entitled to the inspiration of God in presiding over his family. If he is called to office, he is entitled to inspiration to guide him in the administration of his office. If he is called to go out into the mission field,—we have received notable examples of such calls tonight, he is entitled to receive the great inspiration that the Lord gives to men in the performance of their duty. If he is called on to bless the sick, he has the divine power to bestow the blessings that come of the Lord. If he is called on to ordain his fellowmen, he has the authentic authority to give to them the Holy Priesthood and the offices therein.

All of these blessings, which almost defy in their magnitude our finite conception, belong to and are a part of the Holy Priesthood which we bear. We are entitled to exercise them, these high privileges, and bestow these blessings, if we live to be worthy of the spirit and power of the priesthood, keeping all the commandments, as President Clark has so well said,—not a few, but all the commandments,—in order that we may be true vessels of the Lord into which his Holy Spirit may be poured, and out of which that Spirit may come to those to whom we minister.

I pray, my brethren, that we may appreciate this wonderful gift that has come to us, and show by our lives that we are grateful to our Lord for it. I look upon the priesthood as an instrumentality of service. I am sure that it was not bestowed upon any of us merely for his own aggrandizement, but it was given to men to use for the blessing of themselves, their families, and their fellowmen, and the more it is used the more potent it becomes within the servant of the Lord who ministers under the power of the Holy Priesthood.

We are told very definitely in that great section of the Doctrine and Covenants, which I often characterize as the Constitution of the priesthood, that one cannot minister in any degree of unrighteousness, for if he do so, amen to the priesthood of that man. His effort, his labors, his ministry will not be efficacious. He must have the background of righteousness to make him able, capable, of administering the powers of the Holy Priesthood.

I cannot forbear to read to you those well-known verses of the conclusion of the 121st Section of the Doctrine and Covenants which express in such beautiful language, I sometimes think the most beautiful to be found in all literature, the spirit of the priesthood as it has come to us with the fulness of the everlasting Gospel.

"Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven.

"The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth; and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee forever and ever." (D. & C. 121:45-46.)

Where could we expect to secure a more encouraging and hopeful promise than in those words of latter-day scripture? I pray that we may live to be the beneficiaries of that incomparable pronouncement.

Now, my brethren, if I have any duty to counsel, I would like to say just a word, looking toward the future that may await us, a word that has oft been repeated in assemblies of this kind. I am sure that it is wise to look to the future. I am sure that in our affairs we would do well to provide for such safeguards in our finances, in our business expansions, as to meet a day that may not be quite so propitious as recent times have been. I hope that my brethren will not have to pass through some of the experiences I have seen passed through before, and I believe that with caution and wisdom they can avoid some of those tragedies that have come in times past.

I have always believed, my brethren, that gambling is not legitimate business. I have always believed that legitimate business contemplates a fair exchange of services for services or property, or property for property, in which exchange both parties benefit. I have always believed that any attempts to get something for nothing, to take undue chances, is not only attended with demoralization of business integrity, but often with great tragedy. In my experience of half a century I have seen many of those tragedies. And so, out of my regard for you I warn you against unwise expansion, and incurrence of debt, but to keep as well as you may within safe grounds, that the circumstances of the future may not rise to plague you and embarrass you, and I believe that the Lord would have you do this because I believe he wants you free—free from the bondage of onerous and embarrassing debts, free from obligations to creditors that might impair your service in his great Cause.

I believe he wants you free to perform his work, to respond to the calls that he makes of you, and I have seen altogether too many in a position of finding it difficult to respond to such calls when they are under the bondage of debt.

The Lord bless you that wisdom may come with your priesthood,—a superior wisdom,—and a discernment which the Spirit of the Lord gives to you. May all be well with you. You have done a great work for the Church, and I know you stand ready to continue that great service, and I know that no greater happiness can come into your lives than the satisfaction which follows from sincere, devoted, helpful service in the Cause of our Lord.

May that unity which President Clark pleads for prevail among us, that the bonds of brotherhood may be strengthened even as the years go by. The Lord bless us that that brotherhood may be brought to the support of our beloved President who represents all of us in his great administration of this work and its extension throughout this world, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

THIS HAS been truly a spiritual hour. Everyone present has felt the power of his Priesthood. Everyone has felt the sincerity in the testimonies that have been borne by our Brethren.

Messages that are coming from the assemblies mentioned at the opening of the meeting indicate that they, too, are partaking of this same spirit. I trust that my duty in answering some of your questions of a practical nature may not detract in any way, but if possible add to the spiritual influence thus far manifested.

The question has been asked: Is it proper in the administration of ward affairs, for the bishop to add to the budget assignment for ward operations, the cost of one or more of the Church magazines? If so, should he designate the magazine that the members of the ward should take? The answer: No ward, stake, or mission is under obligation to raise an assigned quota for any magazine published by the Church, and it should not be included in the budget.

Second: Should a member of the bishopric be present always in the Junior Sunday School when the Sacrament is administered in view of the fact that the Junior Sunday School is presided over by sisters? This answer should be given by the Superintendency of the Sunday School, but we will mention this one fact: There should be a member of the Bishopric present, or one appointed by them holding the Melchizedek Priesthood in the Junior Sunday School when the Sacrament is administered.

Saturday, April 2

Next, there is a question which indicates the necessity of being more careful about permitting fathers or other relatives to assist in ordinances of the Fast Meeting. For example, if a father asks to baptize his son, the bishop of course will know whether the father is worthy, or whether he holds the Priesthood. But suppose the father of the son lives in another ward, and appears at the baptismal service and requests the right to baptize. The bishop who has that baptismal service under his direction, should be sure that this father has the authority, and that will apply in blessing a child, or in confirming a baptized member. It is suggested, therefore, that the bishop will explain in announcing a baptismal ceremony or the confirmation, that if any father belonging to another ward wishes to participate he should apply to the bishop before the ordinance, and the bishop should request him to bring his recommendation from the ward of which he is a member. We need not particularize to tell you why.

Next: It is reported that recently some members who have been here for only a few years, indeed a few months, from the mission field, entered the temple and were unable, of course, to understand the ceremony, they could not understand the English language. Bishops, under these conditions, it would be well for you not to be in a hurry to issue recommends to the temple to those who do not understand the services nor the ordinances. Their going might prove more injurious to them than helpful.

In order to assist members of the Church better to understand the temple ceremony, arrangements are being made, and have been made for them to hear that ceremony in their native tongue. This will apply now already to six, possibly seven, nationalities. The ceremony has been translated into other languages and as fast as we possibly can, notice will be given when the ceremony will be presented to particular nationalities. We already have the ceremony in Spanish, as you know, with good results. We have already had a ceremony in the temple in the Swedish language. The ceremony is now in German, about completed in Norwegian, Danish, French, and the Dutch language. Bishops, you may very rightfully and wisely, ask the members who apply to you for recommends to the temple, to wait a few weeks, probably months, and first hear the ceremony, impressive as it is, in their native tongue. Then, afterwards, they may go through and will understand the significance of it.

Indeed, there are of those who speak the English language, some who do not comprehend the significance of that holy ordinance.

Many of our people write over to vicars for information in foreign countries, particularly in England. Sometimes they are unable to furnish the records, even if they are willing, the Church officials in England, and because the law will not permit them to send money out of England, they are therefore unable to return the funds you have sent. Do you get that condition? You cannot get money back; they cannot furnish you the information. People seeking genealogical information, therefore, from England, should carry on their correspondence through the Genealogical Office, and not write directly to the Churchmen in England.

There are one or two other items but the Brethren of the Twelve will present those to you on their visits.

I would just like to say a few words in conclusion, and I hope not to trespass too much upon your time. In September 1946, the Board of Directors of the United States Steel held an official meeting here in this city. At the conclusion of their directors meeting they invited some of the officials of the Church to a dinner as their guests. There were present in that group men nationally known throughout business circles, Mr. Irving S. Olds, Chairman of the Board, Mr. Sewell L. Avery, and others. Mr. Olds was the Master of Ceremonies. At the conclusion of that dinner, Mr. Olds said, "Now, we have not planned for any speeches, but if any present would like to make any comments or remarks, now is the time."

Mr. Nathan L. Miller, Director and General Counsel for the United States Steel Corporation, former Governor of New York State, arose. I remember well his opening sentence: "I am one of those New Englanders who have harbored all the ill-stories that have been circulated about the Mormons; but I will confess that this visit has extended my horizons!" He then said, "No one can walk or drive around this city, observe its cleanliness, its wide, well-kept streets, the physical accomplishments evident on every hand without being impressed with a feeling that there is something peculiarly distinctive here—something different from that felt in any other city. I don't know," he continued, "whether to call it a spirituality—yes, that is it!—there is evidence of a spirituality, the lack of which is felt in other cities." He said he had been searching for the source of it; but could not find that source until he heard the tributes paid the Pioneers during a brief interview in the office of the First Presidency. There was a faith, a great ideal, a greatness among the founders of this State which the descendants evidently have succeeded in a degree to hold. "Your very isolation," he continued, "has been a contributing factor in helping the Pioneers to maintain the high standards that characterized the lives of the founders of this State."

Mr. Miller has now passed, but I wish he had been here tonight and partaken of the spirit of these men mentioned, who are devoting their all to the advancement of the work.

Brother Mendenhall left his own affairs and from a business standpoint, they require great directing, went to New Zealand on his own responsibility and appointed many of those men who directed those builders of the school, and responded to the second appointment willingly, and to another appointment. It matters not what it costs. Brother Biesinger, down there, mentioned by Brother Mendenhall, has left his own business. I asked him down there, "What has become of your business?" He said, "That is all right, it is gone, but I am here. This is my mission now." All he has he would like to give to the work.

I met Brother Going down there who is building fifteen of our chapels in Samoa. His business, too, is not so successful. He said, "I can arrange that. I will be ready to devote all the time that is necessary."

Brother Matis said nothing other than that he has spent seven years over in the mission field, but he had a prosperous position, an important position with an important company who said, "Yes, we will give him a leave of absence." When that leave of absence was up we communicated with Brother Matis. "No," he said, "this is my mission. Do not worry about that. I will be all right." And so another year passed and another year, and seven years. You have heard his testimony tonight how God has blessed him.

This afternoon Brother Moyle brought Brother Leo Ellsworth into the office. He is a prosperous man of responsibility, governing probably hundreds of thousands of dollars. He had just built a new home. He and his wife had not even completed their landscaping. The call came to him to help the Church in a great enterprise. I did not know that until this afternoon. They left their new house and have spent months now on this other call. He left his own business. My heart was moved when I heard him say, "When I came back I found my business even better than when I left it." He bore testimony of how the Lord had blessed him—"And this is my work now."

The brother who will offer the benediction tonight, President of the Eastern States Mission, received word that unless he could get home, give up his mission, he would lose his business. Well, he had received an honorable release but he said nothing about this threatened loss of his business unless he would give up his work, and he was going to say nothing about it.

These are but a few practical instances of the faith and devotion of the leaders and members of the Church of Jesus Christ. I bear you testimony tonight that the power, the spiritual power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ which comes from a testimony of the truth of the revealed and Restored Gospel is operative throughout the entire Church, and it is that power that gives the strength to it. It is the power of God unto salvation. Put the Lord to the test and you will find that he will answer and prove to you that he is overruling your affairs as well as the Church affairs. Financially, you may lose something, but the spiritual gain will far outweigh that seemingly financial loss.

First Day

Even before we came into this meeting tonight, one of the bishops said to me (I happened to meet him): "Since my appointment, it is marvelous what the Lord has done for us, and how he has opened up the way."

And so, my beloved brethren, in behalf of all the Church, and particularly in behalf of the General Authorities, I thank you for your devotion, for your faith in the destiny of God's Church. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6:33.)

May the Lord give us power so to do, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

I will not take time to read all these, although you would probably be interested. Notwithstanding this most unusual storm, we have on the Tabernacle Grounds, 7,987 men of the Priesthood, 8,000 approximately. In the other assemblies, 16,747, a total tonight in the Priesthood Meeting of 24,734. This is the largest on record.

The Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir will sing, "Thou Art Repose," under the direction of Elder Cornwall, after which President Delbert G. Taylor, president of the Eastern States Mission, will offer the benediction.

Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock we will meet in the Tabernacle in the second session of our Conference. The Church of the Air Broadcast will be from 8:00 to 8:30 o'clock tomorrow morning. Elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve will be the speaker. The Tabernacle Choir Broadcast will be from 9:00 to 9:30. Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Twelve, will be heard over NBC "Faith in Action" series tomorrow morning, the program to be released locally over KDYL from 8:45 to 9:00 a.m.

Those desiring to attend the Church of the Air and the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast must be in their seats at 7:50 a.m. It is requested that the audience during the broadcast refrain from making any noise. Large crowds will undoubtedly be waiting outside the closed doors. We suggest and earnestly plead with those thus standing that they be courteous when the doors are opened and considerate of others in the crowd. Please avoid pushing or crowding. Let us remember to be courteous and considerate to others who are also standing, and tonight we have had an excellent demonstration of reverence, and also of the interest in this proceeding. Hundreds are standing up in the gallery and in the doorways. I have not seen one, not one, move from his position, although it must be tiresome after two hours,—an example, brethren, for all the Church in all our assemblies. God bless you all.

Singing by the Men's Chorus, "Thou Art Repose."

President David O. McKay:

Thank you, brethren. Brother Romney, who offered the invocation, is one other who has given of his interests. President Taylor will now offer the benediction.

The closing prayer was offered by President Delbert G. Taylor of the Eastern States Mission.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETINGS

CHURCH OF THE AIR

Columbia Broadcasting Company's Church of the Air was presented at 8:00 a.m., Sunday, April 3, 1955. The program as presented was as follows:

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for this service, with Frank W. Asper at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

Music: Organ and humming choir: "Sweet Is the Work."

Announcer: The Church of the Air is presented by CBS Radio so that men of many faiths may speak to a nationwide congregation. Today's service comes to you from the "Mormon" Tabernacle on Temple Square, through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City, Utah, where the annual General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is this week in session. The speaker will be Elder Harold B. Lee, member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church. Music will be by the Tabernacle Choir, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Frank Asper at the organ.

The Service opens on a theme from Psalm 137: "Here by Babylon's wave, though heathen hands have bound us, though afar from our land, the pains of death surround us; Sion! Thy men still in our heart we are keeping, and still we turn to Thee, our eyes all sad with weeping."

(The Choir sang: "By Babylon's Wave."—Gounod.)

Announcer: We shall now hear on this Church of the Air Service, Elder Harold B. Lee, a member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, frequently referred to as the "Mormon" Church. Educator, former Commissioner of Salt Lake City, Chairman of the Servicemen's Committee, and Managing Director of the Church Welfare Program, Brother Lee has titled today's talk: "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord."

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

THE SUNDAY before Easter is generally celebrated by many Christian sects as Palm Sunday in commemoration of our Lord's triumphal entry into Jerusalem.

My text today is taken from the "Hosanna shout" which sounded from the multitude who jubilantly acclaimed Jesus, the lowly Nazarene as he rode triumphantly into Jerusalem from Bethany on a colt which had been borrowed for that occasion. As the animal upon which he rode had been designated in their literature as the "ancient symbol of Jewish royalty"* and their acquaintanceship with the might of His Messianic power impressed the appropriateness of his kingly right to such an entry, they cast their garments before him and cast palm branches and other foliage in His path as though carpeting the way of a king. What might at first have been but the humble testimony of a faithful few, increased into a mighty chorus of voices as the multitude shouted in harmony:

Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna, to the Son of David.

And then perhaps as they remembered the angels' announcement to the shepherds on the night of His birth, they reverently repeated the theme of the angels' song: "Peace in heaven, and glory in the highest." And again, probably remembering the charge he had given His disciples to carry on after he would be taken from them, and as a supplication for their Master and those who would carry on after His ascension, as well as in the remembrance of the ancient prophets whom they revered, came the expressions of adulation from the multitude: "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

At the commencement of His ministry, He seemingly had seldom, and then only guardedly, declared that He was the Christ who should take away the sins of the world, but now His earthly ministry was reaching a consummation and His fearful agony on the cross was near. It seemed altogether appropriate that He should now demonstrate His kingly place as the King of Kings and the Prince of Peace. Thus demonstrated, His devoted disciples could thereafter likewise bear witness to the divinity of His mission as the Savior of mankind and the "rock" upon which His church was to be founded in the Meridian of Times.

There was an occasion during His ministry when His chiefest Apostle, Peter, had fervently declared his faith and testimony of the divinity of the mission of the Master: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God." The Lord had replied to Peter by declaring, "flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven" and that upon "this rock" or in other words, the revealed testimony of the Holy Ghost, the revelation that Jesus is the Christ—His Church is founded and "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It was of this same foundation upon which the Church was laid to which the Apostle Paul made reference when he wrote to the Ephesian Saints: "Now therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God; And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone." (Eph. 2:19-20.)

In the few minutes allotted to me in this brief Church of the Air address, I would like to make some explanation as to just "how blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord", from that day even to the present time.

At the commencement of His ministry, the Master chose twelve men whom he separated from the rest by the name, Apostles. These were to be special witnesses of the sanctity of His life, and of His divine mission, and to be responsible for transmitting to the latest posterity, a genuine account of His doctrines, and principles, and ordinances essential to the salvation of the human soul. History records that these men, as judged by worldly standards, were "illiterate, poor, and of mean extraction." It would seem that He avoided using in this ministry, persons endowed with the advantages of fortune or birth or enriched with the treasures of eloquence or learning, lest "the fruits of their embassy, and the progress of the gospel should be attributed to human and natural causes." Mosheim.

True servants in the Kingdom of God, when properly authorized, received an endowment of holy power except for which their ministry would be as the "tinkling of brass and the sounding of cymbals." This heavenly endowment to His chosen Twelve, came as a result of three sacred experiences. First, they were baptized of water, maybe by John the Baptist, or possibly as the only ones He did baptize, by the Master, himself, for John records that He and His disciples were in Judea "and there He tarried with them, and baptized." (John 3:22) Then He "breathed on them and said unto them, receive ye the Holy Ghost," (John 20:22) which in all likelihood was the confirmation and the commission to receive the Holy Ghost, or the baptism of the Spirit, by the laying on of hands for that was the procedure followed thereafter by His disciples.

The meaning of this baptism of water and of the Holy Ghost by one who comes in the name of the Lord, is best understood by the words of a prophet on the Western Continent. Addressing a group of baptized converts he said this: "There is no other name given whereby salvation cometh; therefore I would that you should take upon you the name of Christ, all of you that have entered into the covenant with God that ye should be obedient unto the end of your lives." (Mosiah 5:8)

The third of the remarkable spiritual experiences to which the disciples were privileged is thus described by the Master, himself: "Ye have not chosen me but I have chosen you and ordained you,—that whatsoever ye should ask the Father in my name He may give it you." (John 15:16) Try to imagine if you can, being "called" by the Master and "ordained" under His hands. That these ordinations resulted in an endowment of power from on high as well as giving authority to act officially as the Lord's representatives, is well attested by the miraculous events that followed, which made of them, "men different" because of that divine commission.

Not alone were these special apostolic witnesses to receive and enjoy these heavenly gifts. They were commissioned to transmit them by ordinations to others who had received the witness of the divine mission of the risen Lord. Acting by authority of their priestly office, it was as though the Lord were saying as He did through a prophet in recent times: "And I will lay my hand upon you by the hand of my servant . . . and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost." (Doc. & Cov. 36:2)

The historians have given us a summary and a thrilling description of how men so chosen and so ordained were blessed with heavenly gifts because they "came in the name of the Lord."

After the departure of Jesus from them, he gave them the first proof of that majesty and power by which he was exalted, by the radiant gift of the Holy Ghost upon them on the day of Pentecost according to His promise . . . Dr. Mosheim in his Ecclesiastical history writes that "no sooner had the apostles received this special gift, this celestial guide, than their ignorance was turned into light, their doubts into certainty, their fears into firm and invincible fortitude, and their former backwardness into an ardent and inextinguishable zeal . . ." The growth of the Church among the Gentile nations during this period was most phenomenal. How was it possible that a handful of apostles, who as fishermen and publicans could engage the learned and the mighty as well as the simple and those of low degree to forsake their religion and embrace a new religion? There can be but one answer to that question. There were undoubted marks of a celestial power, perpetually attending their ministry. There was in their very language an "incredible energy or amazing power of sending light into the understanding and conviction of the heart."* Then the historians enumerate the miracles, the gift of prophecy, the power of discernment, a contempt for riches, and a serene tranquility in the face of death, all the while maintaining their lives above reproach, and then conclude with this declaration: "Thus were the messengers of the divine Savior, the heralds of his spiritual and immortal kingdom, furnished for their glorious work as the voice of ancient history so loudly testifies."*

As we review again the matchless and unselfish devotion of these early prophets and martyrs to the gospel of Christ, may we bow in reverence and repeat with a greater appreciation and comprehension as with the multitude in Jerusalem on the occasion of the triumphal entry the words: "How blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

The place of these heaven-endowed messengers who represent the Lord in every dispensation of the gospel upon the earth may be illustrated by an incident related by a traveler in northern Europe. Our traveler was leaving by boat from Stockholm, Sweden out into the Baltic Sea. To do so, the boat had to pass through a thousand or more islands. Standing on the foreward deck, the traveler found himself becoming impatient because of what seemed to him to be a careless course. Why not a course near to this island or another and more interesting than the one the pilot had chosen? Almost in exasperation he was saying to himself, "What's wrong with the old pilot? Has he lost his sense of direction? Suddenly he was aware of markers along the charted course which appeared as mere broom handles sticking up in the water. Someone had carefully explored these channels and had charted the safest course for ships to take. So it is in life's course on the way to immortality and eternal life: "God's engineers" by following a blueprint made in heaven, have charted the course for safest and happiest passage and have forewarned us of the danger areas.

How dreary and frustrated is the human soul who not only does not come "in the name of the Lord," but who disregards the guide-posts marked out by "God's engineers" of the above illustration! Of this the Apostle to the Gentiles wrote: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." (I Cor. 15:19) That misery certainly can only be matched in him who in this life, has no faith or hope in Christ. Without such faith, man is, as someone has said, "but a creature of circumstance." Truly, as the Master instructed his faithful Peter, His Church, the true religion in which He was the "chief cornerstone" was to be built upon a "rock," the rock of revelation. All others are tossed about by storm on the waves of time.

But what strength and fortitude comes to him who puts his trust in the Lord! I recently heard a missionary for the Church tell of an incident which occurred in an atheist-dominated country. A young student with a fervent belief in God and in the mission of the Savior of the world was ridiculed and abused by her teacher who scorned the idea of a God. As a punishment, the teacher required that she write twenty times, "There is no God." The young student refused. In a rage the teacher demanded that she write her denial of God, fifty times and added, as a veiled threat, "If you don't, something terrible will happen." That night mother and daughter fasted and prayed far into the night to that God whom they could not and dared not deny. When school time came the next morning, mother and daughter went to see the teacher. The school convened and the teacher had not arrived. As they waited, the principal of the school came to inform them that the teacher had died suddenly in the night of a heart attack. Something terrible had happened but not to this young girl who came without fear "in the name of the Lord."

The triumphal entry of Jesus into Jerusalem, which is commemorated on this Sunday was in truth but a prelude to the greater day of triumph only a few days distant. Before His crucifixion, He had spoken of His personal triumph over worldly things, when He said: "In me ye might have peace. In the world ye have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." (John 16: 33) But there was yet that greater day of victory when he triumphed over death and opened the way to a universal resurrection. The Apostle Paul in exultation wrote to the Corinthians: "Death is swallowed up in victory—O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? . . . Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." (I Cor. 15:54-7)

Today as did they in past dispensations, we declare boldly, that "The fundamental principles of our religion are the testimony of the Apostles and Prophets concerning Jesus Christ, that He died, was buried, and rose again the third day, and ascended into heaven; and all other things which pertain to our religion are only appendages to it."*

O that the inhabitants of an unrepentant world would humble themselves and with faith in the Redeemer of mankind join in the chorus of the multitude who welcomed the Master into the Holy City, "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord! Hosanna to the Son of David. Peace in heaven and glory in the highest. Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." For that I pray humbly in the name of the King of Kings, Jesus Christ, Amen.

Of the seventh day preceding Easter, John the Beloved and others record how the multitude acknowledged the Master for what He was: the King of Israel, Messiah, and Saviour. Less than one week later, with false accusation and the mockeries of men, he was on the cross—and there was death and darkness and despair. But these were followed by dawn and light and life, by resurrection and redemption from death. Some nineteen centuries have passed since then, and the "opposition in all things" is still sharply in evidence: Still there is the struggle of evil and good, error and truth, darkness and light, death and life. But despite all discouragements, and sometimes despair, there is the blessed reassuring certainty that the Lord God who gave us life and made us in His image will, with our willingness, lead us to further light, to fuller life, and happiness. For this cause were all the commandments given—and for this He sent His only begotten Son not to condemn, but to save the world<sup>1</sup>—that same beloved Son who said: "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick"<sup>2</sup>—that same beloved Son who said: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."<sup>3</sup> And to the sick, the suffering, the sorrowing, to the injured and offended, to the puzzled and perplexed, to those withdrawn within themselves, to the falsely dealt with and deceived, to those who have lost their loved ones, to those who live in loneliness—to all, there is help from Him who even now sits at His Father's side, and who was sent to encourage, to heal, to love, to lift the lives of men, to lead the way to happiness and everlasting life. What else would any father wish for his children? What else would we wish for our own—but happiness and everlasting life with our loved ones? And for this cause are all the counsels and commandments of God given. There are no unessential commandments, none that we can safely ignore or set aside (unless God shall withdraw it or declare it fulfilled). And blessedly, the same sure things that lead to happiness hereafter, lead also to happiness here. We would say, in words recorded by John: "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world"<sup>4</sup> but to save. We would say, in the words uttered at the hour of His ascension, that ". . . this same Jesus . . . shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."<sup>5</sup> And we would say in the words of Job, but with conviction of our own: ". . . I know that my Redeemer liveth . . ."<sup>6</sup>

SUNDAY MORNING GENERAL CONFERENCE SESSION

The Sunday morning general session commenced promptly at 10:00 a.m., with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

The Tabernacle was crowded to capacity with people who had assembled early in the morning to listen to the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast and the Conference session which followed. Notwithstanding the weather, the Assembly Hall and the Barratt Hall were also crowded with people who were unable to obtain accommodation in the Tabernacle, and who attended the Conference services by means of television as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle. The services were also televised over eighteen television stations in Utah, Idaho, Oregon, Nevada, Arizona, California, Washington and Colorado. By arrangement with KSL Radio Station of Salt Lake City, provision was made for the services to be broadcast over a large number of radio stations.

The Tabernacle Choir furnished the music for this session.

President David O. McKay:

This Sunday morning thousands are assembled in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and other thousands are listening in over radio and television stations. This is the second session of the One Hundred Twenty-fifth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The first session was not broadcast. It was a General Priesthood meeting held last evening in the Tabernacle, with overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall, in Barratt Hall, and by direct wire over a public address system to members of the Priesthood assembled in 17 Church buildings in Utah; 10 in Idaho; 2 in Wyoming; 3 in Nevada; 1 in Colorado; 5 in Washington; 2 in Oregon; 2 in Arizona and 32 in California; a total of 73 buildings in which the Priesthood met last evening.

For your interest we should like to say that as nearly as the ushers could count there were assembled in that Priesthood meeting last evening over 25,000 men and boys — 24,734 reported last evening, with 20 other places to account for, and this morning we have received an additional 419, making, as I say, over 25,000, — the largest Priesthood Meeting ever held in the Church.

The speakers last evening were Elders Wendell B. Mendenhall, president of the San Joaquin Stake, and Henry A. Matis, formerly president of the Finnish Mission, and members of the First Presidency.

The Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music.

Elder Harold B. Lee was the speaker on Columbia's Church of the Air program this morning at 8 o'clock, and Elder Hugh B. Brown was heard over NBC network Faith in Action series from 8:45 to 9 a.m.

We are now assembled, as I stated, in the second session of the One Hundred Twenty-Fifth Annual Conference of the Church. All the General Authorities of the Church, I think, are in attendance. Elder Joseph Anderson is Clerk of the Conference. These services and all general sessions of the Conference will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall, in Barratt Hall, and over a public address system and by television.

The services this morning will also be televised over KSL, Channel 5 of Salt Lake City, and over 18 television stations in Utah, Idaho, Oregon, Nevada, Arizona, California, Washington, and Colorado.

They likewise will be heard over Radio Station KSL of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over 14 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Oregon, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas. The names of these stations have already been announced to the television and radio audiences.

We desire most appreciatively to express our gratitude to these various television and radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts. It is truly a great service.

To the audience, those who are assembled in person, and to the thousands comprising the television and radio audiences, the First Presidency and General Authorities extend a most hearty welcome, and pray that our souls may be uplifted and inspired by our assembling together in this great Conference of the Church. God bless you all.

We have greetings from a number of people, — telegrams from those who were listening in to the Priesthood Meeting—all expressing appreciation for the opportunity they had. We shall not take time to read these telegrams, but express appreciation to those who have sent them.

We acknowledge the presence of prominent visitors who are in attendance this morning. It is difficult to name all, but we have asked for names of those. We may miss some. We have the Secretary of Agriculture, our fellow-worker in the Twelve, Elder Ezra Taft Benson; United States Senators, Arthur V. Watkins and Wallace F. Bennett; Representatives in the House, I think, William A. Dawson, and H. Aldous Dixon, although I cannot see them; the Governor of the State, the Honorable J. Bracken Lee; Mayor of the City the Honorable Earl J. Glade; Ernest L. Wilkinson of the educators, and president of the B.Y.U.; Dr. A. Ray Olpin, president of the University of Utah; Dr. Daryl Chase, president of the Utah State Agricultural College; Dr. Arthur Bruhm of the Dixie College; Dr. E. Allan Bateman, State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

I see a telegram from Superintendent M. Lynn Bennion that he was unable to attend this morning because of conditions that prevented his coming. We have with us also Dr. William P. Miller, president of Weber College; Dr. John L. Clarke, president of Ricks College; Dr. Lester B. Whetten of Snow College; Dr. Royden Braithwaite of the Agricultural College; Dr. Howard McDonald, president of Los Angeles State College; others whom probably we have not observed will please realize that you are welcomed with these whom I have named.

We have before us also our mission presidents from the United States, Mexico, Guatemala, Canada; stake presidents, counselors, and bishops. To all we extend a hearty welcome and express satisfaction and joy in your presence and your cooperative spirit in these gatherings of this great Conference.

The Choir singing for this morning's session will be by the Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ. The Choir and congregation will now join in singing, "High on the Mountain Top," with Elder Richard P. Condie conducting.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Alvin R. Dyer, president of the Central States Mission.

All join with the Choir in singing.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "High On the Mountain Top."

Elder Alvin R. Dyer, President of the Central States Mission, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

"The Lord's Prayer" will be sung by the Tabernacle Choir, conducted by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall. Following the Choir's singing we shall hear from President David O. McKay.

The Choir sang an anthem, "The Lord's Prayer,"—Gates.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters: The sense of responsibility of this moment is overwhelming. In anticipation of it I have prayed earnestly, daily, for inspiration and strength, and now I ask you for your sympathetic co-operation and your prayers that the interests of the Church, the establishing of the kingdom of God among men, may be enhanced.

"And lift up an ensign of peace, and make a proclamation for peace unto the ends of the earth." (D. & C. 105:39.)

This quotation is from a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith when Zion's Camp was at Fishing River, June 22, 1834. In that one sentence, the Lord sets forth one of the great purposes of his Church—to bring about harmony in human relations; in the individual to experience a mental or spiritual state in which there is personal freedom from "disquieting or perturbing" conditions that might interfere with the consummation of God's purposes to bring about the immortality and eternal life of man.

Considering world conditions, I think it is highly gratifying to note the commendable efforts, the wise, conservative judgment manifest by the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and other sincere statesmen in Congress, including our own worthy Senators and Representatives to foster the cause of peace and to avert a world-wide clash of arms. But it is very apparent that international conditions at present centering at Quemoy and Matsu Islands are filled with such volatile problems that a defiant move on the part of Chinese communists might disrupt the already precarious peace of the world.

We love peace, but not peace at any price. There is a peace more destructive of the manhood of living man than war is destructive of the body. "Chains are worse than bayonets."

After the Savior's resurrection when he appeared to his disciples assembled in an upper room, his divine greeting was "Peace be unto you." (John 20:19.) Even before his resurrection, he said: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." (Ibid., 14:27.)

We believe firmly that the basis upon which world peace may be permanently obtained is not by sowing seeds of distrust and suspicion in people's minds; not by engendering enmity and hatred in human hearts; not by individuals or nations arrogating to themselves the claim of possessing all wisdom, or the only culture worth having; not by war with resulting suffering and death from submarines, poison gas, or explosions of nuclear bombs. No! The peace that will be permanent must be founded upon the principles of righteousness as taught and exemplified by the Prince of Peace, our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, "... for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:12.)

My theme this morning is: What are we doing as a Church and as members thereof to proclaim this peace?

Recently, as you know, it was my privilege and duty, accompanied by Sister McKay and President Franklin J. Murdock, who acted as secretary, to visit some of the far-off missions of the Church.

With the theme in mind of proclaiming the gospel of peace to the inhabitants of the world, I should like to comment on observations made of four effective factors operative in the spreading of the gospel.

First, we note the excellent work being done by the 11,500 missionaries throughout the world, 390 of whom it was our privilege to meet on this recent tour. Each one of these pays his or her own expenses, conforms to the requirements and laws of the country, and teaches the principles that constitute the basis of the restored religion of Jesus Christ. All are appointed messengers proclaiming the glad tidings of the restored gospel, giving of themselves, as well as of their means for the good of the world.

A second favorable factor is a better understanding by officials of governments and municipalities regarding the purposes of Mormon missionary work. Old stories that used to be extant accusing missionaries of sinister motives are now repeated only by the prejudiced and uninformed. United States consuls, or their representatives, mayors of municipalities, and other officials, met us, bade us welcome, and proffered to render any service to make our visit profitable. Newspaper reporters, radio announcers, television representatives were on hand to learn the purposes of the tour, and without exception gave fair and unprejudiced reports of our visit.

The third observation (and this is important) is the need to put forth every effort within reason and practicability to place within reach of Church members in these distant missions every educational and spiritual privilege that the Church has to offer.

It is only recently that some of these missions have been visited by a General Authority. With modern means of transportation available, it is now possible and very practical to have these far-off missions visited as the missions here in the United States have been visited. Accordingly, and this you will be pleased to hear, at a meeting of the First Presidency and Council of the Twelve held March 17, 1955, it was unanimously decided that these distant missions should be included with other missions in the annual appointments of members of the Council of the Twelve.

Besides these visits, educational institutions are being made available for the young people. In Nukualofa, for example, in the Tongan Islands, under the able presidency of D'Monte W. Coombs, Professor Ermel J. Morton, principal, and an able staff, there is now established in full working order the Liahona College, accommodating three hundred students, and employing fourteen teachers. It is a credit to the Church and to the Tongan Islands. Indeed, it is one of the show places of passengers of the steamship Tofua, and her sister ship, the Matua. While the ships are loading and unloading cargo at Nukualofa, the passengers take buses out to Liahona to visit the school and inspect the work that is being done by the students.

At Pesega, Samoa, under the presidency of President Howard B. Stone, the school already established accommodates from six hundred to one thousand students. Another is planned at Maupasaga, American Samoa. Thus will the branches be strengthened in far distant lands with visits of the Twelve, whose duty it is to set in order the affairs of the Church in all the world, with educational advantages to prepare students for the preaching of the gospel, and finally, with a temple within easy reach of those whose influence in the mission field will become a strength to the branches, and a means of proclaiming peace.

The fourth observation I wish to make is the influence of the power of example. One of the most impressive features of our recent South Pacific tour was the participation of youth in meetings, in the welcomes extended, and in the farewells, and the orderly conduct of the children, without an exception. The school at Liahona in Tonga radiated not only culture and refinement, but also the true spirit of the gospel. The same features existed in Tahiti under Acting President Larson H. Caldwell; New Zealand, presided over by President Sidney J. Ottley; Australia, under President Charles V. Liljenquist; in Samoa, as I have already stated, under President Howard B. Stone; in Hawaii, under President D. Arthur Haycock; and in the stake, under President Edward L. Clisold. Strangers who were present, (and they were there by the hundreds), had a good demonstration of what the Church is doing properly to interest and to direct the youth.

Herein lies the responsibility of membership. The gospel of peace should find its most fruitful effects in the homes of Church members. Flowers in our gardens require good soil and a favorable climate. So children, to be healthy and happy, should have a favorable mental and emotional atmosphere in the home.

Soon after our return from the South Pacific, I received a letter from President Ward C. Holbrook, a state official, stating that the divorce rate in Utah is such as to give cause for most serious consideration. It is inconsistent to go abroad to proclaim peace if we have not peace in our own lives and homes.

The greatest trust that can come to a man and woman is the placing in their keeping the life of a little child. If a man defaults who is entrusted with other people's funds, whether he be a bank, municipal, or state official, he is apprehended and probably sent to prison. If a person entrusted with a government secret discloses that secret, and betrays his country, he is called a traitor. What must the Lord think, then, of parents who, through their own negligence or wilful desire to indulge their selfishness, fail properly to rear their children, and thereby prove untrue to the greatest trust that has been given to human beings? In reply the Lord has said: "... the sin be upon the heads of the parents." (D. & C. 68:25.)

The happiest homes in the world should be found among members of the Church. Statistics on broken homes, with resultant divorces, should alert all citizens, and particularly members of the Church to greater activity in preserving harmony in home circles. Let us begin at once as parents to maintain the kind of influence or home atmosphere that will contribute to the normal moral development of the children and eliminate from the home those elements which cause discord and strife.

Fathers and mothers sometimes by unwise conduct unwittingly influence their children toward delinquency. Among these unwise acts, I mention first, disagreeing, or quarreling on the part of parents in the presence of children. Sometimes such quarrels arise out of an attempt to correct or to discipline a child. One parent criticizes, the other objects, and the good influence of the home, so far as the child is concerned, is nullified. A child of such parents can never say truthfully in after life what John Ruskin writes of his memory of home:

"I never heard my father's or mother's voice once raised in any question with each other; nor saw an angry or even slightly hurt or offended glance in the eyes of either . . . I never saw a moment's trouble or disorder in any household matter."

I name as a second unwise condition those parents who pollute the home atmosphere with "vulgarity" and "profanity." I use the term "vulgarity" in the sense used by David Starr Jordan. "To be vulgar," he writes, "is to do that which is not the best of its kind. It is to do poor things in poor ways, and to be satisfied with that. . . . It is vulgar to wear dirty linen when one is not engaged in dirty work. It is vulgar to like poor music. . . . To find amusement in trashy novels, to enjoy vulgar theatres, to find pleasure in cheap jokes, to tolerate coarseness and looseness in any of its myriad forms."

Parents are particularly untrue to their trust who will use profane words in the home. Profanity is a national vice. Parents pollute their home when they use it. People of our nation would stand on a higher moral plane if they would but follow the general order given by the Father of our country to his soldiers, July 1, 1776. Said he—or wrote he at that time:

"The General is sorry to be informed that the foolish and wicked practice of profane cursing and swearing, a vice heretofore little known in an American army, is growing into fashion. He hopes the officers will, by example as well as influence, endeavor to check it, and that both they and the men will reflect that we can have little hope of the blessing of heaven on our arms if we insult it by our impiety and folly. Added to this, it is a vice so mean and low, without any temptation, that every man of sense and character detests and despises it."

I continue, vulgarity and profanity among the young is often, though not always, the result of the presence of those evils in the home.

To quarreling of parents before children, to vulgarity, and to the condemnatory use of profanity, there may be added a third contributing factor to parental delinquency, and that is the non-conformity in the homes to Church standards. Remember, fellow parents, that children are quick to detect insincerity, and they resent in their feelings false pretension. Parents, of all people on earth, should be honest with their children. Keep your promises to them and speak the truth always. Children are more influenced by sermons you act than by sermons you preach. It is the consistent parent who gains the trust of his child. When children feel that you reciprocate their trust, they will not violate your confidence nor bring dishonor to your name.

"The parent must live truth, or the child will not live it. The child will startle you with its quickness in puncturing the bubble of your pretended knowledge; in instinctively piercing the heart of a sophistry without being conscious of process; in relentlessly enumerating your unfulfilled promises; in detecting with a justice of a court of equity a technicality of speech that is virtually a lie. He will justify his own lapses from truth by appeal to some white lie told to a visitor and unknown to be overheard by the little ones, whose mental powers we ever underestimate in theory though we may overpraise in words.

"If truth be the rock-foundation of the child's character, as a fact, not as a theory, the future of that child is as fully assured as it is possible for human pre-vision to guarantee." (Wm. George Jordan, The Power of Truth.)

The fourth observation: parents who fail to teach obedience to their children. Within the last decade there have been rampant some wild theories about the self-determination of children, and the preservation of their individuality. Some of these theorists believe that children should be permitted to solve their own problems without guidance from parents. There is some virtue in this, but there is more error. This theory has gained momentum in practice because of reaction to arbitrary government by parents.

Commenting upon this, one educator rightly says: "Thousands of conventions are laid down by society today, conventions which are often institutionalized and crystallized. Whether he likes it or not, every individual must conform to these conventions if he is to be either efficient or happy. If he does not conform, society brings all sorts of pressure to bear upon him. He may be jailed for certain kinds of nonconformity. For other less serious kinds he may become soured, disappointed, and even neurotic.

"If the home does not develop obedience, society will demand it and get it. It is therefore better for the home with its kindness, sympathy, and understanding to train the child in obedience rather than callously to leave him to the brutal and unsympathetic discipline that society will impose if the home has not already fulfilled this obligation."

The best time to teach the child obedience is between the ages of two to four. It is then that the child should learn that there are limits to his actions, that there are certain bounds beyond which he cannot pass with impunity. This conformity to home conditions can be easily obtained with kindness, but with firmness. "Train up a child the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Proverbs 22:6.) In this old adage the word train has great significance.

Fifth, there are parents who say: We will let our children grow to manhood and womanhood and choose for themselves. In taking this attitude parents fail in the discharging of a parental responsibility. Parents and teachers are God's fellow workers. The Father of all mankind expects parents, as his representatives, to assist him in shaping and guiding human lives and immortal souls. That is the highest assignment which the Lord can bestow upon man.

The most effective way to teach religion in the home is not by preaching but by living. If you would teach faith in God, show faith in him yourself; if you would teach prayer, pray yourself. Would you have them temperate? Then you yourself refrain from intemperance. If you would have your child live a life of virtue, of self-control, of good report, then set him a worthy example in all these things. A child brought up under such home environment will be fortified for the doubts, questions, and yearnings that will stir his soul when the real period of religious awakening comes at twelve or fourteen years of age.

It is then that he needs positive teaching regarding God and truth and his relations with others. Activity in the Church is a good safeguard during youth. Continual absence from Church makes continual absence easy. Other interests in life make the growing youth indifferent to religion. Success makes him think that religion is not essential to his happiness. "It is a law of life that use gives strength; a capacity unused weakens and dies. It is as true of religious instincts as of any other. One need not be a sinner to lose God; he need only forget Him."

With respect to the responsibility of parents teaching religion to their children, the Lord is very explicit in the Doctrine and Covenants, Section 68, 25th to 28th verse:

"And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents.

"For this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized.

"And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands.

"And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."

Brethren and sisters, let us strive to have fewer broken homes, and in our homes to have harmony and peace. From such homes will go men and women motivated with a desire to build, not to destroy.

Thus in our homes, in our wards, branches, and stakes, we may join the appointed messengers in organized missions, and consistently proclaim the restored gospel of peace unto the ends of the earth.

"Follow with reverent steps the great example
Of him whose holy work was 'doing good';
So shall the wide earth seem our Father's temple,
Each loving life a psalm of gratitude.

"Then shall all shackles fall: the stormy clangor
Of wild war music o'er the earth shall cease;
Love shall tread out the baleful fire of anger,
And in its ashes plant the tree of peace."
(Whittier)

I hope that in the hearts of those who are listening there will have been awakened a realization that example in the home is entirely essential to the proclamation of peace abroad. The strangers who come to visit us will see that our lives comport with the proclamation of peace, with the ensign of peace that the Church holds up before the world. O Father, help us, that we may be thus blessed by the guidance of thy Holy Spirit, we pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We shall now hear from Elder ElRay L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve, who will be followed by Elder Marion G. Romney.

ELDER ELRAY L. CHRISTIANSEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

AFTER LISTENING to President David O. McKay's timely and helpful message, brothers and sisters, I am sure that you feel, as did I, to say again in your hearts:

We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet,
To guide us in these latter days;
We thank thee for sending the gospel
To lighten our minds with its rays.

May we utter that thanks and show it in a fervent and personal response to this appeal of our great leader.

I am sure that what I shall say will not be new to anyone, but it is a matter to which we should give serious consideration. The Latter-day Saints are a blessed people because they have made covenants with the Lord. As he made covenants with Israel of old, so he has made covenants with us, and we have made personal and individual covenants with him.

A covenant is a bond; a solemn agreement. It involves at least two individuals, and, of course, both parties must abide by the conditions of the covenant in order to make it effective and binding. The gospel in its fulness, as it has been restored, is the new and everlasting covenant of God. The new and everlasting covenant embodies all covenants, bonds, and obligations that are required of the Lord for peace in the world, for peace in the hearts of men, and for the salvation and exaltation of man.

In a revelation given to the Church through the Prophet Joseph Smith, the Lord, bidding the people to hearken and listen together to his voice "while it is yet day," said to them:

And even so I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people, and for the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me. (D. & C. 45:9.)

Why does the Lord make or require covenants and commandments and obligations and laws? I have heard people ask, if he loves us why does he restrict us? Just as any father would restrict his child, if it is a blessing to that child, so our Father gives us these laws and ordinances and commandments and covenants, not that we should be burdened or restricted by them, but that we may be lifted up and made free, that our burdens may be light; that we may, through obedience to them, more nearly perfect our lives and thereby prepare ourselves for the glories that await those who are willing to conform to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. His laws are not grievous; they are not burdensome.

Covenants made with the Lord are eternal in their nature. Agreements made between men end when those men are dead. Such agreements are not eternal. The Lord made it very clear that the covenants he makes with men are eternal and that those which are between man and man shall be shaken and destroyed eventually.

Behold, mine house is a house of order, saith the Lord God, and not a house of confusion.

And everything that is in the world, whether it be ordained of men, by thrones, or principalities, or powers, or things of name, whatsoever they may be, that are not by me or by my word, saith the Lord, shall be thrown down, and shall not remain after men are dead, neither in nor after the resurrection, saith the Lord your God. (Ibid., 132:8, 13.)

Every member of this Church has made covenants with God. When we entered into the waters of baptism and were confirmed members of the Church, we entered into a covenant with him. In section twenty-two of the Doctrine and Covenants the Lord refers to baptism as "a new and everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning." And in another revelation to Joseph Smith given in 1830, the Lord said, concerning baptism and the covenants associated with it (and I often wonder if we consider seriously enough those covenants and obligations that are connected with our entering into the waters of baptism and into membership in this Church), this he said:

All those who humble themselves before God, and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church. (Ibid., 20:37.)

Those requirements and expectations are rather definite. The obligations and covenants are clearly stated. Both the blessings of becoming a member of the Church and the obligations of such membership should be understood and impressed upon all candidates for baptism and membership in the Church, both the young and the old.

Again, when we partake of the sacrament of the Lord's supper, we enter into covenants with him. We make a covenant that we will take upon us the name of the Son. That means, it seems to me, to be like him as nearly as possible, to do as he would do, to live in our everyday lives as he would live, to be a true disciple of Christ.

Now, he who takes upon him the name of Christ surely will obliterate from his life such things as profane and vulgar language, and evil thinking, "For," says the Lord, "as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." (Prov. 23:7.)

Surely those who take upon them the name of Christ will be honest and true,

Sunday, April 3

Second Day

chaste and benevolent and virtuous and will do good to all men.

When we partake of the sacrament, we make a covenant to keep his commandments, all of them, certainly to love the Lord our God with all our hearts, and with all our might, and with all our strength, and to love our neighbor as ourselves. By keeping the commandments made in the sacrament service, one is promised that his Spirit will be with him, to guide him, to direct him, to warn him, and to teach him. There is nothing more desirable than one could ask than to have the accompaniment of the Spirit of God.

Let us be grateful for the privilege we have each week of going to the sacrament table and there renewing our covenants with the Lord. Let us also leave the sacrament table with a determination to keep the covenant that we make there.

When we are ordained to the priesthood we enter into what is known as the oath and covenant of the priesthood. We agree to magnify and honor that priesthood by living by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God.

Always there are blessings promised to those who keep the covenants made with the Lord. In the eighty-fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord mentions such promises, when he says:

For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies.

They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God.

Therefore, all those who receive the priesthood, receive this oath and covenant [or enter into it] of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved. (D. & C. 84:33-34, 40.)

Wilford Woodruff, speaking upon this revelation, made note of the marvelous blessings that await the faithful bearers and sharers of the priesthood; our wives are not without the same blessings that come to the men who bear the priesthood. Said Wilford Woodruff:

Do we comprehend that if we abide the laws of the priesthood we shall become heirs of God and joint-heirs of Jesus Christ? Who can comprehend that by obeying the celestial law, all the Father hath shall be given unto us, exaltations, thrones, principalities, powers, dominions. Who can comprehend it? And yet it is here stated.

Now, if we keep the laws and covenants of baptism, and honor the priesthood and its covenants, we are then permitted to enter into the temple of the Lord and there again make covenants with him, which covenants if kept will qualify us for the fulness of joy in our Father's kingdom; and to become endowed with powers, rights, blessings, and promises of blessings that may embellish our lives and bless us eternally and bring us joy that is beyond our power to comprehend.

We may also enter into that order of the priesthood known as the "new and everlasting covenant of marriage." Those who remain true to that covenant and to all other covenants are promised of the Lord that they will come forth in the resurrection of the just with their husbands and their wives as their companions, and with their children, if they are faithful and keep the covenants which they shall make, to live with them in a state of never-ending happiness. What hope, what assurance, what joy that should bring to the hearts of men! The great joy and consolation that comes from the divine assurance that the family ties may transcend the boundaries of death and continue eternally is priceless to all who love their families and their friends.

We are indeed a covenant-making people. I hope and pray that we are also a covenant-keeping people. Unspeakable joy, indescribable blessings and associations with those that we love await all who receive the covenants of God and who endure to the end, faithful and true.

For—

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. (1 Cor. 2:9.)

And, of course, he has said that they that love him will keep his commandments.

May we go forth from this conference more determined than ever so to do, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, the Lord. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BELOVED brothers and sisters, you assembled in this building and you who look in by television and who listen in by radio: I plead with you to implore the Lord to give me his Spirit while I address you the next few moments. I have sought humbly for his help, and I believe he will give me his Spirit. If he gives you his Spirit, too, these few minutes will be worth your while and mine, and be to the glory of God.

I thought at first I would bore you with a written speech, but I believe I can do it without one. Moreover, as I give you the message I have for you, I want to look you straight in the eye.

My office is that of a special witness of the Redeemer and of his gospel. I desire to have the spirit of that office and to testify to you of some eternal truths which are worth while to my brethren and sisters in the Church who have fervent testimonies, to members of my own family, whom I love, to every one of you who is looking in on this conference from the outside, to every soul who hears my voice, and to all the ends of the earth. What I have to say I did not learn through my five senses. I have learned a lot about the truth through my natural senses, the concepts I have came from what I have heard and read, but the truths to which I testify I have learned through revelation.

Now, do not misunderstand, I do not propose to give a startling account of an open vision. I have not seen one. Neither have I heard an audible voice. Revelation comes through three or four channels. One is the open vision; another is the audible voice; another is the witness of the Spirit. Enos spoke of this method—the witness of the Spirit—when he said that he heard the voice of God say unto him, . . . “thy sins are forgiven thee.” (Enos 5.) And then a little later, after he had prayed for his brethren, the Nephites, he said,

. . . the voice of the Lord came into my mind again, saying: I will visit thy brethren

according to their diligence in keeping my commandments. (Ibid., 10.)

Recently I heard a famous character say, “What the world needs today is a prophet.” That was a wise statement, but it is not exactly correct. The things the peoples of the world need today are ears to hear the living prophet, because we already have one. He has been sent by Almighty God, not only to the members of the Church, but also to you other good people who are seeing and hearing this service by television and hearing it over the radio. Most of the last three quarters of an hour that prophet has been standing before you, if you have been where you could see into this session. If you have not seen him, you have heard his voice. President David O. McKay is a prophet of the Living God. If you are the type of person who would have believed that Moses was a prophet, had you lived in his day, you know that President McKay is a prophet. If you would have accepted Elijah or even the Son of Man, you will accept President David O. McKay as a prophet of the Living God.

There are other prophets who will talk to you during this conference. Two I will mention, the men who stand with President David O. McKay. As James and John stood beside Peter after the passing of the Redeemer, so President Stephen L. Richards and President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., stand with President McKay. The three of them are prophets as much as any men who ever lived upon the earth have been prophets. I plead with you to hear their voices.

There will be other men speak to you in the sessions of this conference who have been called with the same calling as the Twelve Apostles in the days of the Savior. These men will speak words of eternal life. They will bear record of the truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ which you will need to accept and live by if you are to be true followers of Christ. These men will preach and teach the gospel of Jesus Christ as he himself defined it.

Sunday, April 3

Second Day

That there may be no misunderstanding as to what that gospel is, I want to read two or three verses from the statement of the Savior. After he had told his disciples that if the Church was built upon his gospel his Father would show forth his own works in it, but that if it was not built upon his gospel, but upon the works of men or upon the works of the devil, they would have joy in their works for a season, but by and by the end would come when they would be thrown down and cast into the fire, he said:

... this is the gospel which I have given unto you—that I came into the world to do the will of my Father, because my Father sent me.

And my Father sent me that I might be lifted up upon the cross; and after that I had been lifted up upon the cross, that I might draw all men unto me, that as I have been lifted up by men even so should men be lifted up by the Father, to stand before me, to be judged of their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil—

And for this cause have I been lifted up; therefore, according to the power of the Father I will draw all men unto me, that they may be judged according to their works. (3 Nephi 27:13-15.)

And then he added:

Now this is the commandment: Repent, all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may be sanctified by the reception of the Holy Ghost, that ye may stand spotless before me at the last day.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, this is my gospel. . . . (Ibid., 27:20-21.)

In this short statement the Master named four eternal verities upon which all else in his gospel is founded: first, the relationship between himself and his Father; second, the fact of his atonement; third, the universal resurrection; and fourth, the judgment.

As to the relationship between himself and his Father, he said: "I came into the world to do the will of my father; because my father sent me." This verity, so simply put, is the cornerstone of his gospel. A Christian brotherhood can no more be built without the acceptance of the fact that Jesus is the Son of God than the superstructure of this great building can be supported without its foundation. The very burden of the Master's message during all his life was that he is the Son of God. The Father himself, who seldom speaks on any other question, time after time bore witness that Jesus is his Son. That fact is an essential part of the message of the restoration.

That the atonement was a fact is as essential to the gospel of Jesus Christ as is the Sonship of Jesus. We have the sacrament to remind us every week of his atonement. The only purpose, or at least the main purpose, for which Jesus came into the world was to make the atonement. Others could have been sent to preach the gospel. As a matter of fact, others have been sent in every other dispensation—Abraham, Enoch, Moses, for example, and in this dispensation the Prophet Joseph Smith. These great prophets taught the gospel of Jesus Christ as plainly as did Jesus himself. But in the Meridian of Time Jesus came. He came not only to teach the gospel, but also to be the Redeemer of the world. He was the only one who qualified to be the Redeemer, first, because he and he alone had life within himself—eternal life, which he inherited from his divine Father. He was the only one who ever lived a sinless life upon the earth, and he alone was foreordained to be the Redeemer.

The resurrection is inherent in the atonement. Jesus said he came to do the will of his Father, and that the will of his Father was that he should be lifted up upon the cross. He further said that the purpose for which he was to be lifted up upon the cross was that he might draw all men to him. That he does through the resurrection.

The purpose for which men are to come before him after the resurrection is that they may be judged of the works which they have done in the flesh.

These are the fundamentals of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as he put them in his own language. Having stated them, he followed with the commandment,

Repent, all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may be sanctified by the reception of the Holy Ghost. (Ibid., 27:20.)

Now, all men who believe in Jesus and want to be his followers will have to accept those four verities. They will also have to obey the commandment. When the commandment is obeyed, they will receive the witness of the Holy Ghost. Surely they will receive it. It comes to every man who will live for it. As an example, I read to you a few lines from the testimony of a missionary in the field. Six months ago today, he sat here in this building on his way to the mission field. After being in a foreign land for five months, learning a foreign language, he wrote this to his parents:

When I first came over here and started in this missionary work, I did not know if I was going to be able to last it out. It was really hard on me to go out from door to door and have the people laugh at me and not listen to me. And for a while there I really wondered if I did have a testimony of the gospel. I knew that if I did not have a very strong one that I would not be able to stick it out. The devil was really working on me, too, because I had a feeling of unrest and discontentedness, and I did not have the desire to go out and give the message to the people.

But today there is nothing I would rather do. The Lord has blessed me with a very strong testimony of the gospel. I know without any doubt that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that God lives and he has a body of flesh and bones. I know that Joseph Smith, Jr. was and is a prophet of God, that he restored the gospel here on the earth in these latter days. I know that the leaders of the Church today are prophets, seers, and revelators, and there is nothing I would rather do than tell these people we come in contact with that I know that these things are true. . . .

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BROTHERS AND SISTERS: Those whom I see and those who are viewing and listening whom I do not see, I stand before you with gratitude that I have been present today and heard the great messages that have been delivered. While my own personal feelings are of no consequence, I had really contemplated doing little more than bearing my testimony, but our President has seen fit to change somewhat the pro-

I pray that I may be a worthy representative of my family and my Church and the Lord, and I bear you this testimony through the gift of the Holy Ghost and in the name of Jesus Christ.

Now, there is a twenty-year-old lad who has that witness. He knows, because he has been touched through the sixth sense, if you will, the witness of the Spirit, that these eternal verities are true.

Oh, my beloved brothers and sisters, my good friends whom I have never seen and who have never seen me, I bear witness to you that there is revelation in this day, that there is a power from God which wants to come into our hearts and bring us peace, that peace which will be conducive to the peace of the world, of which our great living prophet spoke this morning. I bear this witness to you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve has just addressed us. The Choir and Congregation will now join in singing, "We Thank Thee O God For a Prophet," conducted by Elder Richard P. Condie. After the singing President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency will speak to us.

All join in singing, "We Thank Thee O God For a Prophet."

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet."

gram that I understood was to be followed, and so I face you with his expression that I occupy more of your time. I have been greatly impressed with the President's message and particularly that part of it which dealt with the home and with what I might call discipline in the home. Discipline is not a rod. It is love, kindness, consideration, and understanding.

We are blessed that there come to us, we invite them to our homes, spirits from the other world. As they thus come at our invitation they impose upon us an obligation which, in one sense, a true sense, is divine. So entrusted to our care is a spirit created by the Father who comes here pursuant to the great plan which was devised before the foundations of the world were laid. Bound up in that plan is not alone the past before we came, but the present, while we are here, and the future, the eternities that are to come, and we shall not escape responsibility if in any way we fall short of that mission which we assumed when we brought into this world that little, pure, holy spirit to be guided and directed by us.

Sunday, April 3

Generations ago the Psalmist sang: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?"

"For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour." (Psalms 8:4-5.)

The Psalmist must have had in mind and was perhaps referring to the great announcement made in the opening of the sacred record, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. 1:27.)

In those statements, in that declaration, pregnant with meaning, is bound up the whole plan of life and salvation, our existence before we came, our existence here, and our existence hereafter. God created us spiritually. He created the bodies through whom, down through the ages he has provided tabernacles, temples for those spirits which he had created. He brought us here, offsprings of his love, tabernacled with his hopes and his prayers, that we would go forward and live through our existence here in accordance with his will, that we might then, passing on, reach the high destiny which he had planned for us.

That we might never be in a position from the very first, that we might not know what he wished us to do, he gave the gospel from the very beginning that men might know his ways, know what they had to do in order that they might fulfil their measure of creation and reach that high destiny he had provided.

It is my faith, and I believe history will bear me out, that there never has been a time in the history of the world, in the darkest hours of paganism when men did not have in their possession so much of the truth, and more, as they were able to live. Sometimes that truth was besmirched, sometimes it was dimmed, sometimes it was distorted, but down underneath it all always were some elemental truths, because men had in their minds at least the traditions of the gospel preached from the beginning, had in their minds certain fundamental things which concerned their salvation.

God has made it clear, as I understand it, that he holds his children responsible for the truth which he reveals to them, and if they are not in a position to live all the truth, they are in the position to live that which he gives. Pushing it, perhaps to the extreme, we know that from the beginning, God taught as part of the gospel the mission, the life, the work, the death of his Only Begotten Son, who was to atone for the bringing upon us of mortality.

You know, I can see underneath the sacrifices that were offered, the human sacrifices, in the country to the south of us among the Lamanites, sacrifices that finally led to cannibalism, the eating of a part of the sacrifice—I see a clear suggestion of the sacrifice distorted almost beyond recognition, which God was to make and made through his Only Begotten Son for our redemption.

We ought to remember, I feel always, the truths which God has given to us. We live in revolutionary and evolutionary time. The Lord has vouchsafed to us some of the greatest discoveries of all times; he has increased beyond the wildest dreams of the most imaginative poet, our powers of transmission of speech. He has increased our powers of speed of transportation. He has discovered to us great secrets of energy which we know how to create but not yet how to control.

We have looked at these things, and we have said in our hearts, and in our speech, that the old has been "outmoded." We see the results, and we believe. But it has been rather an easy transition from the outmoding of these material instrumentalities given by God for our good (and we shall yet use them for the promulgation of truth though not yet do I catch a glimpse even of how in all cases they shall be used, but yet they will be so used)—it has been an easy transition, I say, to affirm that since the physical has become outmoded, so is "outmoded" the moral and the spiritual of the past. In the darkness they are crying out, as we have heard, for a prophet. Brother Romney said that what they need is a listening ear for the prophet they have.

But it is wholly fantastic, as I see it, for us to think that man himself is "outmoded," or his moral and spiritual past. We still have the five senses, all we learn and know and experience comes through those five senses. Man has not been given another sense by these great discoveries. Man still thinks as he has always thought, more poignantly, perhaps, more deeply in certain lines than heretofore, but he still thinks, he still speaks, he is still guided by the same great passions of love, hate, ambition, desire to serve the Lord and all the rest of it. We have not changed. We are as God made us originally, save as we have somehow in some things subverted our feelings, our passions, our urges, our ambitions.

What I would like to get to you today is my feeling that the spiritual in man, the spirit of man is in no sense whatever "outmoded." He stands today as he stood when he came from the garden. God is still God; Jesus is the Christ. There is no change in that. There has been no change in the great spiritual truths that are essential to our progress spiritually and to our eventual salvation and exaltation. Nothing is changed there.

Moreover, we of this Church have our testimony and our knowledge that God still speaks to us, that he does not permit us to wander in darkness and in silence, uninstructed, uninspired, without revelation. No principle of the gospel is more glorious than that principle of continuous revelation because we know that so often as it is necessary our Heavenly Father will again reveal to us all that it is necessary that we should know, in addition to what we now have.

We are not moving blindly, we are not moving by the maxims of the past only. We are not moving alone, guided only by the revelations given in ancient times. We are moving forward under revelations given in modern times and are moving forward under a knowledge that if we need further light, it shall be given to us.

My brothers and sisters, I leave with you my testimony that God lives, that the eternal truths are today as they have always been, no change, that God expects us to keep his commandments. I give you my testimony that this is the Restored Gospel, that Joseph is a Prophet, that the First Vision was a reality, that the man who now stands as the President of the Church possesses all the keys and powers that were possessed by the Prophet Joseph, that God expects us, as has been said here today, to keep all of his commandments to the end that we may be saved and exalted in his presence, and for this I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Before we go off the air at one minute to twelve o'clock, I wish to express appreciation to the Tacoma Stake for having sent, through the kindness of the Puyallup Valley Daffodil Festival Committee, 3,500 freshly cut daffodils for the beautification of the Tabernacle during the Conference sessions. We received a letter last evening through Bishop Isaacson that these daffodils have been sent but the storm prevented the plane from landing at the Salt Lake airport, and so they continued on to Denver. I am mentioning appreciation now because they will come back soon, we hope, but those who are listening in at Tacoma may not hear our appreciation when we receive them and when they are decorating this building with perfume and beauty, which will bear to each one present the best wishes and love of those who have sent them, I repeat again, the Puyallup Valley Daffodil Festival Committee in Tacoma.

We thank, also, the Berkeley Stake of California for these lovely calla lilies which you have admired and which are so conducive to the beauty of these decorations.

We express, also, appreciation to the Choir, members of which have been here since seven o'clock this morning, to the conductors, to the organists, to the officers of this great organization.

We appreciate what the city officials are doing and have done in directing traffic this stormy morning. They are always on hand during our great Conferences to protect life and to look after the convenience of those who are here in attendance.

Scores of telegrams have come from those who have been favored this morning over the radio and television and have participated in these exercises. We shall not take time to read them, but we thank those of our associates who have taken the time to tell how clearly the messages given this morning have gone over the wire.

Any important messages or calls that have come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference, will be announced at the dismissal of the meeting over the public address system on the grounds. Similar messages this afternoon will be treated accordingly. Please listen carefully on dismissal to these announcements.

As heretofore announced, the singing this morning has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir and Congregation, with J. Spencer Cornwall and Richard

P. Condie, conducting. Brother Frank W. Asper has been at the organ.

The closing song by the Choir will be, "Worthy Is the Lamb," under the direction of Elder Cornwall.

The benediction will be offered by President Bryan L. Bunker, president of the California Mission, following which this Conference will be adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

---

The Choir sang as the concluding number, "Worthy Is The Lamb."

President David O. McKay:

I am not sure that when I was mentioning the presidents of missions who were doing the work in the South Seas, that I mentioned President Sidney J. Ottley, who presides over the New Zealand Mission. He, with the others named, is carrying on the work down in that particular area.

President Bryan L. Bunker, who presides over the California Mission, will now offer the benediction.

Elder Bryan L. Bunker, President of the California Mission, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

SECOND DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The third session of the Conference commenced at 2:00 p.m., Sunday, April 3.

The Tabernacle Choir furnished the music for this session.

President David O. McKay:

Members of the Church are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City in the third session of the One Hundred Twenty-Fifth Annual Conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

For those who are unable to enter the building, we announce that these services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall, in Barratt Hall, over a public address system, and by television. These services are also being televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5 in Salt Lake City, and are being heard over radio through KSL over 18 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Nevada, Washington, Arizona, Colorado, California, and New Mexico. The names of these stations have already been announced to the radio audience.

We have received many telegrams, and continue to receive them, from listeners in the stakes named last evening and today. They all report that the services have been heard clearly, and they express appreciation. We shall not take time to read them. There are too many. There is one, however, to which I wish to make reference, and that is one from San Diego, in which the Servicemen assembled send greetings to their parents. The others should be printed in the Church Section of the Deseret

News. I think you will be interested in them.

The music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of Elder Cornwall, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ. We shall begin by the Tabernacle Choir singing, "For Unto us a Child is Born." The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Peter J. Ricks, president of the Southern States Mission.

The Choir sang the anthem, "For Unto Us a Child is Born."

President Peter J. Ricks of the Southern States Mission offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "Light in Darkness," under the direction of Brother J. Spencer Cornwall. After the singing President Stephen L Richards of the First Presidency will address us.

The Choir rendered a selection, "Light in Darkness."

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L Richards of the First Presidency will be our first speaker this afternoon. He will be followed by Elder Eldred G. Smith.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, I rejoice with you in this great conference of the Church. I have been coming to conferences for a half century. I think I have seldom missed a session. I cannot remember of ever having attended a more enlightening and inspiring session than that of this morning. I feel certain that all who were present here or who heard the proceedings must have been deeply impressed.

Naturally, I have an earnest and a prayerful desire to make some little contribution to these proceedings, and I earnestly solicit your co-operation and sympathy and your prayers in an undertaking to that end. I am taking the liberty of addressing my remarks in large measure to our friends who pay us the courtesy and the honor to give some attention to these proceedings.

We are approximating the Easter time, as we were so well apprised this morning in the beautiful sermons of Brother Lee and Brother Brown. At this time the whole world may focus, in a measure at least, its attention upon Christianity, for I cannot think, even in countries of adverse philosophies, that attention will not be given to the progress of that we call Christianity, and I propose, if I may, to discuss some phases of that great theme—Christianity.

Recently I heard a minister in an eloquent address over the radio define Christianity as "the Society of the Friends of Jesus." The dictionary defines Christianity as "the body of Christian believers." Is there a significant distinction between these two definitions? Is an adequate concept of Christianity available to us and to the world, and is it important? I have thought that matters pertaining to this subject might be worth our consideration for a short time.

"The Society of the Friends of Jesus" is a nice-sounding phrase. I had never heard it before. The use of the word society may be somewhat difficult of justification because society usually contemplates something more of an integrated unit of people with companionship and association, generally of a friendly character and common purpose. There is so much diversity of interpretation effort, and purpose in Christendom as to make questionable the application of the word society. However, that consideration might be regarded as somewhat technical, and I do not press it.

The more important difference in the two definitions I have quoted is the distinction between friends and believers.

I may be unduly apprehensive, but

Sunday, April 3

Second Day

I think I discern in this gracious use of the word friends a tendency which is supported by many of the circumstances which come to our attention to forsake and depart from the concept that no one may be classified as Christian except he "believe" in Jesus Christ and the principles for which he stands. All of us have friends with whom we are cordial, to whose principles of conduct and life we do not subscribe. A friend of the historical character, Jesus, may have esteem and admiration for his life, his teachings, and accomplishments, but he may not be a Christian believer as the old definition designates one to be counted in the body of Christianity.

I cannot bring myself to think that the Savior himself would be satisfied with this new definition, however well intended it may have been. The Lord used the term friends most impressively—not quite, I fear, in the same sense in which it is used in the definition. You all remember the great pronouncement to his disciples:

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

"Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." (John 15:13-16.)

The essence of the friendship here set forth lies in belief and acceptance of the divinity of the Master. It is inconceivable that he should extend the friendship he so beautifully described to any others than those who were believers. We know of his compassion, his mercy, and concern for all our Father's children, but it should never be forgotten that he set forth in unequivocal language the eligibility of those admitted to the circle of his friendship.

"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." (Ibid., 15:14.)

If I could feel that the speaker to whom I listened had in mind such a quality of friendship as the Savior portrays, I would have little hesitancy in the acceptance of his definition, but I heard nothing in his sermon to indicate that was his concept.

Now, my brethren and sisters, it may well seem to you that I have overplayed this matter of definitions, but the other aspect of the subject which I have mentioned I am sure cannot be too strongly emphasized. Is there available to mankind today an interpretation of Christianity and the definition of a Christian which may be safely accepted and relied upon? As a Christian believer I am assured that there is, and that all men may know, if they will to acquire the knowledge, who is a Christian acceptable to the author of Christianity, the Lord Jesus Christ.

I hope you will bear in mind that I do not bring these matters forward with any assumption on my part that I have the right to judge of the Christian status of my fellow men. No one, under the declaration of the Savior, has the right of judgment of his fellows unless he be specifically commissioned so to do. Scarcely anyone fully conscious of the responsibility of exercising such judgment would ever seek it, for the Lord has said: "For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged. . . ." (Matt. 7:2.)

My purpose in pointing out some of the attributes of a Christian is to enable each man to determine for himself the state of his worthiness of this honorable designation.

I believe that no man can count himself Christian who is not concerned about religion, who does not have regard for things divine, and for his own standing in relation thereto. Irrespective of what his antecedents and his affiliations may have been and are, it is most difficult to understand how he can be justified in the designation of Christian if he has lost or never had vital interest in religion.

I am sorry to say there may be very large numbers in such a category. Many do not resent their classification as Christians. Many welcome, and some seek, the reputation for practising Christian virtues. I know of few, if any, men who are not pleased to be called "a Christian gentleman," although there has never been evident, in many cases, any interest or activity in the Christian religion.

There are two significant articles in a recent issue of a popular magazine. One article is entitled, "What Are We Worried About?" and the caption of the other article is, "64,000,000 Americans Do Not Go to Church. What Do They Believe?"

I mention concern about religion as an essential element in the Christian faith. According to the first article, about five thousand persons in many walks of life and different localities were interviewed on the question, "What kinds of things do you worry about most?" The report is that "An overwhelming majority answered solely in terms of personal or family problems (health, finances, employment, children's welfare, etc.)—43% were worried about family finances, wages, expenses, etc. 30% mentioned personal problems such as marriage difficulties, children's welfare, and so on. 24% were worried about health—their own or of someone in the family. Only 8% were worried about world problems, occasioned chiefly by the possibility of being drafted."

The article does not state that the matter of religion was ruled out, but it appears from the report that no one who answered was worried about religion in any form. It may be that a subsequent article which is promised may give attention to that subject.

Now if worry contemplates anxiety and deep concern, is it not significant that no one of this great number interviewed expressed any anxiety or fearful concern about things religious? If this poll may justifiably be interpreted (and perhaps its authors would not approve such an interpretation) as further gravitation of the people of our country toward materialism, then I think it carries serious import for all of us.

I think I speak for this entire congregation who listens to these services, and I know that I speak for myself, when I say that there is no matter fraught with more anxiety and deep concern among all the problems that confront us than the religious welfare of ourselves, our families, and our fellow men. I firmly believe that this is an essential characteristic of a Christian, and I earnestly appeal to every man who discovers within himself a growing tendency to shrug off religious thinking and participation to stop and consider the effect of his spiritual lethargy on himself, his family, his friends, and his standing as a Christian.

I mentioned another article in the magazine which has some relevance to the measure which a man may apply to his own standing as a Christian. I cannot see how anyone can logically and consistently take on the designation of Christian unless he accepts the divinity of the Christ according to the scriptural record of the Christ. Without the record, of course, there would be for us no Christ. Christ is our Lord of the Gospels, as President Clark has so aptly designated him in his book. If the Gospels constitute the record and the history, how can we without building up an artificial and imaginary record fail to accept the divinity of the Father and the Son and still call ourselves Christians?

The article asserts that the 64,000,000 Americans who do not go to Church are not necessarily irreligious; that many have a profound faith in God but do not believe that any existing organized religion is a satisfactory expression of God's will. I do not attempt to controvert this statement, although I believe that we will all agree that going to Church and worship are evidences of one's acceptance of a Supreme Being and are calculated to foster and develop that acceptance.

It is further pointed out in this article that the great Lincoln never affiliated himself with any church, but of course there would be no warrant for any statement that he was not a believing, Christian man. There are many things in his life and utterances to support the conclusion that he was a man of faith and prayer who would have resented a charge that he was not a Christian believer.

It seems to me that in the present state of world affairs it is particularly important that men should examine the state of their inner feelings about this matter. It is frequently stated from many different sources that the present overshadowing conflict in the world is essentially between that which is Christian and that which is anti-Christ. I recognize that there may be many not religiously inclined who would not accept this generalization. Many would probably prefer to define the issues as drawn between the political concepts and systems of the so-called free world and the ideologies of statism and communism. However the issue may be defined, I am personally convinced that the cause of the free world may be immeasurably promoted and furthered by an enlarged acceptance of the Christian concept. That concept, better than anything else, it seems to me, furnishes the fundamental understanding of man's inherent right to freedom. However much illustrations from the past may serve to justify the eternal quest and struggle for liberty, there is nothing in all history which so thoroughly supports the struggle as does the knowledge and understanding of the nature and origin of man himself.

Where may we find that all-essential explanation? I think I may answer for all Christian believers, in the Christian theology, where man is given a dignity and majesty of birth and purpose transcending any sphere which may be created for him by the imaginative rationalization of man. This man of Christian origin is as a matter of divine right a free man, invested with the power of choice, without restraint, except that necessarily imposed to give all his fellows the same measure of freedom and liberty.

I think, my brethren and sisters and my friends, and I hope many heard this morning, that no better exposition of the fundamental Christian concept of family, the foundation of society, and the essentials involving and underlying our freedom, has ever been brought before us and the world than came from that inspiring, comprehensive and powerful discourse of President McKay this morning. Would that all men all over this world might have heard it.

This man of the Christian concept is not only free to act for himself, but he is also designed to live in a free society, operating under the ennobling and exalted concept that all men are brothers in the family of a divine parent. In the battle for the freedom of men is there a satisfactory and promising substitute for this Christian concept? I think there is not, and I doubt that on serious consideration there will be many in the free world who will contend that there is.

Facing the problems that confront the world under the stress of the anxieties of the threat of a devastating and annihilating war, is it going too far to ask men and women in this land which has come to be the leader in the cause of freedom to subject themselves, their lives, and their feelings to their own scrutiny to answer to their consciences whether they are truly Christian in belief and purpose? All who can so conscientiously classify themselves are in a position to make a contribution to the noble cause our country espouses, which I am sure can come from no other source in equal measure.

I am content for this occasion to leave the matter of Christian definition with this comment: I would be willing to accept the minister's statement that "Christianity is the Society of the Friends of Jesus," if friends could be interpreted as the Savior pronounced:

"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." (John 15:14.)

I owe it to myself and to my fellow members in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to make an additional statement, particularly for the benefit of those not of our number who may listen to these proceedings. We would like all to know that additional evidences for the divinity of the Christ, and for the support of the Christian concept have providentially come to the world in these latter days, and that a fulness of the Lord's gospel, and the authority and power to administer it have been restored to the earth through his chosen servant for the enlightenment and blessing of all mankind; and further, that this enlarged understanding of the true nature of Christianity is available to all who will sincerely and humbly seek to know it; and that knowledge of it, the adoption of the restored gospel as a way of life, will immeasurably enhance the prospect of the triumph of the forces of freedom over their opponents. I extend to all an earnest invitation to investigate for themselves.

In conclusion, I leave this parting word. I have deep respect, esteem, and love in my heart for all men and women everywhere who may be rightly counted Christian. I have regard for all who practise the Christian virtues. I know that the Christ loves those who love him, and who serve him, even with limited knowledge of his real nature and his true gospel.

God bless Christianity, "the body of Christian believers," and true friends of Jesus, I ask humbly in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You have just heard President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency of the Church. We will now hear from Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church. He will be followed by Bishop Isaacson.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

BROTHERS AND SISTERS, I seek an interest in your faith and prayers. This is a humbling experience, and I hope that I will always appreciate the honors and the blessings that have been given to me and that I shall always appreciate the blessings of the Lord.

The other night a cartoon appeared in The Deseret News which showed Uncle Sam deluged in the overflowing contents of a large horn of plenty. The title read, "Isn't it time we count our blessings?" These cartoonists have a gift of catching the essence of a situation and portraying it very graphically. We live in a land blessed above all other nations—not only a choice land, but also a choice generation. In addition to all the luxuries of modern living, we have the blessings of the fulness of the gospel. Today we do not have the physical opposition of hardship and persecution that we had in the earlier days.

The Church is growing very rapidly, and our missionaries are having amazing success. The people of the world are impressed with the accomplishments of the Church. But, brothers and sisters, if we learn anything from history—and history is our greatest teacher—we learn that our present favorable conditions may have a hidden danger. Some of these dangers were referred to by President McKay this morning. Do you remember what happened so often in the Book of Mormon? When the people were righteous, they enjoyed prosperity. With prosperity came a feeling of self-sufficiency and pride. They forgot to acknowledge the Lord as the Giver of all their blessings. They lost their humility. Not until they were chastened and humbled did righteousness and prosperity return.

Let us enjoy the prosperity in which we live, with humble gratitude in our hearts, expressing our thanks to the Lord. Let us be humble in all our prayers. Beware of lip service. Remember how the Lord criticized the hypocrites who prayed openly for the glory of men. He said,

Verily I say unto you, they have their reward. (Matt. 6:5.)

It is not always the words we use in prayer that count so much as the spirit in which they are said. If we are truly humble, we will acknowledge the hand of the Lord in all our righteous endeavors. Praying without humility is praying without faith. You just cannot have true faith without humility. What better example do we have than the simple, humble prayer of a child?

President George Albert Smith has told a story which I think will bear repeating.

It was about a nine-year-old boy who was to undergo a serious operation. As they prepared to give him the anesthetic, he asked those attending him to pray for him. When they told him they could not, he said, "If you can't pray

Sunday, April 3

Second Day

for me, will you please wait while I pray for myself?"

They removed the sheet, and he knelt on the operating table, bowed his head and said, "Heavenly Father, I am an orphan boy. I am awful sick. Won't you please make me well? Bless these men who are going to operate that they will do it right. If you will make me well, I will try to be a good man. Thank you, Heavenly Father, for making me well."

When he finished praying, he lay down. The doctors' and nurses' eyes were filled with tears. Then he said, "I am ready."

The operation was successful, and the boy speedily recovered.

The doctor later said, "I have operated on hundreds of people, men and women who thought they had faith to be healed, but never, until I stood over that little boy have I felt the presence of God as I felt it then. That boy opened the windows of heaven and talked to his Heavenly Father as one would talk to another, face to face. I am a better man for having had the experience of hearing a small boy talk to his Father in heaven as if he were present."

Humility is one of the qualities that help build faith. Would a missionary be successful if he were not humble? He has to be teachable with a receptive mind before he can teach others, and to be teachable, he must be humble. And we should all be missionaries.

All the requirements of living the gospel become easier through humility.

A young man told me his experience in becoming a member of the Church, which is typical of many in their activities of investigating the Church. He said the missionaries came to the lesson on the Word of Wisdom. He and his wife were both users of tobacco. After the meeting was over and the missionaries had left, they talked it over with each other and decided between themselves, "Well, if that is what the Lord wants and if this is the Lord's Church, we will try it." He said that he was not particularly concerned about himself, he thought he could do it easily; he was worried about his wife; she had never tried to quit before. On the other hand, he had quit several times. After proving to himself that he could quit, of course, he went back to the use of cigarets again. But he said in this case, it was just the reverse. His wife quit without any apparent difficulty, but he had tremendous difficulty. He became nervous and irritable. He could not rest. He was cranky among his fellow workers. He could not sleep at night. But inasmuch as his wife had quit, he was not going to be outdone by her. So, one night, he became so restless, so disturbed that he could not sleep, and his wife suggested to him that he pray about it. He thought that was a good joke. He ridiculed the idea of prayer; he said, "This is something I have to do. Nobody can help me with this. I can do this." But as the night passed, and he had done everything he could to stimulate sleep and rest without any success, finally in despair he humbled himself enough to kneel at the side of the bed and pray vocally. According to his own testimony, he said that he got up from his prayer, got into bed, went to sleep, and has never been tempted by cigarets since. He has absolutely lost the taste for tobacco. He said, "The Word of Wisdom was not a health program for me. It was a lesson in humility." He said, "I had to learn humility." That is what it meant to him. As it is with many of the requirements of the Church, we have to demonstrate humble obedience.

It is a humbling experience to look into the sky and contemplate the stars—just try to count all those you can see with the naked eye. Throughout the ages, man has tried to count them, and as telescopes have been made larger and larger, the scope has increased until we realize the utter impossibility of numbering all the stars. How small are we then, when we consider that God is the Master and Creator of the universe.

Just stand on the rim of the Grand Canyon and feel your insignificance as you gaze on the grandeur and immensity of nature or watch the beauties of Niagara and realize your own weakness in the presence of such great power.

Then ask yourself as David asked our Maker and the Creator of all: "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" (Ps. 8:4.)

Yes, God is mindful of you and me because we are his children. He has given us this earth and all we have—the very air we breathe, food to eat, life itself. He rewards us for every good deed. Of ourselves we are nothing. Brothers and sisters, let us not be self-sufficient. Let us not forget to be humble and acknowledge the Lord, who is so good to us.

King Benjamin told his people:

And now, in the first place, he hath created you, and granted unto you your lives, for which ye are indebted unto him.

And secondly, he doth require that ye should do as he hath commanded you; for which if ye do, he doth immediately bless you; and therefore he hath paid you. And ye are still indebted unto him, and are, and will be forever and ever; therefore, of what have ye to boast?

And now I ask, can ye say aught of yourselves? I answer you, Nay. Ye cannot say that ye are even as much as the dust of the earth; yet ye were created of the dust of the earth; but behold, it belongeth to him who created you. (Mosiah 2:23-25.)

My brothers and sisters, be not lifted up in the pride of your hearts that you forget the Giver of all your blessings. Do not let self-righteousness rob you of humility before God. Acknowledge him in all things. Let your faith be simple and childlike.

On one occasion,

... came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them,

And said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. (Matt. 18:1-4.)

May we then be humble as a little child is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church. Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church will be our next speaker. The Presiding Bishopric of the Church holds the Presidency of the Aaronic Priesthood.

BISHOP THORPE B. ISAACSON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

PRESIDENT McKay, President Richards, President Clark, my beloved brethren of the General Authorities, my dear brothers and sisters and friends:

I feel very humble in standing before this great audience today, and I sincerely ask for a solemn prayer in your hearts in my behalf. I am grateful to be here with you in this great general conference of the Church. Truly, we have been spiritually strengthened and built up in our faith. We come here for that purpose, and I pray that the Lord will help me that I may say something that will give you strength and increase your faith and your testimony.

We spend much of our time in our business and temporal affairs, in our educational, social, and recreational life. We spend a great deal of our time in government and politics. Probably that is as it should be, but I wonder how much time we actually spend in developing the spiritual side of our lives—probably, may I say, the better part of our lives? The older I become, the more I realize that this is the better side of our lives and certainly the most important side of our lives.

It is not uncommon for thousands of us Latter-day Saints to bow our heads in prayer and close our eyes, and to follow the prayer of him who may be mouth. Truly we are a praying people. The world has judged us to be a praying people, and we confess that we not only pray in large gatherings at conference, but we also pray every day of our lives, and we accept the principle of prayer.

I would like to say a few words about the Aaronic Priesthood. I am directing my remarks particularly to those concerned with Aaronic Priesthood boys from twelve to twenty-one. There are approximately seventy thousand of them in the stakes of the Church, not counting the missions. We also have about that same number of Senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood, wonderful men who bear the Aaronic Priesthood, or a total of approximately 140,000 men and boys holding that wonderful priesthood, the Aaronic Priesthood, which gives them the power and the blessing and the authority and the responsibility of acting in the name of God, our Eternal Father.

Sunday, April 3

Second Day

I hope, parents, that you will take an interest in these Aaronic Priesthood boys. Fathers and mothers, help them on Sunday mornings. They are sleepy; they are tired; they are growing boys. Help them to get up on Sunday morning and attend their priesthood meetings. You wonderful wives of the Senior members, encourage your husbands on Sunday morning to get up in time to put on their Sunday clothes and go to Church. That will give to them and to you great blessings that you will not know any other way.

May I try briefly to portray some of the incidents concerning the restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood? I would like to take you back to the beautiful Susquehanna River, near Harmony, Pennsylvania. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, two young men, age twenty-three and twenty-two, respectively, stood on those beautiful banks of the Susquehanna River in Pennsylvania. Their faces reflected the seriousness of their thoughts. It was evident that peace permeated their entire beings, and every act bespoke humility and faith in God, their Eternal Father. They had intentionally secluded themselves from the world that they might seek the counsel of their Father in heaven.

May 15, 1829—it was a beautiful day. Winter was over. Spring was in the air. Nature had painted the leaves of the trees with a delicate green. The song of the birds overhead blended with the sounds of the river to produce harmonious overtones that added serenity to that beautiful occasion. The sun cast its golden rays through the motionless leaves of the semi-dense overgrowth, making a wonderful study in light and shadow. All was calm and peaceful, that day. It was indeed a sacred spot and a sacred hour. Cares and worries and concern were largely overcome by the handiwork of God. The harmonious beauty that surrounded them contributed to the sacredness of the place and of the occasion, but the seriousness of their mission made them semi-oblivious to it. They now knelt together in humble prayer, seeking guidance from God, their Eternal Father.

These two young men were concerned about the principle of baptism for the remission of sins, and they desired to know more concerning the details of this sacred ordinance. What was the proper mode? How, and to whom, and by whom should this ordinance be performed? In their work of translating the Book of Mormon they had become concerned regarding the problem, as they contrasted the instructions of that sacred book with the practices of the churches of that day. They knew, however, that their Father in heaven would supply the wisdom they now sought.

And while they were engaged in prayer, a messenger, whom God had sent, appeared to them, and he spoke unto them. "I am thy fellow servant." The resurrected John the Baptist now stood before them—he, who had come out of the wilderness crying repentance to the people of his day; he, who had baptized our Lord and Savior at Bethabara in the River Jordan. Yes, this was the same John who on that sacred occasion heard the Father's voice from heaven declare, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. 3:17.) This was the same John who witnessed the Holy Ghost descend on Jesus; he, the literal descendant of Aaron who held the keys of the Aaronic Priesthood by right and ordination; he of whom the Lord said, "No greater prophet born of woman" (see Luke 7:28); he, who had been beheaded for his courageous denunciation of sin and for his love of truth. Now he stood before them in majesty; the glory that surrounded him was far more brilliant than the May sunshine. His presence dispelled all doubts and all fears, and these two young men opened their souls to partake of his great wisdom.

He then laid his hands upon their heads and conferred upon them the Aaronic Priesthood keys which he had held throughout the centuries. The words of that ordination prayer were indelibly impressed upon the minds of these two young men:

Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah I confer the Priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness. (D. & C. 13.)

He then told them that the Aaronic Priesthood was an appendage of the Melchizedek Priesthood, that it had not the power of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this power should later be given to them. Then he told these two young men that he came under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the Priesthood of Melchizedek, which priesthood, in due time, would be conferred upon them and which later was conferred upon them.

These two young men were then directed by this messenger to go down into the river, that beautiful Susquehanna River. Joseph Smith was instructed to baptize Oliver, and Oliver, in turn, was instructed to baptize Joseph. They were then to ordain each other to the Aaronic Priesthood by the laying on of hands. Joseph ordained Oliver to the Aaronic Priesthood first, and Oliver then ordained Joseph.

This glorious spiritual experience that followed their baptism and ordination to the priesthood was accompanied by the spirit of prophecy. As they left this hallowed spot, their hearts were light. The Aaronic Priesthood was again restored to the earth by an angel of God to his servants, the first time in many centuries for man to be divinely commissioned with the priesthood. This vision demonstrated conclusively that the heavens were not closed and gave positive proof of the promise of the resurrection.

I bear you my testimony that I know this priesthood was restored to the earth. I bear you my testimony that I know God lives and that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, our Redeemer and our Savior, our Elder Brother. I bear you my testimony that I know this is the true work that we are engaged in, and I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God. I know that President David O. McKay is a true, living prophet of God, our Eternal Father, and I bear you that testimony, and I know it to be true, and I know it by the power and gift of the Holy Ghost, that testifies to me that this is true. I bear you that testimony in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church.

The congregation will now join in singing, "Redeemer of Israel," conducted by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall.

After the singing, Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve will speak to us. We are very happy to have Elder Benson with us. His duties as Secretary of Agriculture in the Cabinet of the President of the United States may compel him to leave before the end of the Conference, but we are happy to have him with us today.

Singing by the Choir and congregation, "Redeemer of Israel."

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS and friends, seen and unseen: I approach this assignment this afternoon in deep humility. It is truly a sobering experience and yet a signal honor. I seek the inspiration of heaven and your faith and prayers as I attempt to speak for a few moments.

I am very grateful for the opportunity of being here at this great conference. I am grateful to President McKay for inviting me to come, and I would like to say to him, in response to his kind words, that I am sure no one on earth is as happy as I that I am able to be here today.

Sunday, April 3

Second Day

I am very grateful that the Lord permitted our plane to land during the storm last night, just in time to get to that great priesthood meeting. As President McKay referred to the fact that seventy-one different gatherings were assembled last night, and that we had never had this many outlets for the general priesthood meeting, I thought of a rather humorous thing that was said by one of our national entertainers on TV, who is helping in a promotion program for greater consumption of dairy products. We have had some excess of these commodities. This entertainer has been employed by the farmers of this country, through the American Dairy Association, whose president is one of our stake presidents. On the air he expressed his pride at being associated with this great organization, not only an organization of farmers, but also many millions of dairy cows. "Now," he said, "ladies and gentlemen, there may be organizations with more branches, but I am sure there is no organization with more outlets."

I rejoice with you, my brethren and sisters, in this great conference. I have received a spiritual uplift from the testimonies borne, and I am particularly grateful that I was able to hear the messages of the First Presidency in the priesthood conference session last night and again today. I cannot think of a richer experience than the experience of the last twenty-four hours.

I am grateful for all of the blessings that are mine. I have been sitting here today enumerating them. I am grateful to be able to live in this day, to enjoy the freedoms and the liberties which are ours and the associations which we have in the Church and in this great nation.

I am grateful for the confidence and the love of my brethren and sisters in the Church.

As I listened to that great message of the President this morning, a message which we all need in our homes, my heart filled with gratitude and thanksgiving that the Prophet of God could in very deed speak as one having authority on this very sacred and important subject of the home and family. I am grateful for my home and my family. I am grateful for my companion and for her inspiration, strength, and help. I know that I could not have accomplished the little that I have achieved, without her great faith, devotion, and support.

I am grateful that I have come from a good Latter-day Saint home.

I thank the Lord for the opportunity that has been mine to associate with my brethren of the General Authorities. For nine glorious years I had almost daily association with them. The last two years I have been in their presence much less frequently, and I am sure they will never know fully how much I have missed the very close and intimate association of those earlier years.

I am grateful for the faith and prayers of the Saints and for the support of good people everywhere in the responsibilities which are mine now in the government as well as in the Church. I thank God for the letters that have come during hours of stress from faithful members of the Church and good people elsewhere.

President McKay spoke of these wonderful mission presidents, and they are wonderful men. As he did so I thought of one who lies ill in a local hospital, whose illness I learned about since coming to this conference—one with whom I had the great pleasure of walking the streets of Holland at the close of the war—one of the most valiant. President Cornelius Zappey,* if you are listening in today, may I say to you that we love you, that God loves you for your devotion, and it is our prayer that he may see fit to restore you fully and speedily to health and strength. It is my hope and prayer that someday we may be able to team up again as missionaries, if not in this life, then in the eternities to come.

I am grateful for the glorious saving principles of the gospel, my brethren and sisters, for my progenitors who had the courage and the strength to accept the truth when they heard it and to join themselves with an unpopular people. I am grateful for the rich heritage which is mine. I am thankful for the mission of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, and for those who have succeeded him, for their valiant devotion to the truth. I am grateful that I have been made the recipient of the priceless blessings that have come through the gospel.

*President Zappey passed away April 22, 1955. He was a former president of both the Netherlands and the East Central States Missions. He had been released from the latter mission in March 1955.

Today I have in my heart a love not only for these, but also for all of God's children. I have no ill feeling toward any human being. With you, I hate sin, but I love the sinner. We all have need to repent.

I rejoice in the spread of the gospel and the growth of the Church in all the world. I have been thrilled as I have read the accounts of President McKay's visits to the missions in the South Pacific. I thrilled with the messages last night from two of our associates who reported on missionary activities in the South Pacific and way up in far-off Finland. I am very grateful, my brethren and sisters, for all of these priceless blessings.

I realize that through the ages there has been a tendency for truth to be pretty much on the scaffold and error on the throne. I recognize that there has been a tendency to revere prophets dead and to persecute the living oracles. I recognize that there are two great forces in the world. And as the Book of Mormon prophet said,

For it must needs be, that there is an opposition in all things. (2 Nephi 2:11.)

I am grateful that we have our free agency which to me is an eternal blessing, an eternal principle. I recognize that today Satan, the adversary, is still alert. He is not using the means of persecution towards this people which he once used, but he is still the enemy of truth, and he is using other methods today. He is probably using the method of encouraging complacency. He is probably making an effort to lull us away into a false security because things seem well in Zion. One of the Book of Mormon prophets said this would be the case in the last days. You remember Nephi's prediction when he said:

For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good.

And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion, yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.

Therefore, wo be unto him that is at ease in Zion!

Wo be unto him that crieth: All is well! (Ibid., 28:20-21, 24-25.)

Now, of course, the Church itself is God's great instrument to build and to save and to exalt men everywhere, through the application of the simple principles of the gospel. It is a way of life that will make men happy, and "men are, that they might have joy." This great instrument must withstand opposition and complacency.

The program of the Church, the mission of the Church is to build character, to lift men and women up, through giving them an opportunity to participate and take responsibility. It is our great privilege to learn of the truth and help to spread it to God's children everywhere, thus providing the means of leading them to exaltation.

In the last few weeks I have had the glorious privilege of visiting eleven of our Latin American countries. The visit was threefold in character. First of all, it was a response to invitations from leaders of those nations, particularly ministers of agriculture; it also provided an opportunity to get better acquainted with their agriculture, and also to learn something of the results of the exports which we are making into those nations, of breeding stock, such as beef cattle, dairy cattle, hogs, poultry, and also many strains of seeds; it also provided an opportunity, so the President of the United States thought, to help strengthen the bonds of friendship and understanding with our splendid neighbors south of the border.

I want to say to you, my brethren and sisters, it was a most satisfying experience. I am very grateful for the contacts I had with the Presidents of those nations, with the ministers of agriculture, and with the people generally. I appreciate the opportunity of visiting on ranches, farms, and plantations, getting into the homes of the people and feeling of their warm spirit and their friendliness toward the people of the United States.

I think the outlook down there is most encouraging. Those countries are on the march today, and they want to team up with the United States. They have a deep love and respect for our people here. They admire and respect our technology, our methods, our free enterprise system. They are very anxious to raise the standards of living of their own people by adopting the practices which we have followed in this country. There is an economic awakening in many of those countries, and I look for unheard of developments in the years ahead. I hope that those developments will include an increase and a spread of the restored gospel. They are moving, as it were, almost from the one-horse handplow to the caterpillar tractor overnight. They are not doing it with the slow transition as we have done it here.

Sunday, April 3

Second Day

I found they like to be referred to as Americans. They are very proud that they have thousands of their students here in the United States learning our way of life and learning of our agriculture and our technology. I found they were very happy to learn that to the Latter-day Saints the Promised Land, the land of Zion, includes all of North and South America. I was pleased to find, too, that there is evidence that communism has largely failed in those countries. True, there are some danger spots, still, but there is evidence that political stability is increasing. I was very much pleased as I visited personally with the Presidents of those republics, to hear them speak out in support of the principles of freedom which have meant so much to our great nation and our good neighbor to the north of us.

Our technical aid down south is paying off. They need technical assistance and encouragement more than they need grants. I feel that the future is bright, and I am very happy that our Church missions are spreading out in those lands.

I came back impressed that those people want us to help them to help themselves. The future looks bright, and I said to some of my associates upon my return that if I were a young man of twenty-five today, I would consider heading south. Probably when we get the inter-American highway completed, it will be easier for us to visit our neighbors to the south. I hope so.

I was pleased, too, to find in the travels to these eleven countries, that our Mormon people are found in almost every nation. Generally speaking, they are giving a good account of themselves. I was pleased with the contacts I had with them. Beginning in Cuba, in our visit with the then President-elect, Batista, and continuing through ten other nations—I was pleased that we had the opportunity to say something about the Church and explain the fundamentals of the gospel.

Sister Benson is a more effective missionary, I think, than her husband. It seems to me we have been shipping Church books down there for days since our return. We have sent many copies of our literature, mostly in response to conversations which she had with the gracious wives of the Presidents, ministers of agriculture, the ambassadors, and others.

I was pleased to meet our servicemen in Puerto Rico from Ramsey Air Force Base and from Fort Buchanan. In the Virgin Islands where I met, as a member of the Virgin Islands Corporation Board, I was surprised, as a certain technician, an electrical engineer, was invited in to consult with us, to find that he was a member of the Church. As similar experiences were repeated, I thought of the comment made by a businessman from the northcentral states sometime ago who registered in a Washington hotel and asked if there were any Mormons in Washington. The hotel clerk replied, "I suppose there are. They seem to be everywhere."

Well, I found them down there. Not very many, but a few of them almost everywhere! In Trinidad, which is in the British orbit, we found a member of the Church serving as one of the secretaries of the consulate. In Venezuela we had received advance letters from one or two families expressing the hope that we might hold a service while we were there. Then when I had the pleasure of addressing the American Chamber of Commerce in Caracas, who should be presiding there as president, but one of our Mormon boys from Tooele, Utah. It was a great thrill as we went from Caracas over to Barquisimeto to have the opportunity of holding a service in a hotel room with representatives of three or four Mormon families in that area and to find that they were eager to get a Sunday School started.

In Panama, in Costa Rica, in Nicaragua, of course, we found groups of the Saints and missionaries. It was always a great pleasure to see them at the airports or to hold a brief meeting with them or to join them for breakfast or lunch. I wish our busy schedule might have permitted us to spend more time with those fine groups. Quite by accident, because of plane trouble, we stopped in Guatemala. We had the opportunity during seven hours there, to view the lovely new mission home and chapel and to have a long visit with the ambassador, and to hear him speak in praise about our people. In fact, I was pleased everywhere that we went to find the Church well spoken of.

We completed our little two and a half weeks swing by spending a Sabbath day in Mexico City with President and Sister Bowman and the missionaries and the Saints in a large gathering there. Later the next day, as I visited with the President of that republic, he expressed surprise and apparently seemed somewhat pleased to find the number of people we have right in Mexico City of our faith. He had known of our people in the Colonies, and he spoke highly of the Church and its people.

So, I might go on, my brothers and sisters. I found, too, a very friendly press, as President McKay has reported. I think there was not one loaded question put to us in all of the press conferences that we had. It was not uncommon at the end of an hour-long press conference to have representatives of the press gather around after we had discussed agriculture, and say, "Now, Mr. Secretary, we would like to turn to another subject. We would like you to tell us something about the Church." It was always a great pleasure, of course, to tell them something about the history, the organization, and the doctrine of the Church.

So, my brethren and sisters—and I've not even mentioned Colombia—it seems to me that we have a great opportunity now, as the Church moves out into the world. The Church has a wonderful reputation. It is well thought of. It is well-known. It is so important today that all of our people, whoever they are and whatever they are, live the gospel, that they keep the commandments of God. And if they are isolated, it is important that they arrange to hold services in their own homes, that they invite in their neighbors to their Sunday Schools, that they might help to spread the gospel. In my humble judgment, the world is hungry for true religion, and we have it.

I am sure, my brethren and sisters, that in the days ahead, many will accept of the truth, particularly in the countries that I have just had the opportunity to visit.

I remember, as you do also, occasions where we have met with just a handful of people in an isolated area, and how the Lord was there with his Spirit. I remember meeting the Saints, way up in Selbongen, East Prussia, right after the war and in isolated places in Holland. I remember meeting the Saints in Czechoslovakia, just small groups. How well I remember that meeting referred to by President Matis last night far up in Larsmo, Finland. It was a small, isolated group, but the Spirit of God was present and touched the hearts of the people. So it will be everywhere our people meet if we just remain true and faithful. God grant we may do so.

May we be able to make our influence felt for good in the world because we must help to serve as the leaven which is going to leaven the world with righteousness. In large measure, that is our mission.

So, my brethren, may we prepare, as elders in Israel, to help enlarge and to strengthen the boundaries of Zion, enlarge her stakes, and build up the kingdom. God expects us to arise and shine because we are the salt of the earth, the light of the world, and I believe the hope of the world because we are the stewards of the revealed truth of God.

The Lord has made it very clear in the revelations. "Verily I say unto you all," he said, back in 1838, "Arise and shine forth, that thy light may be standard for the nations." (D. & C. 115:5.)

And six years earlier, he said to a

Sunday, April 3

Second Day

then struggling Church, small in numbers, inflicted with persecutions;

For Zion must increase in beauty, and in holiness; her borders must be enlarged; her stakes must be strengthened; yea, verily I say unto you, Zion must arise and put on her beautiful garments. (Ibid., 82:14.)

What are those garments? Those garments are the garments of righteousness, the garments of devotion to the truth—the gospel in action.

Our message is a world message, my brethren and sisters and friends. In that glorious first section in the Doctrine and Covenants, given as a preface to the Book of Commandments, the Lord had these words to say, which I quote to you in closing:

Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say: Hearken ye people from afar; and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together.

For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape; and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated. (Ibid., 1:1-2.)

These are sobering words, words from the Master, Jesus the Christ, through his Prophet, Joseph Smith, to all God's children.

May we not be at ease in Zion. We have a tremendous responsibility. This is God's work, my brethren and sisters and friends, and I give you my testimony today that I know that God lives, that he is a Personal God, that he hears and answers prayers. I know that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world, our Elder Brother, the Savior of mankind. I know, too, that Joseph Smith is and was a Prophet of God, an instrument in the hands of the Almighty in ushering in this the last and the greatest of all gospel dispensations. The priesthood has been restored; the truth is here in its fulness. I know it as I know that I live, and I thank God for that testimony, and pray his blessings upon all of us, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder Ezra Taft Benson, member of the Council of the Twelve, also Secretary of Agriculture in the Cabinet of the President of the United States. We shall now hear from President Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Council of the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Oscar A. Kirkham.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY GOOD brethren and sisters and friends, I realize that this is a very important and responsible position; that our words go out, the extent of which we do not know. It is needful, therefore, that we have the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord, that we may speak his truth. I trust that the few words that I say may find an echo in your hearts and be dictated by the Spirit of the Lord.

Near the close of a discourse by our Lord and Savior, many believed on him. It is written: "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed;

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8:31-32.)

The only truth that makes us free is the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In fact, all truth belongs to the gospel of Jesus Christ. When our Savior was brought before Pilate, Pilate questioned him and asked him if he were a king. Jesus answered, "Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." (Ibid., 18:37.)

Then Pilate asked him, "What is truth?" Perhaps the Savior had no time given him to answer. Perhaps he was silent, and from that time until now volumes have been written asking that question. The only true answer that has been given was given by the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

"And truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come." (D. & C. 93:24.) In other words, truth is that which endures. All else must perish. This being true, it behooves us to search for truth—this truth the Savior spoke of that makes us free.

Not all truth is of the same value or importance. Some truths are greater than others. The greatest truth, or the greatest truths, we find in the fundamentals of the gospel of Jesus Christ. First of all, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, who came into this world to die that men might live. That truth we should know. It is far more important to know that Jesus Christ is our Redeemer, that he has given unto us the principles of eternal life, than it is to know all that can be obtained in secular education.

It is far more important to know that baptism is for the remission of sins, and when properly performed by one who has the authority, remission of sins will come, and through the baptism following, of the Holy Ghost, we come back into the presence of God our Father, at last, through the guidance of the Holy Ghost.

To know the way to eternal life is far more important than all the learning that the world can give. We find that in the sacred principles which have been revealed for the last time, and in these ordinances which are being performed for the last time—that is, in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times—for the gospel will never be restored again. It has been restored to remain. The Lord has ordained his servants, and has given them authority to execute his laws, to preach his gospel, to cry repentance, to call upon men to humble themselves and receive these fundamental principles of eternal life.

The way of eternal life is here. The covenants that were promised that lead to that great gift are here. All men on the face of the earth have now the privilege not only of repentance, but also of remission of sins through the waters of baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, and to receive the covenants and obligations which were promised anciently that will bring them back into the presence of God, our Father.

These blessings are free. They are the most important truths in all the world. Brethren and sisters, we have received them. Let us be true and faithful, turning neither to the right nor to the left in the keeping of the commandments of the Lord, and by example as well as by precept, serve him, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Council of the Twelve, has just spoken to us, and we shall now hear from Elder Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of Seventy, who will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I TRUST THE Lord will be with me and bless me as I address you.

In the Third Epistle of John, the fourth verse, are these words:

I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth.

The greatest gift that can come to a boy, as I review the humble experiences of my own life, is that he may have good guidance, that he may sense a faith in God, and enjoy the gospel of Jesus Christ, that he may receive the gift of the Holy Ghost and hold worthily the Holy Priesthood.

The other evening a lad came to our home. He was accompanying a high priest. They were our ward teachers. The high priest said as he addressed us, "Brother Kirkham, we have a little

Sunday, April 3

Second Day

message for you from our bishop concerning our religion." The message was given. We felt the spirit of it. It was simple and sincere. I thanked them, then the high priest turned to the boy of fourteen, a teacher in the Aaronic Priesthood, and said, "John, you say a prayer for Brother Kirkham and his family." We were appreciative and listened, for we know that we have no greater joy than to know that we walk in truth.

Coming down on the elevator in our office building the other day, a young man recognized me and he said, "This is my mother, Brother Kirkham. I'm just back from my mission. She has worked continuously for me while I've been away. She has kept me. She saw that my check came every month to pay my expenses. Now, the Lord being willing, Mother is going on a mission. I will pay her way." The greatest gift that comes to us in early life is to be guided in simple truths, and to do the will of our Heavenly Father. As President McKay said to us this morning, "We are concerned with those simple, vital things that help us." That boy you meet tonight or tomorrow morning or the next day and what you say to him and do for him is all-important.

I know a boy in Iowa who one day was plowing in an open field. He did not know at the time that a very distinguished gentleman was passing by, but the man said, "The furrow in that open field was plowed so straight that I had to stop. Did you plow the first furrow in this field?" "Yes," said he. "They did not peg it off for you?" "No, sir." Then my friend said to the boy, "You'll plow many straight things in life. Good-bye."

Several years went by. My friend came again to Iowa. He was met by a gentleman, this time in a fine automobile. "Do you remember being in these parts about twelve years ago?" "Yes, I have a note here in my book of a straight furrow plowed in an open field by a boy." "Well," said the man, "I don't want you to say anything to these people about this incident, but I am the mayor of this city. I want to say to you, I was behind that plow. I was that boy. You journeyed on over the hill that day on your way. What you said as we chatted about 'The straight furrow' has lingered with me through these years. I wanted you to know that those few words have given me encouragement ever since that day."

We philosophize; we delve into great truths—these things enrich our lives, but it is still the simple things that are effective. We "have no greater joy than to hear that our children walk in truth."

May God bless us that this joy may ever be ours and that we may ever appreciate the sacred words of the Lord as given in the Holy Scriptures and with courage and simplicity live the truth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Elder Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of Seventy.

Tonight the Deseret Sunday School Conference will convene in the Salt Lake Tabernacle at 7:00 p.m. All Sunday School workers should be in attendance; others are cordially invited. We are informed by the Superintendent that provision will be made for overflow audiences in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall.

We express our appreciation to you ushers who have rendered such excellent service this day. We commend you for the orderly manner in which you have performed your duties.

We also express appreciation to the public press, to the reporters for their fair and accurate reports. Thank you. To the various radio and television stations, we wish to say that your assistance rendered here in our own city and state and in other states named throughout the sessions, has been the means of permitting tens of thousands to hear the proceedings of this Conference.

We have had a most unusual storm, you might find the roads still slippery. We caution drivers to be careful after the dismissal of this meeting. Practice courtesy. That is a great safety means on the highway, just simple courtesy.

The singing for this afternoon has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ. I have already expressed appreciation for you, I do so again for others who have been listening in this afternoon to the inspirational singing of this great organization.

The Choir will now sing, "The Hallelujah Chorus," with Elder Cornwall conducting. Elder Claudious Bowman, president of the Mexican Mission, will offer the benediction, following which this Conference will be adjourned until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

The "Hallelujah Chorus" was sung by the Choir.

Elder Claudious Bowman, President of the Mexican Mission offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 10:00 a.m., Monday, April 4th.

THIRD DAY MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Monday morning, April 4, at 10:00 a.m. The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, with John R. Halliday conducting, furnished the music for this session. President David O. McKay opened the meeting with the following remarks:

President David O. McKay:

Last Saturday night I announced the acceptance of the invitation extended to the presidents of stakes and bishops of wards and their wives,—an invitation of Mr. Hendry, Vice-President of the Intermountain Theatres,—to a pre-view showing of the excellent picture, "A Man Called Peter," to be shown in the Capitol Theatre and the Utah Theatre. I overlooked the fact that the presidents of stakes and the bishops of wards had already been invited and the invitation accepted to attend the Brigham Young University devotional program in the George Albert Smith Fieldhouse, Brigham Young University campus, at that same hour. It was my fault that permitted that conflict to occur. The invitation to Brigham Young University preceded the one extended by the Theatre, and questions have been asked by the presidents of stakes, "Which shall we attend?" So we are pleased to announce this morning, "Attend both of them." Mr. Hendry this morning very kindly postponed the Tuesday morning invitation or extended it until Thursday morning at the same hour in the same places, so that you will be able to attend the George Albert Smith Fieldhouse appointment as arranged. The buses will leave the Hotel Utah at 8 o'clock Tuesday morning, and "A Man Called Peter" will be presented to you, presidents of stakes and bishops of wards, and your wives, Thursday morning at 9:30. We thank President Wilkinson of the University and Mr. Hendry of the Theatres for these invitations.

The Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City is overflowing this morning with members of the Church who have gathered for the One Hundred Twenty-Fifth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. To those who are standing, and others, we are pleased to announce that overflow meetings will be held this morning in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall as heretofore, and these services also, for the benefit of those who are listening in, are being televised over KSL television, Channel 5, of Salt Lake City, and KID, Idaho Falls, Idaho, and will be heard over radio station KSL, and by arrangement through this station over 12 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Nevada, and Colorado. The names of these stations as heretofore have already been announced to the radio audience. Again we express appreciation to these stations for the excellent service they are rendering to the Church and to all their patrons.

You will notice this morning a group of choice young people gathered here to furnish singing. They are from the Brigham Young University,—the Combined Choruses from that great school,—and Elder John R. Halliday is conducting. Elder Alexander Schreiner is at the organ. We welcome them, and I am sure you will be thrilled with their singing, as always.

Monday, April 4

Third Day

We shall begin these services by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses singing, "For the Strength of the Hills," under the direction of Professor Halliday. The opening prayer will be offered by Elder J. Melvin Toone, president of the Canadian Mission.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses sang the hymn, "For the Strength of the Hills."

The opening prayer was offered by President J. Melvin Toone of the Canadian Mission.

President David O. McKay:

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses will now favor us with

"Thou Life of Life," conducted by Elder John R. Halliday, following which Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve will address us.

Singing by the Combined Choruses, "Thou Life of Life."

President David O. McKay:

We hope, students, that the loud-speakers are arranged properly so that you may now hear clearly the messages from the Brethren. That was inspirational. (Referring to the singing.)

Our first speaker this morning is Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder John Longden.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

ISN'T IT THRILLING, brothers and sisters, to hear these glorious young people sing praises to God and express their trust in him? It gives you a wonderful feeling of confidence, doesn't it, to know that the rising generation is made up of such marvelous young people.

Two weeks ago my wife and I had the opportunity of attending a meeting of some hundreds of M Men and Gleaner Girls, and there again we were impressed with the fact that our young people are great. Those hundreds of young people stood up in that meeting and gave the MIA theme for this year. I wish you could have heard them because they spoke with such clarity. They were in almost perfect unison, and as they said these words, it gave me a great thrill:

Seek not for riches but for wisdom, and behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich. (D. & C. 6:7.)

As I say, hearing those voices in unison say those inspired words, moved me deeply inside. I was so thrilled that young people could stand and say and believe that "he that hath eternal life is rich."

When my wife and I were in South America recently, we had the same kind of thrill because there we saw your sons and daughters, sometimes under difficult and even adverse circumstances standing in the glory of their young manhood and womanhood, in the glory of their membership in this Church, in the glory of being missionaries for the Son of God, speak in languages previously unknown to them, bearing testimony of the restoration of the gospel of Christ. Oh, how happy we were! How humble we felt in their presence, and again came to us this great conviction that the youth of Zion are a great people.

As I reflect upon the youth of Zion, I reflect also upon the homes from which they come. I know that great homes produce great people. Those homes need not be rich in this world's goods, but if they are rich in the wisdom of God, they are rich indeed, and young people who grow up in homes such as those are great young people.

You recall that the Savior at one time said: "... every good tree bringeth forth good fruit." (Matt. 7:17.) I know that even from a good tree occasionally a piece of fruit may fall, and as the prodigal go the way of all the earth, but that does not change the great underlying fact that "every good tree bringeth forth good fruit."

As I have studied your young people and mine, I have come to the conclusion that they are great because by and large they come from great homes. It has been my observation that where young people are active in the Church, as a general rule they come from homes where parents also are active in the Church.

Now, there are some exceptions, I know, but I say as a general rule great homes produce great young people. Parents who are active in the Church usually produce children who are active in the Church, again proving the truth of the Savior's words that "every good tree bringeth forth good fruit."

But I would like to read to you the rest of the Savior's words in that quotation. He said: "Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit." (Ibid., 7:17.)

Now what about the meaning of those words? Do homes which are not classed as good homes produce evil young people? And if they do, who must bear the blame?

There have been many public opinion polls taken in the United States, as you know, and I suppose they have touched almost every subject under the sun. There is not very much left uncovered by the time they get through.

I have been shocked and astonished at one of these public opinion polls which indicates that there is a higher percentage of drinkers of alcoholic beverages in the age group of fifteen to thirty years than in any other age group. This particular poll indicated that sixty-seven percent of American young people from fifteen to thirty years of age use alcoholic beverages occasionally or more or less regularly.

Now these studies, and others, tell us where these young people learn to drink. Again I was astonished to learn that the majority of the American young people who drink liquor learn to drink from their own parents.

A number of studies, as I say, have been made on this subject, some of them among college students, some among high school students, and even some elementary students have been brought into the study. One of the studies having to do with college students indicated that eighty-five percent of the drinking students have drinking parents. This same study, which included information on students who abstain from the use of liquor, said that seventy-seven percent of the students who abstain from the use of liquor have both parents who abstain from the use of liquor. Isn't that a great lesson? The majority of the drinking students drink because their parents drink. The majority of the abstaining students have parents who abstain.

One of these studies was conducted in the state of Idaho by the department of social studies of the University of Idaho, and the figures sustain the general results as obtained in other studies in eastern United States. They found that the drinking habits of students follow almost exactly the drinking habits of parents. I quote just one line from their report:

"The proportions of students who drank are approximately equal to the proportions of parents who drank with the knowledge of the students."

In eastern United States a study was made along the same lines. After the completion of the survey those who conducted it reported: "It certainly is not surprising to find a tendency for students to follow the example of their parents in deciding whether or not to drink."

Dr. Andrew C. Ivy, head of the department of clinical science at the University of Illinois, recently wrote an article in the magazine, Life and Health, entitled, "Why I Don't Drink." He commented on the fact that there are over sixty million drinkers in the United States, and after discussing that horrible fact, asked this question: "Who can save future citizens from drink?" He answered, "The fathers and mothers of today's children."

And then he said this: "Children, teen-agers, and college students drink and do other things that harm their bodies, characters, and lives largely because their parents do. If we are going to reverse the trend to moral decline and degeneration in our country, mothers as well as fathers are going to have to correct their own irresponsible behavior."

He goes on to say, "The question for parents to answer is: 'Has drinking alcoholic beverages contributed so much to my happiness that I want my child and all children to take the one in twenty chance of becoming an alcoholic?'"

Then he said, "Seventy percent of the chronic alcoholics in the United States started drinking as teen-agers."

In studies that have been made with regard to smoking habits, the same type of thing has been developed. It is discovered that by and large smoking parents have smoking children, and abstaining parents, by and large, have abstaining children. The same thing is true with Church activity, as I have already indicated. If parents reject religious activity, their children generally reject religious activity. If, on the other hand, as we have pointed out, parents are active and enthusiastic and faithful about their Church responsibilities, as a rule the children likewise are active.

And so we may reach some definite conclusions and say that where parents smoke they can expect their children to smoke. Where parents drink, they may expect their children to drink. Where parents deny religious activity and interest, they can expect their children to deny religious interest.

Now these same studies have gone into the questions: Why do people drink? Why do people smoke? I do not know anybody, with his eyes open, who would suppose that drinking would do him any good, or that smoking would do him any good. Even the merchants of these commodities are now changing the claims in some advertising that they are good for a person. I remember there was a time when they used to advertise that smoking was good for digestion, but they do not any more since the doctors have discovered that tobacco is one of the very worst things for your stomach, and that whether you smoke or chew the tobacco, you can get stomach ulcers from it, and you can develop cancer of the stomach from the ulcers. So tobacco companies have stopped advertising about how good for your digestion it is if you smoke cigars.

Why do people smoke, and why do they drink? According to these surveys, it is because they think it is smart. They think it is popular. They think it is the thing to do because the Joneses and others they happen to know and regard as smart also smoke or drink. For that reason they think they should take up the habit, and because parents who are blinded by this false notion of popularity lead their children, who are blinded by the bad example of their parents, they both fall into the ditch.

So we can begin to see the truth in the Savior's words, can't we, that a corrupt tree will bring forth evil fruit. I ask you parents if you have the right to gamble with the future lives and happiness of your children. If we set our children an example which is almost sure to lead to failure, what is our responsibility? If we should lead our own children into disaster, would we ever forgive ourselves?

Two weeks ago Brother [Delbert L.] Stapley and I happened to have the privilege of being in the same conference together. Brother Stapley there delivered one of his wonderful talks, and in his discussion gave me a new point of view on an old subject, and with his permission I would like to mention it here.

Brother Stapley was talking about the fact that children cannot be tempted by the devil before they are eight years of age because the Lord has not given Satan that right. Just suppose that there was a basketball game, and for eight minutes one of the teams was ruled off the floor while the remaining team stayed in there and pitched as many baskets as it could for eight minutes, and every basket would count. Just think about that.

And suppose there was a football game in which one of the teams was ruled off the field while the other made touchdowns for eight minutes, and every touchdown would count, and it could make these touchdowns without any opposition from the other team. Just think what kind of score it could develop!

You do not get that in athletics, but you do get it in the rearing of your children because during the first eight years of their lives, Satan has no right and no power to tempt those children. If they are tempted, if they sin, you have to blame somebody else besides Satan. During those first eight years you are left in the field without the opposition of Satan in the training of your children. For eight years you can train them, mold their characters, develop their faith, and teach them to pray, and to love God, and to keep his commandments, without any interference or any opposition from Satan.

Have you ever thought of it that way? I hadn't until Brother Stapley mentioned it, but I was glad he did because, as I say, it gave me a new point of view. The first eight years of a child's life in a Latter-day Saint home form the golden age for parents in the rearing of their children—a golden age when Mother and Father may set them the proper example, and play with them, and pray with them, and enjoy them, and develop Christlike traits of character in their children without the opposition of Satan.

Have you that kind of home? In your home are you setting up the circumstances and the surroundings whereby those children can get the most out of this golden age? Are you doing all you can while you do not have the interference of Satan to train those children? Or, on the other hand, are you careless enough so that you tempt your own children, so that you will lead them into paths of sin, so that you teach them by your own bad example how to do the things of the world?

Well, I come back again to the Savior's words: "... every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit." (Matt. 7:17.)

May our homes be good homes, from which we may send good young people, trained and reared in the gospel of Christ, is my humble prayer, in his holy name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened is Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve. Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve, will now speak to us. Elder Longden will be followed by Elder Levi Edgar Young.

ELDER JOHN LONGDEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY DEAR brothers and sisters, I am humbly grateful as I accept this great responsibility and assignment this morning, and testify to you that without the assistance of my Heavenly Father I would not even be able to stand here. I am grateful this morning for faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ. I am grateful this morning for faith in a divine, Living God; in the divine mission of his Son, Jesus Christ. I am grateful for faith that the gospel of Jesus Christ has been restored in its fulness, and I reflect at this moment on the words of David, oftentimes referred to as the Psalmist David, as recorded in the twenty-seventh Psalm:

The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? (Psalms 27:1.)

There was no fear in the heart and mind of David because I believe he was a prayerful man. He had implicit faith in God, his Father, and thus he was able to go forth in one experience as he faced the Philistine, the giant, Goliath. You will recall the great lesson there where Goliath indicated he would cut David up and feed him to the fowls and the beasts. David, even though he was small of stature by comparison, had the assistance of our Heavenly Father and his Son, Jesus Christ, and he said to Goliath:

Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied. (1 Sam. 17:45.)

And therein was the strength of David because he had not defied God. He was willing to live in submission to the teachings of righteousness. I am sure there was no spirit of arrogance in the mind of David at that time, but he was a humble, prayerful man.

We have a lesson in the attitude of prayer as given by the Master in the parable of the Pharisee and the publican. We are told that the Pharisee was grateful that he was not an extortioner. He was not an adulterer. He paid his tithes and his offerings. He fasted and he prayed, and he was not like unto this lowly publican.

And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for he that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. (Luke 18:13-14.)

We must have the spirit of humility as we seek God through this channel of prayer to give thanks unto him for all the blessings which are ours, particularly we, as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, that we have membership in his great Church—not the church of man, but the Church of Jesus Christ, for it bears his name.

Regarding the principle of prayer, the Savior, the Master himself, was asked by his disciples and others, "Teach us how to pray, and how shall we pray?" He replied:

After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name.

Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.

Give us this day our daily bread.

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen. (Matthew 6:9-13.)

We have there a simple prayer, a prayer that points the way to the throne of God, our Eternal Father, the Father of our spirits. The Savior further taught:

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you:

For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened. (Ibid., 7:7-9.)

I like the words of Robert Burns, the great Scotch poet:

They never sought in vain who sought the Lord aright.

I testify to you these words are true. As we seek the Lord aright, we shall not seek in vain. Jesus so taught. He said:

If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?

Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion?

If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him? (Luke 11:11-13.)

The Lord has revealed again in this day, as recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants in several sections (and I would commend your reading the twentieth, the thirty-first, the sixty-first, the sixty-eighth, and the ninety-third, which deal with this great power of prayer) that we should pray constantly, earnestly, and sincerely that we be not led into temptation, as has so beautifully been given to us this morning by Elder Petersen. We are told we should teach our children how to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

I want to tell the young people within the sound of my voice that it is nothing to be ashamed of that you humble yourself before the Lord in prayer. It is not a sign of weakness. I testify to you that it is a sign of great strength, for the Lord will be your light and your salvation. He is ever ready to assist us to continue in the path of righteousness. He does not fail us.

I am grateful for the power of prayer. I was thrilled last August as I attended the MIA conference in Los Angeles to witness prayer in action. They were preparing a huge chorus of fifteen hundred voices to appear in the Hollywood Bowl. The young singers had had their prayer, and the concert was just about ready to begin. It was my privilege to go back stage with the wonderful, humble, prayerful directors and accompanists. The purpose of this little gathering was to seek the Lord for his sustaining strength and power. Here were musicians with their degrees and their letters in music, who still relied on Almighty God, who is ever present to bless, to encourage, and to build. So they went forth upon their assignment with the humble assurance that they were not performing their duties alone. Seventeen thousand five hundred persons were witnesses of an outstanding performance, and I bear witness to you that our Father did hear and answer their prayer.

I should like to give you in conclusion an experience that came to my attention two days after the passing of that great prophet of God, Elder Matthew Cowley. It was given to me by a man who some thirty-five or forty years before had been district president of Brother Cowley down in New Zealand as he labored with those Maori people. He had only been out for two and one half months, and a district missionary conference was called. In one of those sessions, the morning session, Brother Cowley had an opportunity to speak. As the story has been related to me, he spoke for fifteen or twenty minutes in a fluent Maori tongue, so much so that it amazed the older Maori people in the congregation.

After the meeting, the district president and Brother Cowley were walking to a Maori home to partake of food between the sessions, and the district president said, "How did you do it?" Brother Cowley asked, "Do what?" "How did you master this Maori language in such a short time?" A young missionary, seventeen years of age!

Brother Cowley said, "When I came here I did not know one word of Maori, but I decided I was going to learn twenty new words each day, and I did. But when I came to put them together, I was not successful." By this time they were passing a cornfield, and Brother

Cowley said, "You see that cornfield? I went out there, and I talked to the Lord, but before that, I fasted, and that night I tried again, but the words just didn't seem to jell. So the next day I fasted again, and I went out into that cornfield, and I talked to the Lord. Again, I tried that night with a little more success. On the third day I fasted again, and I went out into the cornfield, and I talked to the Lord. I told the Lord that I believed his Church and kingdom had been established upon the earth; that men had the authority to proclaim the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ which pertained to the salvation and exaltation of our Heavenly Father's children. I told him that I had been called by this same authority to fill a mission, but if this was not the mission in which I was to serve to please make it known because I wanted to serve where I could accomplish the greatest amount of good."

That was the spirit of Brother Cowley. He said, "The next morning, as we knelt in family prayer in that Maori home, I was called upon by the head of the household to be mouth. I tried to speak in English, and I could not. When I tried in Maori, the words just flowed forth, and I knew that God had answered my prayer and this was where I should serve." A young lad seventeen years of age!

Brothers and sisters, friends of the radio and television audience, I bear witness to you in all humility and sincerity that God does today hear and answer prayer if we will put our hearts and our lives in tune with his Spirit and with his commandments.

I humbly pray that we may continue to exercise and take advantage of this great invitation which the Lord has extended, that we may humble ourselves in prayer, teach our children to pray, that they may have the strength and the light of Jesus Christ in their lives. I bear witness to you that these things are true, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

WHILE I SPEAK these few minutes, may I have the Spirit of the Lord to direct me.

I rejoice with you in the great messages we have heard from our First Presidency on the important question of teaching and the proper training of our children. The first thing we should teach our children is respect for all human beings. All are children of God. Man is made in the image of God. Respect for all men leads to a love for law and order. In the home is taught obedience to the loving directions of our Father in heaven. Then comes self-discipline, self-direction. Whether we are teachers of the gospel or professional men, we can and should dedicate ourselves to help our children to develop their potentialities for good, for truth, for love, for beauty, and above all, reverence for God.

Our young people must be educated to think clearly and deeply, and students of schools and universities should be taught that the famous authors and philosophers of the world have produced writings which glorify God and the divinity of man. We are reminded of the words of Carl Schurz, when he said: "Ideals are like stars; you will not succeed in touching them with your hands. But like a seafaring man on the desert of waters, you choose them as your guides, and following them, you will reach your destiny."

We teach the gospel of good works. It is excellent; it is ennobling; but that is not all. Man owes to God and to his fellow men, not only his conduct, but also his thoughts, not only to do much, but also to think aright as to honor, integrity, and honesty.

To understand the true value of the ideals of the American people when they think of their government of the United States, one must recall the character of the people who settled these shores in the seventeenth century. "They brought hither in their little ships, not money, not merchandise, no array of armed force, but they came freighted with religion, learning, law, and the Spirit of God. They stepped forth upon the shore, and a wild and frowning wilderness received them." Strong in their faith in God, they began their combat with danger and hardship. Disease smote them, but they fainted not. At times they had nothing to eat but the roots of the plants they gathered. They first built houses for God and then for themselves. They established schools and developed a strong morality which was always their principal characteristic. They educated their children to a high faith in God. Villages began to smile; churches arose; industries multiplied; colleges were established; and every town had a democratic government for all to take part. The states that were formed grew into a nation with noble, fundamental ideas of government. And so came our own United States, the most democratic government in the history of the world. What a glorious history our early country had, for religious people went not only to New England, but we have also the Quakers and the Methodists and other religious groups settling along the Atlantic Coast.

For this reason and others, we believe that honest inquiry into any field of knowledge should be encouraged. But one should always have for a guiding thought his need for beauty, for goodness, for love, and the communion with the divine. "To me," says Dr. Green of Yale University, "truth, beauty, goodness, and Deity are ultimate objects of our search, as is nature for the scientist. I am profoundly impressed by the witness of sincerely and intelligently religious folk, the saints and prophets of the great religions, that man can encounter Deity, and find in that Deity a source of understanding and comfort."

In a General Epistle of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, issued December 23, 1847, at Winter Quarters and signed by President Brigham Young, we have these words:

The Kingdom of God consists in correct principles; and it mattereth not what a man's religious faith is; whether he be a Presbyterian, or a Methodist, or a Baptist, or a Latter-day Saint or "Mormon," or a Campbellite, or a Catholic, or an Episcopalian, or Mohometan, or even pagan, or anything else, if he will bow the knee, and with his tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ, and will support good and wholesome laws for the regulation of society, we hail him as a brother, and will stand by him while he stands by us in these things; for every man's religious faith is a matter between his own soul and his God alone. . . .

We ask no pre-eminence; we want no pre-eminence; but where God has placed us, there we will stand; and that is, to be one with our brethren, and our brethren are those that keep the commandments of God, and do the will of our Father who is in heaven; and by them we will stand, and with them we will dwell in time and in eternity. (Journal History, Dec. 23, 1847.)

How nobly did the Prophet Joseph Smith declare this ideal when he said:

We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may. (Eleventh Article of Faith.)

It is to be remembered that there are men walking the earth and beckoning us to follow them to the future—not abreast of us, but ahead of us. Religion explains them as men blessed of heaven; men so spiritually endowed as to be able to respond to the inspiration of the infinite, which they know comes from God. They are good men, and wonderful is the vitality of goodness. Men are keeping faith and virtue and are working for the freedom and happiness of the human race. Their discipline is the loyalty of each man's heart to the voice of God. These men look for authority, for principles, for divine government. They have noble thoughts, beautiful sentiments, worthy aspirations, courageous living for a true and happier life. They know that God has not separated himself from the world nor does he lightly regard anyone's need. There is a true light which "lighteth every man that cometh into the world" (John 1:9), a saying rich in promise. God reveals his principles of eternal life to good men who have discerning vision and deep faith. The world has always had such men; it has such men today.

In all of our history there has been nothing in the way of persecution by the Latter-day Saints of other people, but we have been taught by the Prophet Joseph Smith from the beginning, when God spoke to him, that all are children of God and that we should approach them with love and the testimony that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world.

Someday, he will be found again among the thirsting people for whom he lived and died. As he came back after his death to confirm the faith of his disciples, and to comfort their desolate hearts, so will he come again to establish his kingdom in the earth and usher in the reign of peace. May we be blessed with a love for mankind, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, at this moment I am so nervous and excited I don't know whether my sermon has been delivered yet or not.

I have been deeply moved by the powerful discourses given during the course of this conference. I am grateful to be one of you. I have all but been lifted out of this world and made to feel very close to the other side, not only because of the experience I am having at this moment, but also because of the wonderful things that have been said and the Spirit by which they have been spoken.

Monday, April 4

Third Day

Then I begin to feel that maybe we are not very far from the other side at any time, after all. Reference has been made to the spirits that come here every day to inhabit these little new bodies, these spirits, pure, sweet, innocent. They cannot speak to us. They cannot tell us of the great experience that they had in the sphere from which they just came, but every day they are coming here—messengers from the spirit world. Then they live here in this mortal life a few years, some a very short time, maybe a few hours, a few days, a few years, and for the best of us not too many years.

Then we leave this life. People every day leave this life, returning again to the presence of our Heavenly Father. They can speak. They can report. They can tell of our faithfulness and of how the work is progressing here in this life.

In the past few days I learned of a person whose remaining days in mortality have been measured out to him. They said he could only live one more week. Then I thought about others—those I have read about in the newspapers, some who, it has been said, could only live another month, or a few months, or some, perhaps a year. I began to wonder what I would do if someone said to me, "Your days are measured. You will only live here one more week, or one more month," realizing the great work there is to do and all that I might have done, all that I should have done, and now time is running out. What would I do?

I think, brethren and sisters, possibly the first thing I would do is try to make peace with everyone that I have learned to know, and I would do some fast repenting, even though it might not be very effective. It would be better to be in a repentant mood all the time.

I am sure time is measured for you, for me, and for all of us. Maybe not in so many days—perhaps we have not been told how many days we will yet live upon this earth, but we certainly know of the great work that we must do while we are still here. Someone wrote these few lines that I thought were rather interesting:

Suppose you live to be seventy. How long is it? How many years of that span will really count? Allow for eight hours out of twenty-four in which you lie unconscious, asleep in bed. Subtract your kid days and your old age. Deduct the days when sickness puts you out of the game, and seventy years is not very long after all, is it? But it is all the time you've got. What are you going to do with it? Life is time. Kill time and you commit suicide. Footprints in the sands of time are not made by sitting down. When the Great Referee calls time, have something worth while to show.

I think our short life here in mortality is something like taking a journey. Many of you have taken a long journey to get here to conference, and you are going to take one to return to your homes. Many of us travel every week. We get road maps, we get books on travel, and we discover where we are going, but often as we travel down a highway, we come to an intersection that is not very well marked, and we do not know which way to turn. Often we get on a detour, and we travel an hour or two hours or three hours or a hundred miles or two hundred miles before we discover we are lost.

Then we have to turn around and come back. Have you ever discovered when you return to the point where you begin your detour that that time is lost? You cannot turn your watch back. You cannot turn time back. We have just lost two hours or four hours or two hundred miles of that journey, and it is gone forever.

I think sometimes some of us traveling this mortal life of ours are doing some detouring. We are not coming to our meetings as faithfully as we should. We are not keeping the commandments of our Heavenly Father all the way. We are not doing all the things that the Lord has asked us to do—we are detouring, we are losing time, and that time can never be made up again. That time is lost.

I have learned, too, that while there are many roads that come to Salt Lake City to bring you to general conference, according to the scriptures there are only two roads that we can travel as it pertains to our spiritual life. One is the broad road that leads to destruction and damnation—the other, the straight and narrow road that leads to life eternal.

Often I feel when we detour we get off the straight and narrow path, and we lose time. We actually waste time. We do not do the thing that the Lord expects us to do to inherit the great blessings that he has in store for us. Therefore, I would suggest to every member of the Church, that while we cannot change the length of time we live in mortality, we can change what we do with the time we have at our disposal. Keep the commandments. Be loyal to the leadership of the Church. Help build up the kingdom of our Heavenly Father. Pay your tithes. Pay your offerings.

Security comes from the paying of tithes! Everything we have belongs to the Lord. He said, "Return a tenth of your increase." For giving a tenth of it back he promises us great blessings—great blessings to return a tenth of what he has given us, and many have a difficult time understanding its importance.

Living in a world filled with evil and temptations, it is not always easy to do the things we know we should do. I wish to refer again to the spirits coming from the spirit world, inhabiting little mortal bodies to live a life under these conditions. I am particularly interested in one of these at this very moment, for I am expecting my thirteenth grandchild. It might be being born right at this moment. It might be this afternoon, and it might be in the days to follow. As I think of the journey this little spirit will travel in mortality, I think of the anxiety existing in the spirit world as they bid farewell to a spirit to come to this life. The mourning and sorrow and grief must be much greater than it is when one leaves this life returning to the other side.

I hope, brethren and sisters, we will all have a desire to make our trip a round trip—from the presence of our Heavenly Father back again to the presence of our Heavenly Father. I must not take longer. In closing, I would like to relate a story that I have told a number of times, which some of you have heard before, but it has a point to it worth consideration.

It is about the golfer who went out on the golf course and placed his ball on a tee. He raised his club and drove the ball way down the fairway, and when he finally found it, it was in the center of a large anthill. He stepped up close to it, took another club out of his bag, and swung at the ball. He missed it and tore out about a third of the anthill. He stepped up a little closer. He raised his club and swung a second time. He missed the ball again and mutilated the anthill on the other side. By that time the remaining ants in the anthill became very much alarmed at what was happening to their homes, their relatives, their friends, and they called together their leaders very hurriedly for a solution. A moment later the leaders made this report: "If you want to be saved, you had better get on the ball."

Think it over, brethren and sisters. I think that would fit our lives in many ways. Think it over, and then conform your lives with the time that has been allotted to you. Stay on the straight and narrow pathway that leads us back again into the presence of our Heavenly Father to enjoy with him the great blessings of the righteous and the faithful.

That this may come to each and every one of us I pray sincerely and humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened is Bishop Carl W. Buehner of the Presiding Bishopric. We shall now hear from Elder Marion D. Hanks of the First Council of Seventy, who will be followed by Elder Delbert L. Stapley.

ELDER MARION D. HANKS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I SHOULD LIKE to join briefly with Brother Petersen in commending and bearing my witness of faith in the young people of the Church in this day. Ten days ago I met with a great conference of servicemen at the Lackland Air Force Base near San Antonio. It was a marvelous experience and one which I appreciated and was grateful for. Yesterday I met two of those fine young men in this conference; they had flown in from Lackland with some twenty-five others. Unfortunately the storm that prevented the delivery of our flowers for this conference also stopped their landing here. They had to go back to Denver and then on back to their base (except these two), since they had to be there this morning. They missed, the twenty-five, the blessing of being here, yet their faith in coming evidenced their courage, their devotion, and the great loyalty they and their generation have for the Church.

I am grateful I am connected closely to them and with them in bonds of love and faith in God and the message of the great restoration.

Notwithstanding the pressures of this experience, I sat yesterday afternoon almost wishing I might be called in order that I might then bear timely testimony of appreciation to the two men who offered the prayers at that session. Since we last met in conference, I have had the wonderful blessing of touring two of the great missions of this Church which are presided over by those two men, President Peter J. Ricks and President Claudious Bowman. I should like to say of them and the many like them and the thousands who serve with them through the call of the Lord, that they are common and humble men in the very finest sense of those terms, but that they have uncommon faith and uncommon courage and uncommon dignity in the great work they do. As I thought of them I thought of some words of Thomas Carlyle. I went home and copied them last night:

Two men I honor and no third. First, the toil-worn craftsman that with earth-made implement laboriously conquers the earth and makes her man's. A second man I honor and still more highly: him who is seen toiling for the spiritually indispensable, not daily bread, but the bread of life.

These men and the thousands like them who preside over the wards and stakes, the branches, the districts, the missions of the Church, are men who know the task of "toilworn implement" using, but who know that more important even than this significant opportunity in God's world, the right to work for one's bread, is the great blessing and responsibility of seeking that which is spiritually indispensable, and which is the most important thing a man can seek.

I honor these men, and I feel very humble as I travel in their presence and bear witness with them of the truths God has given us to know.

I read recently out of a newspaper a few words I should like to call to your attention as an example of another great idea these men call my attention to. Dateline, New York City, last August 7, from a press service, these words, written by three ministers of Christian denominations:

The true ministry of the layman is being rediscovered. He is now coming back to the function he exercised in the early church. There is today in the church a great resurgence of Christian interest on the part of the laity. In ancient times, in the days of Christ, there was not the marked distinction between the laity and clergy. Laity as used in the New Testament simply meant the people of God, but through the centuries more and more of the work of the church fell on the shoulders of those who made it their full time profession. The liturgical movement in both Catholicism and Protestantism is winning back for the laity their ancient rights in the Church's worship life. The layman in his secular work is increasingly seeing his vocation as that of the Church's chief evangelist. He is the church in the world.

This is a truth spoken by men of good will and courage and devotion, but which has been available to the knowledge of these and other men since the days of the Prophet of God who died in the year 1844 at the hands of intolerant neighbors. The teaching, preaching, leadership of the Church should be done in Christ's Church today as it was done in his day—by the humble members of the Church, laymen holding the priesthood and authority of God. These and other truths are here available to men, and the world is beginning to learn some of them.

Last week-end, a counselor in one of the great stakes I had the privilege of visiting called attention to certain recent articles dealing with the way a chapel ought to be built, saying that in our day churches are coming to the conclusion that chapels ought to be built with classrooms attached and with recreational facilities.

I say to these good and honest people that from the beginning of the restoration of the gospel of the Lord, it has been known that the gospel was meant to take care of the full life of man; and whenever they find a Latter-day Saint chapel fully completed and dedicated, they will invariably find that there are in it classrooms and recreational facilities designed to provide for development in all the aspects of the lives of its members—physical, social, intellectual, cultural, as well as spiritual.

There is time for but one other thought. I read recently in one of our great national magazines a few words I thought to be highly significant about our relationship with our Father in heaven. This came from one of the great religious leaders of our day, a man whom I have revered and whose works I have read since I was a boy. Says he:

Vital religion cannot be maintained and preserved on the theory that God dealt with our human race only in the far past ages, and that the Bible is the only evidence we have that our God is a living, revealing, communicating God. If God ever spoke, he is still speaking. He is the great I Am, not the great He Was.

This truth, so majestic and magnificent and basically important, is a truth which has been available anew to mankind since 1820, when a humble, simple boy had enough humility and enough real love of truth to seek from his Father in heaven a manifestation of those things he needed to know, to find his place, his purpose, and his constructive work in life.

The answer is that God does live, that the Savior is the great I Am; he has always been, he shall always be. God's truths are revealed to men when they will pay the price of seeking earnestly, and finding, being willing to accept, and accepting, then dedicating themselves consistently and loyally to him and to his cause.

I am grateful that I have been, by the providence of God, brought into an age and into a Church where the truths are known of which I am able to bear witness today: That God does live, that he does reveal his truths, that this is the Church of Jesus Christ on the earth, that we may through obedience to his word find peace, here and now, enjoy eternal opportunity commensurate with our preparation for it, and arrive at a reunion with him who made us and who is our Father which art in heaven. Of this I testify in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

BISHOP BUEHNER, commenting upon the limited time allotted us in life, and the fact that many detour and get lost and thus fail to find the narrow way that leads to life eternal, brings me to the theme that I should like to discuss with you this morning.

Among the many choice teachings given by the Savior in that inspiring Sermon on the Mount, is this important instruction:

Enter ye in at the strait gate . . .

Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. (Matthew 7:13-14.)

Monday, April 4

Third Day

You will observe that I have quoted only the positive elements of this scripture. To enter the straight gate implies obedience to gospel requirements, and the narrow way that leads to life connotes additional requirements, rites, and ordinances for all who desire salvation and exaltation. Like so many teachings of our Lord, the interpretation, explanation, and procedures were left for his chosen prophets by inspiration and revelation, when the time was ready, to unfold to man's knowledge. It is true of this scripture.

I should like to ask, "What is the straight gate spoken of by the Savior by which we should enter?" Nephi, in the closing days of his ministry, gave a great discourse to his people embodying much in the way of prophesying, and in it furnishes the most direct and comprehensive answer to this question by saying:

For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water; and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost. (2 Nephi 31:17.)

Nephi also said to his people: "Wherefore, do the things which I have told you I have seen that your Lord and your Redeemer should do; for, for this cause have they been shown unto me, that ye might know the gate by which ye should enter." (Idem.)

Nephi, in vision, almost six centuries before the coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, in the flesh, witnessed his baptism at the hands of John the Baptist, even as we have it recorded in the third chapter of Matthew, when our worthy Lord came to John and asked to be baptized of him. But John, humble as he was, realizing that this was his Lord, objected by saying,

I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?

And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him.

And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him:

And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Matthew 3:14-17.)

In this scripture we see the plan and the way to enter this straight gate, even baptism by water and receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost; the Savior saying to John by way of emphasis, "for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."

Now what did the Savior mean by making this statement? Again we turn to the writings of Nephi and read:

And now, if the Lamb of God, he being holy, should have need to be baptized by water, to fulfil all righteousness, O then, how much more need have we, being unholy, to be baptized, yea, even by water!

And now, I would ask of you, my beloved brethren, wherein the Lamb of God did fulfil all righteousness in being baptized by water?

Know ye not that he was holy? But notwithstanding he being holy, he sheweth unto the children of men that, according to the flesh he humbleth himself before the Father, and witnesseth unto the Father that he would be obedient unto him in keeping his commandments.

Wherefore, after he was baptized with water the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove.

And again, it sheweth unto the children of men the straightness of the path, and the narrowness of the gate, by which they should enter, he having set the example before them.

And he said unto the children of men: Follow thou me. (2 Nephi 31:5-10.)

Here we see the straightness of the gate by which the Son of God entered our Heavenly Father's kingdom and the reason for his doing so, which sets the example and pattern for all mankind to follow, for said he, "Follow thou me and do the things which ye have seen me do."

Now, my brothers and sisters, let us consider what the narrowness of the way signifies. After explaining what is required to enter the straight gate, Nephi continues by saying:

And then are ye in this straight and narrow path which leads to eternal life; yea, ye have entered in by the gate; ye have done according to the commandments of the Father and the Son; and ye have received the Holy Ghost, which witnesses of the Father and the Son, unto the fulfilling of the promise which he hath made, that if ye entered in by the way ye should receive.

And now, my beloved brethren, after ye have gotten into this straight and narrow path, I would ask if all is done? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for ye have not come thus far save it were by the word of Christ with unshaken faith in him, relying wholly upon the merits of him who is mighty to save.

Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life.

And now, behold, my beloved brethren, this is the way; and there is none other way nor name given under heaven whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God. And now, behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and the only true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end. (Ibid., 31:18-21.)

My brothers and sisters, we see from this that the function of the Holy Ghost to those who have received its bestowal is to guide in the narrow way to an understanding of what is required for eternal life and glory. Men, through faithfulness, must become worthy for ordination to the Holy Melchizedek Priesthood, that priesthood after the order of the Son of God, which ordination and priesthood makes possible receiving the spiritual blessings of God's kingdom, for it is in the gospel ordinances officiated in by the authority of the Holy Priesthood that the powers of godliness are manifest unto men in the flesh. In this dispensation God has restored the keys, powers, and authorities to officiate in all the sacred ordinances with the right to seal and bind for time and all eternity both the living and the dead.

For the sacred purpose of obtaining the higher gospel ordinances and blessings, God has commanded that temples should be built wherein his people can receive their endowments and sealings, to prepare them for celestial glory. Worthy women, as worthy men, enjoy the privileges of temple ordinances and blessings, receiving them by the authority of the Holy Melchizedek Priesthood. Both make covenants with God, and both accept obligations and responsibility; also pledge faithfulness and obedience to God.

When the cornerstone of the great

Salt Lake Temple was laid, Brigham Young, in a discourse to the people assembled for that important occasion, said that very few of the elders in Israel understood the endowment, and for them to understand they must experience, and for them to experience, a temple must be built. Then he summarized the endowment in these words:

Your endowment is to receive all those ordinances in the House of the Lord which are necessary for you after you depart this life, to enable you to walk back to the presence of the Father, passing the angels who stand as sentinels, being enabled to give them the key word, the signs and the tokens pertaining to the Holy Priesthood, and gain you eternal exaltation in spite of earth or hell.

How sublime, comprehensive, significant, and important the endowment becomes when we understand it. When one has been endowed according to the order of temple rights and ordinances, then he or she is prepared for eternal sealing of husband to wife, wife to husband, and children to both, by men authorized and possessing the keys of this sealing power. Families thus united may go on to perfection, exaltation, and eternal happiness together.

We learn this from the writings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, found in both the 131st and 132nd sections of the Doctrine and Covenants. The Lord, speaking to the Prophet, said,

In the celestial glory there are three heavens, or degrees;

And in order to obtain the highest a man must enter into this order of the priesthood, [meaning the new and the everlasting covenant of marriage];

And if he does not he cannot obtain it.

He may enter into the others, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase. (D. & C. 131:1-4.)

Those who do not enter this order of the priesthood, that is, the eternal covenant of marriage, become angels of God in a separate and single state forever and ever, and thus are without increase of posterity in the eternal world; therefore without posterity they have no need of a kingdom. That is verified in the writings of the Prophet Joseph in the 132nd section of the Doctrine and Covenants which I quote:

Monday, April 4

Third Day

Therefore, if a man marry him a wife in the world, and he marry her not by me nor by my word, and he covenant with her so long as he is in the world and she with him, their covenant and marriage are not of force when they are dead, and when they are out of the world; therefore, they are not bound by any law when they are out of the world.

Therefore, when they are out of the world they neither marry nor are given in marriage; but are appointed angels in heaven; which angels are ministering servants, to minister for those who are worthy of a far more, and an exceeding, and an eternal weight of glory.

For these angels did not abide my law; therefore, they cannot be enlarged, but remain separately and singly, without exaltation, in their saved condition, to all eternity; and from henceforth are not gods, but are angels of God forever and ever. (Ibid., 132:15-17.)

Now, important as it might be to be appointed a ministering angel of God, certainly far more happiness would come to an individual to have at his side a loving companion, children, posterity—throughout the eternity, and unless we enter into this holy covenant of marriage and have it sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, these blessings cannot be obtained by us.

Referring again to this same section, the Lord said to the Prophet Joseph:

And again, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife by my word, which is my law, and by the new and everlasting covenant, and it is sealed unto them by the Holy Spirit of promise, by him who is anointed, unto whom I have appointed this power and the keys of this priesthood; [and then certain conditions are enumerated]; ... it shall be done unto them in all things whatsoever my servant hath put upon them, in time, and through all eternity; and shall be of full force when they are out of the world; and they shall pass by the angels, and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things, as hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever.

Then shall they be gods, because they have no end; therefore shall they be from everlasting to everlasting, because they continue; then shall they be above all, because all things are subject unto them. Then shall they be gods, because they have all power, and the angels are subject unto them.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye abide my law ye cannot attain to this glory.

And now mark you,

For strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto the exaltation and continuation of the lives, and few there be that find it, because ye receive me not in the world neither do ye know me.

But if ye receive me in the world, then shall ye know me, and shall receive your exaltation; that where I am ye shall be also.

This is eternal lives—to know the only wise and true God, and Jesus Christ, whom he hath sent. (Ibid., 132:19-24.)

Therefore, my brothers and sisters, these conditions then meet the requirements for the narrowness of the way. It involves receiving the temple ordinances and sealings, keeping all the commandments of God, remaining faithful and devoted to the end of mortal life, which then earns the great gift of eternal life.

Nephi, Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, true servants and prophets of God, by inspiration and revelation have interpreted and explained the significance of this important statement of the Savior. All who have repented and then been baptized and received the Holy Ghost by authorized servants of God have entered in by the straight gate. The narrow way can only be followed by obedience and faithfulness to all the sacred ordinances and requirements of the higher gospel plan, obtained in the holy temples of God.

This is the true doctrine of Christ. This is the order and law of the Holy Priesthood. There is no other plan nor way to obtain eternal lives, and a continuation of posterity. God again said to the Prophet:

For all who will have a blessing at my hands shall abide the law which was appointed for that blessing, and the conditions thereof, as were instituted from before the foundation of the world. (Ibid., 132:5.)

Let us understand these things, my brothers and sisters, and if we have not taken care of the conditions that lead into the narrow way and that take us to eternal life, let us submit to the requirements of these great principles and ordinances and teach all others to do likewise, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLEOf the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

TWO YEARS AGO Elder LeGrand Richards was addressing a convention in this city of men of various faiths and denominations, and he began his remarks by calling them all to repentance. I had the opportunity recently of meeting that same group and to realize the tremendous impact that that statement made upon them by one who spoke with authority.

And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world.

Monday, April 4

Third Day

Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. (1 John 4:14-15.)

Our mission in this Church is twofold. We must call all people to repentance, and to those who hearken unto our words teach the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Repent and believe the gospel.

Christ said he came to call sinners to repentance and to save them.

Repentance grows out of faith in God. No matter how good we are, we have all sinned and have fallen short of the glory of God. As Alma of old said:

We must come forth and stand before him in his glory, and in his power, and in his might, majesty, and dominion, and acknowledge to our everlasting shame that all his judgments are just; that he is just in all his works, and that he is merciful unto the children of men, and that he has all power to save every man that believeth on his name and bringeth forth fruit meet for repentance. (Alma 12:15.)

I am sure we all need to pray, "O God, have mercy on me a sinner."

Nothing is so much calculated to lead people to forsake sin as to take them by the hand and watch over them with tenderness.

So long as there is sin among men, repentance is as essential in one age of the world as in another. Joseph Smith said: "God does not look upon sin with allowance, but when men sin there must be allowance made for them." (See D. & C. 1:32-33.) We read:

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. (John 3:16-17.)

We have a great example of the fruits of repentance when we go back to the Day of Pentecost, when the Apostles of old bore this testimony to the multitude, and they each heard it in their own tongue:

Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same

Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ. (Acts 2:36.)

This testimony of the Apostles provoked the inquiry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (Ibid., 2:37.)

And then Peter gave the most wonderfully inspired reply:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Ibid., 2:38.)

that greatest of all promises which God has made to man.

It was the same with Paul, on the road to Damascus, when he questioned the Lord, "Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." (Ibid., 9:5.) And then Paul asked the Savior, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?" (Ibid., 9:6.)

Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you.

Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded.

Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness.

Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up. (James 4:7-10.)

What business has any citizen of the kingdom to talk of a certain standard which is meant for him and not for all the subjects of the kingdom? What is it but adopting the maxim which the Roman poet unfairly ascribed to a Greek hero, "that laws were not born for him?" I tell you that his laws were born for all the children of our Heavenly Father upon the face of the earth. "And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6:46.)

Repentance is a thing that cannot be trifled with every day of our lives. Daily transgressions, daily repentance are not pleasing in the sight of the Lord. We know as Latter-day Saints that in our lives, just as we have heard this beautiful chorus-choir sing, it is even now the eventide of the day in which we might properly repent.

Do not procrastinate repentance. Deathbed repentance does not fulfil the law—man should repent and serve the Lord in health and in strength, in vigor of body and mind, and give of his life, such as may remain, when that faith in God, which creates the spirit of repentance within us, is received by him.

If we submit to his Spirit, we may bring forth now the fruits of good works which are to his glory. We may look for the day when every law of the kingdom shall be fulfilled and when all shall know him from the least to the greatest.

And churches, in the sense of their own nothingness, may seek after the foundation which God has laid and which will endure the shock of all winds and waves. And churches which rest upon their own decrees and traditions and holiness will be like the man who

... without a foundation built an house upon the earth; against which the streams did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great. (Ibid., 6:49.)

The Church accepts the sinners into its society, not to foster them in their wickedness, but if they repent, to sanctify and cleanse them, by our kindness, from all unrighteousness.

Of what do we repent? Does repentance follow the violation of an arbitrary law imposed upon us by a power from on high? Why did the Lord ask Job, "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding." How significant the following questions:

Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it?

Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the cornerstone thereof. (Job 38:4-6.)

Would the Lord have asked these questions of Job had Job not had a pre-existence, had there not been a plan of life and of salvation developed before the foundations of the earth were laid? And then we read that at that very time of which these questions relate, that "the morning stars sang together and all of the sons of God shouted for joy." (Job 38:7.) Job participated in that singing and so did we.

Joseph Smith, the Prophet, leaves us no doubt on that subject. He says:

At the first organization in heaven we were all present and saw the Savior chosen and appointed and the plan of salvation made, and we sanctioned it. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, page 181.)

Repentance, therefore, follows the violation of a law to which we ascribed of our own free will and choice; a law we covenanted in the heavens to obey; a law which through our acceptance gave us the privilege of coming here into mortality and working out our mortal existence that we might thereby progress to the higher spheres which await us. There was no reluctance in our acquiescence of this plan. We sang together as the sons of God; all of them shouted for joy.

No other proof should be needed, but if other proof were needed, we find it within ourselves. The power we possess to differentiate between right and wrong, good and evil, the Spirit of God within us with which we were born, our own free agency, all establish within ourselves, without any external evidence of any kind, the fact that we are under covenant to do that which is right; that which does not violate our own sensitive conscience.

It has been said by the Apostle Paul:

... we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? (Heb. 12:9.)

Whatever we choose to do is voluntary, just as was the redeeming sacrifice of the Savior of mankind.

It is told of Lord Byron that when he was a lad attending a school, a companion of his fell under the displeasure of an overbearing bully, who unmercifully beat him. Byron happened to be present, and he went up to this bully, knowing that there was no use for him to attempt to fight him, and asked how long he intended to beat his friend. The bully immediately answered and said, "Well, what business is that of yours?" Byron replied very mildly, with tears standing in his eyes, "I will take the rest of the beating, if you will let him go."

Ours is a stronger case than that of Lord Byron's. He was under no prior commitment to do as he did. We are charged with the responsibility of doing as we have heretofore agreed. Re-penance becomes our second chance to accomplish the purpose of our creation. As we repent, we are forgiven. Maybe Paul had this same thought in mind when he said:

What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's. (1 Cor. 6:19-20.)

The Savior fulfilled all of his commitments.

If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept.

For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. (1 Cor. 15:19-22.)

Christ fulfilled the great mission for which he came to this earth: to atone for the sins of mankind and to make the principle of repentance efficacious in our eternal progress.

The Nephi version is as follows:

But behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things.

Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy.

And the Messiah cometh in the fulness of time, that he may redeem the children of men from the fall. And because that they are redeemed from the fall they have become free forever, knowing good from evil; to act for themselves and not to be acted upon, save it be by the punishment of the law at the great and last day, according to the commandments which God hath given. (2 Nephi 2:24-26.)

Therefore we believe in preaching the doctrine of repentance in all the world, both to old and young, rich and poor, bond and free. . . . But we discover, in order to be benefited by the doctrine of repentance, we must believe in obtaining the remission of sins and in order to obtain the remission of our sins, we must believe in the doctrine of baptism in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. And if we believe in baptism for the remission of sins, we may expect a fulfillment of the promise of the Holy Ghost, for the promise extends to all whom the Lord our God shall call, says the Prophet Joseph Smith. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, page 82.)

The Savior finally said:

Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light. (Matt. 11:28-30.)

Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else. (Isaiah 45:22.)

And finally, Isaiah writes:

I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.

Surely, shall one say, in the Lord have I righteousness and strength, even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed. (Ibid., 45:23-24.)

Let us not put off the day of our repentance. May the Lord help us to be pure and humble in his sight, I pray humbly, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve, who will be followed by Elder Antoine R. Ivins.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

DURING THE last three months it has been my privilege to visit two of the missions of the Church, and I have been impressed with an important phase of the work in which we are engaged, the missionary work of the Church.

You will recall that the Savior on calling his Apostles said to them:

Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain. (John 15:16.)

There has been no change in that, my brethren and sisters. "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go . . . forth." There is no change in this truth.

I read these lines the other night by a poet:

. . . why abandon a belief
Merely because it ceases to be true?
Cling to it long enough, and not a doubt
It will turn true again, for so it goes.
Most of the change we think we see in life
Is due to truths being in and out of favor.

And so I say, fundamentally there has been no change in the teaching of the Savior to his disciples. As he met with them in Galilee after his resurrection, he said:

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. (Matt. 28:18-20.)

There has been no change in that. It may have been in and out of favor, but fundamentally there has been no change. All power was given him, and he conferred it on his disciples; the same power is with us today.

Brother Moyle referred to the teachings of Peter on the Day of Pentecost, and I quote only part of it:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. . . . (Acts 2:38.)

These people were pricked in their hearts, and they wondered what they should do, and they cried with one accord, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (Ibid., v. 37.) They had been taught the divine mission of Jesus Christ, Jesus and him crucified; and the Holy Ghost rested upon them; the gift of tongues was with them; they understood each other and they understood the Apostle Peter, although there were assembled peoples of many nations, and Peter said to them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you . . . for the remission of [your] sins. . . .

Then he went on to say, "For the promise is unto you." The promise of what? That the Holy Ghost would come to them if they rendered obedience!

For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. (Ibid., v. 39.)

There has been no change in that, my brethren and sisters. And in this day the instructions are the same.

Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations, first upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews. (D. & C. 133:8.)

The same teachings, a truth that may have been in and out of favor, but an eternal truth, just the same. So today we have in the Church the responsibility, and that responsibility is made more apparent as we think of the great missionary system of the Church—we have the responsibility of preaching the gospel, and an added obligation to that which was given the disciples of the Savior, that of preaching the restored gospel, the same gospel but reaffirmed in this day, because in the minds of men it was for a time in and out of favor, but the truth has not changed; it is eternal.

Now, in harmony with that, in the very beginning of this work, the Prophet Joseph called missionaries who were sent to various parts of the United States and then later to Great Britain and other countries. The record of their work and conversions is impressive and ever will be an inspiration to those who read of it and who are engaged in preaching the gospel.

Then there was a lull for a time; the Saints came west; and missionary work was seemingly at a standstill, but not for long. Within two years or less after the Saints had settled in these valleys, Elder John Taylor was sent to England as a missionary and then to France. In addition to the commission to preach the gospel, he was given the mission of seeking out some industry that could be brought to this country and established among our people in the west that would help them economically. It was through the efforts of Brother Taylor that the sugar industry was finally brought here to the West. That is a story of itself.

But incident to this work that Brother Taylor performed, he baptized some very important people. You know, we are a little inclined to think that our efforts are seemingly of no avail. Perhaps some of our missionaries feel that way. I know I came home from my mission feeling that I had not accomplished much, that perhaps I had only baptized one or two. We never know the extent of the good we have done.

In the labors of Brother Taylor he found men like Elias Morris, the father of Elder George Q. Morris who sits here on the stand, and President John R. Winder. He probably little realized what it would mean to the work of the Lord to bring men into the Church of the stature of Elias Morris, John R. Winder, and others.

I was visiting a stake in California not long ago, and the wife of one of the presidents of the stakes told me this story. She labored under President Callis in the Southern States Mission, and she said Brother Callis related this incident to them as he visited the stake after he had been called to the Council of the Twelve. Brother Callis was converted over in Wales and was baptized as a small boy into the Church. As he was visiting a stake of Zion, he learned that an old man whom he had known in the mission field was ill. Brother Callis called on him. He found him cynical. Brother Callis tried to encourage him. The man seemed to be beyond encouragement. Then Brother Callis said, "John, do you not remember your missionary labors in Wales? Do you not remember the good you did in the mission field?" "Oh, I didn't do any good," he said. "Didn't you ever baptize anyone?" "No, not that I remember." Brother Callis said, "Are you sure?" "Oh," he said, "I baptized a little urchin that used to bother us in our meetings." Then Brother Callis said, "Brother John, do you know that I was that little urchin?"

Think of the importance of that one baptism! Think of the great work of Brother Callis during his thirty years of service in the Southern States Mission and then his great work as one of the Apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I repeat again, my brethren and sisters, we never know the results of our work. We never know what we accomplish. Some of us never will live to see it, to sense it. But after all is said and done, we may sow, and we may water, but God gives the increase and that increase mounts little by little like a little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, and it rolls forth and ultimately will fill the earth.

Now, the other thought, and then my time is up. It was my privilege to be down in Honolulu at the time President McKay and Sister McKay and Brother Murdock were there, one of the outstanding experiences of my life. As we met in meetings in Honolulu, in the Oahu Stake conference, Sunday, we had three assemblies. At one of them we had nearly four thousand people present. All nations, all people of the Polynesian Islands were represented: Hawaiians, Samoans, Maoris, Tahitians. We had a Samoan choir of a hundred people sing, beautifully, on Sunday morning and then Sunday afternoon an Hawaiian choir. I have never heard more impressive music.

In that assembly were Chinese, Japanese, Filipinos, and I repeat again, people from all nations.

Brethren and sisters, as I looked over that assembly I thought, here is an example of the gospel being preached to all nations. The gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is ultimately to leaven the lump. The Lord promised that an angel should fly through the midst of heaven, preaching the everlasting gospel to every nation that dwells upon the earth, and then he said the end should come. He did not mean the end of peoples, he meant the end of wickedness, the end of unrighteousness. And I thought I saw reflected in that assembly the purposes of the Almighty being accomplished—no hatred, no animosities, no class prejudices, no racial hatreds, but all assembled under one great banner, of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and dedicated to one holy purpose!

As you think of that with me, can you not see how ultimately peace will come to the world? And it will only come through the gospel of the Son of God, his great message of eternal truth, and it is our responsibility, my brethren and sisters, to proclaim it.

As one visits the missions of the Church, he becomes impressed more than ever with the need of our fulfilling the purposes for which the Lord has placed us here, bearing witness of the gospel as it has been restored in this day, not preaching anything new, not changes, merely changes because men perchance have changed in their own minds, but the eternal truths being the same.

May God help us to fulfil our obligation in this great work, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve, has just spoken to us. We shall now hear from Elder Antoine R. Ivins, member of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS, I hope you will unite your prayers with mine that what I say may perchance carry a helpful and useful message.

Before I start to bear my testimony, however, the remarks of the morning have prompted me to recount an experience that my father and I had about sixty years ago, in the hope that the point may be understood.

We were driving off Kaibab Mountain one beautiful day behind a fine team in an Arizona buckboard. Father said, "Antoine, down at the foot of the mountain there is a trail that cuts right straight across the Pipe Springs and crosses the Kanab wash, in a convenient location. We'll take that trail, and we won't have to go up to Kanab and ride over from there."

Then he proceeded to read a book as he always did when he was traveling and turned the lines over to me. It was not very long until his head was nodding, and he was asleep, and I have to confess that by the time we got to that turn-off I was asleep, too. When we waked up, we were five miles beyond the place where we wanted to turn off and believe me the detour turned out to be a rough one. We did not go to Kanab. We took the turn-off.

When they were talking about detours this morning, I wondered if many of us might not be sleepwalkers; if we do not walk around in our sleep, and all at once wake up to find out that the team has taken us off on the wrong road. Then we have to turn around. I believe, in the straight and narrow road there are no chuckholes. If they are there, they are the chuckholes that we ourselves have built for ourselves.

Brethren and sisters, it is sixty years ago since father and I had that experience. It is about fifty-nine years ago since we went to Mexico. During that time I have had opportunity to watch the Church and its directing Authorities and to note its progress. It is twenty-four years since I read in the newspaper one day that I had a new assignment. During those twenty-four years Sister Ivins and I have been moving about among the stakes of the Church and in the missions, trying to kindle or rekindle the Spirit of God in the hearts of the members of the Church.

We don't make pretense to tremendous success in it, perhaps, because we have no way of measuring our success, but we have been devoted to your service and devoted to the Church. It has given us the great opportunity to watch its progress, and as I sat in the priesthood meeting Saturday night, where we had reports that 25,000 brethren heard the proceedings of that meeting, I was reminded that in the year the LDS gymnasium was put in operation, if my memory is correct, the Assembly Hall held the priesthood congregation.

So there has been growth. There has been growth in membership as well as in faith and service, I believe, in the Church. The purpose in coming here today—one of the major purposes—is to see if we cannot stimulate the feeling of spirituality among the people, for, we who are here, perhaps most of us, have the responsibility of carrying back the spirit of this conference to the people who could not come, to increase spirituality among the people.

I have seen attendance at our conference meetings grow and grow and grow, until today nearly every place we go, the attendance is limited by the capacity of the accommodations we provide. I take it to indicate, and I believe I am right in this, that it does denote a definite increase in spirituality among the people.

Now we have heard that term used many, many times. It is not an easy thing to define this idea of spirituality. I get no satisfaction from the dictionary. The interpretation there is one given by people who perhaps do not understand their true relationship to God and his work.

Since we are the spirit children of God, I take it that the primary manifestation of spirituality is an acknowledgment that we are the sons and daughters of God, and that Jesus Christ is our Elder Brother, and it is not surprising to me, knowing that that testimony exists in the hearts of our people, that people not of our faith coming into the community, as reported by President McKay the other night, sense an unusual feeling and spirit among the people. The recognition that we are the sons and daughters of God, spiritually born of him, it seems to me, is a starting place if you are going to try to define spirituality. Then it seems to me to be a feeling of nearness to God, our Heavenly Father, a devotion to his cause, and a determination to acquit ourselves to the utmost of our ability, of the responsibility he has given us in life.

I wonder if that is a fair definition of spirituality? It seems to me that it could be. And then it's our problem to do what we can first with ourselves, and then with people who may be inclined to listen to us, to instill in their hearts the same consciousness that they are the sons and daughters of God, and that God had a definite purpose in bringing us here into this life of mortality.

When you teach men that, then there is a greater purpose in life, of course. There is a greater incentive, there is a greater motive for righteousness, and perhaps spirituality could be measured by the degree of righteousness of the lives of people. It is a difficult thing because we do not know or read the hearts of people. Frequently we misjudge them. If we could know their hearts, perhaps we could form a correct estimate of their spirituality, of their feeling toward God. That is difficult, and from what has been said today I gather that there are many people who have not the same understanding of it, who feel that spirituality and the ordinary pursuits of life are separated by a rather wide space, and sometimes we feel that a man who devotes himself assiduously to the practical purposes of life, rendering his share, of course, in Church service, may not be as spiritual as a man who does not do that, but who spends his whole time dreaming about the uncertain things for which there has been no answer.

I believe we are wrong, brothers and sisters, if we try to make that separation, for I believe it is the purpose of God that every honest member of the Church, every honest man for that matter, should have a vigorous, active, potent testimony that Jesus is the Christ, that God is our Father, and then should come, through his prayer and faith, to an understanding of the plan of salvation, and you know, when I look before me and see the men who plow the fields, who ride the ranges, and manage the stakes, I feel justified in suggesting, brothers and sisters, that to put one group on one side and the other group on the other side, as to spirituality, is a dangerous thing, for I have worked with and slept with men who handle the practical things of life, and at the same time apply a spiritual interpretation to everything that is done.

I believe, as the Doctrine and Covenants says, that God has given us no law which is not a spiritual law, and the law of life is a law of action. I believe it would be possible, with the exercise of due faith for a man to apply the spiritual interpretation to every legitimate act of life, and it is our purpose—it should be our purpose, brothers and sisters—in our relationships with each other to strive for that spiritual aspect.

If you will pardon the reference to my father, I would like to tell you that one time I walked into the biggest bank in this city. Its president, who was not a member of the Church, called me over, and he said: "Mr. Ivins, I pay tribute to your father. He came the nearest to combining religion and business of any man I ever knew," and then he said: "Do you know, I cannot do it. I have to be a hard-boiled businessman." But he some way or another came to realize that under the influence of the gospel of Jesus Christ such a combination is possible, not only possible, but to be highly recommended.

Now brethren and sisters, it should be our purpose so to combine the Spirit of God with our daily undertakings that we can ask upon everything we undertake to do, the blessing of God, our Heavenly Father; that we may never take advantage of another; that we may always yield full service for the compensation that we receive; that our brethren and our sisters will never have cause to say that we may have taken undue advantage of them. When we come to apply that in our lives, this idea of spirituality will then be more or less a tangible thing.

Spirituality is not a thing that you can go to the market and buy with dollars and cents and carry home in a basket, but it is a thing which you can absorb in a gathering like this. It has to be absorbed. It cannot be bought. It cannot be done up in packages and handed to a neighbor. It must be absorbed by him through the emanations of our own spirits.

Let us strive for it, brothers and sisters. Let us seek the blessings of God in all we do, then Zion will shine as a light on a hill which all the world can see.

God bless us, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Antoine R. Ivins, one of the seven presidents of the First Council of the Seventy, has just concluded speaking. The congregation will now sing "Praise to the Man who Communed with Jehovah," conducted by Elder Richard P. Condie, assistant director of the Tabernacle Choir. Following the singing, we will hear from Elder Alma Sonne.

The congregation and the Brigham Young University Combined Chorus joined in singing the hymn, "Praise to the Man Who Communed with Jehovah."

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS, I assure you at the outset that I will keep my eyes on the clock. I know my brethren will also keep their eyes on the clock. I ask you for an interest in your faith and prayers. There is so much to say on an occasion like this, and there are so many to say it that time becomes very precious.

A week ago I stood before a group of high school students in one of the stakes not far from here. I urged them on that occasion to accept as a project the reading of the Gospel according to Matthew in order to familiarize themselves with the life of Jesus Christ. I recall years ago reading about Lew Wallace who wrote the great story, Ben Hur. It appears that while he was writing this book, he was visited by a certain well-known and gifted agnostic. The agnostic encouraged him to write the book. "But," said he, "do not emphasize the divinity of Jesus Christ. Treat this character as you would any other character in history." But Lew Wallace had studiously read the Gospels and formed his opinions of the Master on the record left by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John.

We have heard many things during this conference, and during this Easter time, about Jesus, the Christ. His perfect life has been extolled. His teachings have been expounded. His resurrection has been explained in the light of modern and ancient scriptures, and his divine mission has been emphasized by everyone who has spoken from this stand during the conference.

Monday, April 4

Someone has said, "Jesus is still loved, but he is also hated, among men." There are those who would crucify him the second time, this time in the hearts of men. Yet there is no explanation offered for his marvelous life and his perfect record except the one he himself gave. "I came forth from the father," and, "If ye have seen me ye have seen the father." In his prayer of intercession for his Twelve Apostles, he said: "This is life eternal—that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou has sent."

In the same prayer he said, "Glorify thou me with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." He left no room for equivocation and argument on the question of his divinity and his Sonship, and I am happy today as I stand here, that I belong to a Church which accepts that teaching as very fundamental.

It was William Jennings Bryan who stated in his famous lecture called, The Prince of Peace, "It is easier to believe him divine than to explain in any other way what he said and did and was." There are marks of distinction which set him apart from all others who have lived upon the earth. He was the master of every situation which confronted him. He answered all questions put to him where an answer would enlighten the questioner.

Albert J. Beveridge, a Senator from Indiana, stated many years ago: "The Son of Mary is the prince of public speakers." He was right, for the Sermon on the Mount is the greatest sermon ever preached. It has endured nineteen centuries of criticism. It has survived the apostasy, the Dark Ages, the Renaissance, and the Reformation, and its powerful message is still reverberating through the world. It will never die.

Yesterday I know you were touched, as I was, when our great choir sang "The Lord's Prayer." "The Lord's Prayer," says someone, "is perfect in its diction.

It is comprehensive in its scope." It covers the essential phases of human existence. His stories and parables will live forever. "The story of the Prodigal Son," said Charles Dickens, "is the most beautiful story ever told."

There is another one like unto it. It is the story of the Good Samaritan, and I think of one more with which you are very familiar. It begins, "A sower went out to sow." (Luke 8:5.) What a lovely statement that is! All of these stories called parables charm and captivate the reader. They are timely today, as fresh as they were nineteen hundred years ago when they were given. They stir the heart to better and nobler living. They are a force for righteousness in the world.

And there is another thing which I called to the attention of the young students a week ago, when I said, "Jesus is the most compelling personality in human history." He spoke two words to his followers: "Follow me," (Matthew 8:22) and strong men gave up their fishing nets and followed him even to death."

Pilate was uneasy and disturbed before him. When you enter the great Salt Lake Temple, and as you go into the Assembly Room, I wish you would do as I have frequently done—examine that magnificent painting of the Lord Jesus standing before Pontius Pilate—Jesus so calm and unruffled; Pilate so deeply disturbed. The contrast is impressive.

I recall another incident. It happened in the Garden of Gethsemane when the Roman soldiers came to arrest the Master. As they entered, Jesus said to these hard-faced men, "Whom seek ye?" They answered, "Jesus of Nazareth." "I am he," replied Jesus, and those men, in silent tribute, "went backward and fell to the ground." He asked again "Whom seek ye?" They answered, "Jesus of Nazareth." "I am he," responded the Lord, and then, characteristic of his great soul, he said, "If therefore ye seek me, let these go their way," referring, of course, to his disciples. (See John 18:4-8.)

The writer of that circumstance gives one more sentence, which reads, "And Judas stood with them." (See Ibid., 18:5.) I wonder what the thoughts of Judas were as he stood there witnessing the courage and love of Jesus, whom he had already betrayed. The moral side of Christ's character has no parallel. In it we find absolute perfection. No flaw, no blemish, no weakness is discovered. He is without sin. He was as great as the gospel he preached. He met every situation perfectly. He said and did the right thing at the right moment.

I am reminded of the spies who were sent out by the chief priests to trip and trap him if they could. "Is it lawful to pay tribute to Caesar?" they asked. Jesus asked for a coin. They produced what happened to be a tax coin with which the Jews paid taxes to the Roman government. "Whose image is on the coin?" asked Jesus. "It is the image of Caesar." Then said the Lord, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and unto God the things which are God's." (See Matthew 22:17-21.) I submit that it was the best answer that could possibly be given under the circumstances. Not only that, it was a great sermon, although very brief, on the matter of honesty.

May we worship the Lord and Master in spirit and in truth. May each of us have the conviction that he is the Redeemer of the world and the promised Messiah, and may we join hands in carrying forward his work and in explaining the restored gospel which has come to earth in these, the last days, through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, I pray most humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS, President McKay has been kind enough to advise the General Authorities in advance that they might be expected to speak at certain sessions of the conference. My turn was to come next Wednesday. During a half century of active service in the Church, I have never felt so wholly inadequate, so totally dependent on divine guidance as I feel right now. For that guidance I humbly pray.

We sang yesterday, "We thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet." This hymn referred originally to the Prophet Joseph Smith. In a meeting not long ago when President McKay announced that the congregation would sing, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," he said, characteristically, "I wish you would have in mind the Prophet Joseph Smith when you sing today."

I should like to offer a prayer that has been in my heart for years, a prayer which I believe is in the heart of every Latter-day Saint throughout the world.

"We thank thee, O God, for the Prophet, David O. McKay, to guide us in these later-latter days. We thank thee that through thy blessings he has had the vitality, the vigor, and the health to carry the message of the gospel to the four corners of the earth. We thank thee that his influence and his presence have revitalized the Saints wherever he has gone and have given them courage and hope. We thank thee that he more than any man among us, more than any of his predecessors, has carried the inspiration and the message of the gospel to the greatest and to an ever-increasing international audience. We pray that thou wilt bless him continually and spare him to us, that we may enjoy his great leadership for many years to come."

From the bottom of my heart I sustain and support these men, the President of the Church and his Counselors, the President of the Council of the Twelve, and each individual member of that Council, and the Patriarch as prophets, seers, and revelators to the Church. I am grateful for the privilege of meeting with them occasionally.

Monday, April 4

Third Day

Some of our friends have said we are inclined to worship the General Authorities. We love them; we listen to their counsel; we thank God for them; but they would not permit us to worship them. If we should be so inclined, they would be the first to rebuke us. They would doubtless say to us what the angel said to John on the Isle of Patmos, when he was about to kneel before him,

See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-servant . . . worship God. (Rev. 19:10.)

But it is our privilege to be guided by their inspired counsel. I pray that God will help us never to lose sight of and ever be grateful for the outstanding leadership in the Church today.

Elder Alma Sonne mentioned Easter-tide. This is the season of the year when we know spring is coming, although here in Salt Lake City today it takes a lot of faith to believe it. But it is the season of the year when things are revitalized and renewed, and it is the time of year when Christians everywhere celebrate Easter in commemoration of the resurrection of the Lord.

As I speak of these men and of their leadership, I am reminded of some additional reasons why we should be grateful for the Easter season. Through the restoration of the gospel we have knowledge and assurance regarding the actual resurrection of the body of the Lord Jesus Christ. Not only that he was resurrected from the dead, but also that he ascended into heaven with his glorified body, and he will come again in material form and substance. We are grateful for the comfort and the hope which comes with this assurance.

The revelations concerning the nature and attributes of our Heavenly Father and of his Son, Jesus Christ, are of transcendent importance to all men everywhere. Modern confirmation and elucidation of biblical evidence on this all-important subject began with the first vision in the Sacred Grove in 1820, and it was renewed and continued in that glorious vision in 1832 at Hiram, Ohio, when the Lord declared, Hear, O ye heavens, and give ear, O earth, and rejoice ye inhabitants thereof, for the Lord is God, and beside him there is no Savior.

Great is his wisdom, marvelous are his ways, and the extent of his doings none find out.

His purposes fail not, neither are there any who can stay his hand.

From eternity to eternity he is the same, and his years never fail. (D. & C. 76:1-4.)

The restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ came pursuant to prophetic promise and was a necessary sequel to the great apostasy. It was during the apostasy that an attempt was made to harmonize pagan philosophy with Christian truth. This task was undertaken at the behest of non-Christian emperors and resulted in uninspired declarations in which God was defined—or rather denied—by declaring him to be immaterial, incomprehensible, and without body or parts, occupying no part of finite or infinite space, in other words, non-existent.

We thank God for the restoration of the gospel which refutes such doctrine. In their attempt to incorporate Jesus the Christ into their pagan concept of the Godhead, the Roman emperors, through their appointed delegates to various councils, undertook to have him divest himself of his body, that body which came from the tomb when the angel rolled the stone away, that glorified body with which he ascended into heaven before the wondering gaze of his disciples. Obviously this resurrected body, being material, could not become a part of their immaterial God which had no parts. They would have him shed that body and thereby deny everything that Easter stands for; for if he is incomprehensible and immaterial, then he is not a resurrected being; and if he is not a resurrected being, Easter is meaningless.

Again I say let us thank God for the clarification that has come through modern revelation concerning the personal attributes of the three members of the Godhead.

Jesus Christ revealed the Father to us and said, ". . . he that hath seen me hath seen the Father." (John 14:9.) The Son was in his express image. He revealed a compassionate Father, a divine Parent, one in whom were incorporated the attributes of justice, judgment, mercy, and truth. He revealed a God of love, of forgiveness, and understanding. The restored gospel supplants the motives of fear and awe with faith and trust. The beloved disciple tells us, "... perfect love casteth out fear." (I John 4:18.) Love as a dominant attribute of God and a saving quality in man is reasserted and emphasized.

The new commandment which Jesus gave was, "That ye love one another even as I have loved you." His love for us is eternal. Nothing can separate us from it. Sin may separate us from him, but his love endures forever. Listen to Paul's testimony:

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come,

Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. (Romans 8:38-39.)

I should like to speak to these young people who have been singing for us, and to other young people of the Church, for like others who have spoken, my heart is with the youth of Zion. I should like to say to these young people that God is their Father, that the Savior is pleading for and with them to keep clean, clean in their thinking, in their speaking, in their conduct, that he expects them to be worthy of him and of the sacrifice he made for them and for all of us. He is the Good Shepherd who gave his life for the sheep. He evinced the solicitude of the Good Shepherd in his last injunction to Peter, "Feed my sheep." (John 21:16.)

I should like to add another word to the young people. One of the most lethal weapons which the Adversary has devised to destroy the young people of the Church and of the world is to persuade them that if they have made a mistake they are lost, there is no hope. According to that doctrine, if a young person, in a weak moment, becomes guilty of some misdemeanor, he might as well go on to juvenile delinquency and crime and felony because he is lost anyway. So the devil would have them believe and thus lead them down to hell.

Young people, your Father in heaven loves you; he loves you with a love beyond what your earthly parents can know. If you make mistakes—and you will and all of us have—our Heavenly Father stands ready to forgive and to welcome you when you come to yourselves and turn your backs on the husks and your faces toward home. He will embrace you and say, "For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found." (Luke 15:24.) But let no one think he will not have to pay for his folly. The Father could not in justice say to the prodigal what he said to his older son, "All that I have is thine." (Ibid., v. 31.)

Our Father is kind and loving and forgiving, but there is an inexorable law which has not been repealed. It is the law of the harvest. "As ye sow, so shall ye reap." (See Galatians 6:7.) We cannot sow thistles and reap figs, nor plant thorns and harvest grapes. But when we have had enough of thistles and thorns, we may have the grapes and the figs if we are willing to pay the price—and they cost less. While ours is a world governed by rigid and unswerving law, man has free agency, he may choose to obey or disobey the law, but he must of course abide the consequences of his choice.

One other thing to the young folk—sometimes you come to us with problems when you are perplexed and confused and feel that you are inhibited, not free to think or express opinions. When we talk to you of free agency and explain that it refers not only to actions but to thoughts and opinions, you wonder if that is always the case. Some of you have said to us, "But our right to express our own opinions is trammled or abridged by the authoritative statements of parents, teachers, and others.

Young people, we will protect your freedom to think, to express your thoughts, and to search for truth. We want you to continue that search fearlessly. We promise you will be uninhibited in that search. You should remember, however, that God has given us sources through which we may have some authoritative answers. Not all the answers, no! If we had all the answers, there would be an end to the search.

Monday, April 4

Third Day

We must not expect to have all the answers immediately, for God himself in his wisdom has withheld some of them. We believe in continued and continuing revelation, and that means that we believe there are things to be made known which we do not now know. We believe it is a good thing to reserve judgment on problems that are difficult of solution until more light comes. This principle of withholding judgment and waiting for new revelation should apply in all fields of learning. Scientists make rather definite statements at times, but some of us have lived to see them either amend or abandon their findings in the light of newly discovered truth. As long as scientists are still searching and discovering and as long as new revelation is promised, why insist upon final answers now? It is my conviction that new revelation will come when we have learned to live up to the truth we now have. Wisdom counsels patience.

And so, with respect to some things that now seem difficult to understand, we can well afford to wait until we have all the facts, until all the evidence is in. Now do not misunderstand me. There will never come a time when any revelation of truth from God will be in conflict with any other truth revealed from him, whether it comes as direct revelation or as reward for diligent search. If there seems to be conflict, it is because men, fallible men, are unable properly to interpret God's revelations or man's discoveries.

May he help us that we may go forward fearlessly but reverently in our search for truth and have due respect not only for our parents and our teachers, but also for those through whom God has promised his revelations.

By the same token, we should not undertake to state the time nor the order in which the gospel shall be given to any of the races or nations of the earth. We should not attempt to regulate God's program by our little wrist watches nor insist that he be governed by our schedule of events. He has promised the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, and he and only he knows when they are ready for its message and its blessings. When that time comes, I bear you my witness, prophetic witness, if you will, that he will reveal his will to the leaders of the Church concerning all of his people. He has said,

Remember the worth of souls [all souls] is great in the sight of God;

For, behold the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him.

And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him, on conditions of repentance.

And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth! (D. & C. 18:10-13. Italics added.)

Brothers and sisters, I humbly bear my testimony to you that I do know that God is my Father, that Jesus of Nazareth is my Redeemer and my friend. I thank him for the blessed privilege of engaging in the ministry, and I praise his holy name that through his servants he has shown his willingness to use the weakest of us to do some little good in that ministry.

God bless us to recognize him as the Good Shepherd and to go forward with faith, unafraid of the future, and with complete confidence to say with the Psalmist:

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever. (Psalm 23.)

We pray this may be true for all of us in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Council of the Twelve, has just spoken to us.

We have just received the following notice: "Roads in Wyoming very bad.

Highways are blocked. Many cars stranded. Wyoming people asked not to try travelling these roads." That comes from the president of the Big Horn Stake. Brethren and sisters, you will have to stay with us another night, and be assured you are most welcome.

The singing for this session has been furnished, as heretofore announced, by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, under the direction of Elder Norman Gulbrandsen, with Roy M. Darley at the organ. We wish to say to these choice young people that we sincerely hope that these two sessions have given them the inspiration commensurate to the inspiration they have given us by their lovely service. We appreciate the large attendance, every choir seat filled and some out in the gallery, and your singing has been beautiful and inspiring. May you carry home with you messages of this day which will be a light to your path, comfort to your souls, always. These thoughts we express as we say, "thank you, and thank you as representatives of a great school we all love."

A special meeting under the direction of the First Presidency, devoted to the work of the stake and foreign missions of the Church, will be held in the Tabernacle this evening at seven o'clock. Mission presidents, stake mission presidents, presidencies of stakes, stake missionaries, are invited to be in attendance at this meeting. An invitation is also extended to the members of high coun-

President David O. McKay:

During the year, the distribution of commodities from Bishops' Storehouses amounted to 8,098,678 pounds of food, 10,089 tons of fuel, and 351,771 items of household supplies, clothing and miscellaneous. This provided assistance to 56,566 persons.

The Welfare Plan also provided occupational counseling to 6,706 persons and placed 6,946 persons in remunerative employment during the year. To operate the program and to improve and develop properties, 127,707 man-days of work and the use of equipment amounting to 13,711 unit-days were donated.

At the end of the year, the Deseret Industries had 369 persons working in their plants, 301 of whom were handicapped persons; and the Deseret Clothing Factory provided continuous employment for 58, many of whom were widows and elderly persons.

Missionary Work

In addition to the $7,120,000 of expenditures for "Missionaries and Missionary Work" reported in the foregoing table, it is estimated that missionaries, their parents and friends paid out $2,900,000 for the support of full-time missionaries during the year, bringing total expenditures by the Church and its people for all mission purposes to more than $10,000,000 in 1954. This total does not include any value for the time and effort given so freely by the missionaries themselves.

President David O. McKay
and Counselors,
Salt Lake City, Utah.

Dear Brethren:

The balance sheet, with supporting schedules and statement of revenue and expenditures, disclosing the financial condition of the Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the year ending December 31, 1954 has been reviewed. The records appear to be adequate and the accounting system carefully kept. We commend those who keep the financial records of the Church, including the ward clerks and their assistants, the stake clerks and their assistants, the mission and branch secretaries for their devoted and efficient service. Disbursement of Church funds is controlled through a comprehensive budget system. The receipts for the year were in excess of the expenditures. The Church is in

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency has just presented the Authorities and Officers of the Church for the sustaining vote of this General Conference. You have just heard his announcement.

You will note this morning, you who are in the Tabernacle, that we have our daffodils, and they seem to have been well taken care of on their trip to Denver and return. They are beautiful. They are the gifts and have been presented for the beautification of the Tabernacle during these services by the Puyallup Festival Committee of Tacoma, Washington. Again we extend thanks to these generous donors, and report to them that the daffodils do look beautiful. Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Council of the Twelve will be our first speaker this morning. He will be followed by Elder S. Dilworth Young.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

A YOUNG INDIAN LAD in my presence recently bore his testimony, and he said: "I am proud that I am a Navajo. I am proud, more proud, that I am a Mormon, and I am still more proud that I hold the priesthood," and that is the way I feel today in this great assembly on this anniversary. One hundred and twenty-five years ago six people gathered together in the first conference; and at this conference some ten sessions have filled the building to its capacity. I bear witness that the work that we are engaged in is the work of the Lord in all its comprehensiveness, and I am grateful that I am a member of the Lord's Church. I have prayed much that what I say this morning might be beneficial to someone.

And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. (Acts 9:5.)

The Lord was speaking to the powerful figure, Saul of Tarsus, Paul of Christianity. I often wondered just what this meant. I found one authority who offered this:

. . . Those who kick at the goad, that stifle and smother the convictions of conscience, that rebel against God's truths and laws, that quarrel with His providences, that persecute and oppose His ministers, because they reprove them . . . and fly in the face of their reprovers, they kick against the pricks, and will have a great deal to answer for. (Commentaries by Henry M. Scott.)

A goad is defined as a spear or a sharp pointed stick used to sting or prick. The burro who kicks the sharp instrument with which he is being prodded is kicking at the pricks. His retaliation does little damage to the sharp stick or to him who wields it but brings distress to the foot that kicks it.

I well remember in my youth a neighbor who moved about for some days on crutches. He was evasive when asked the cause of his misfortune, but an ear witness told me, as he chuckled: "John stubbed his toe on a chair in the night and in his quick, fierce anger, he kicked the chair and broke his toe." The rocking chair rocked on and on, and perhaps smiled at the stupidity of man.

The first king of Israel quarreled with Providence. His stubbornness cost him his kingdom and brought forth the caustic denunciation from his prophet:

For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king. (1 Samuel 15:23.)

O foolish monarch! Given power, wealth, opportunity, why throw them all away? The Prophet Samuel denounced the independent, arrogant Saul; the superior, unhumble Saul; the proud, conceited Saul:

When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the Lord anointed thee king over Israel? (Ibid., 15:17.)

There is the man who rebelled against the call of Brigham Young to go to southern valleys, saying: "Nobody is going to tell me where to go and what to do." Through his personal rebellion, he took his entire family out of the Church. How little he retarded the colonization program! The valleys were settled in spite of him. How little his disaffection injured the Church! It has grown steadily without him. But how he has suffered in his eternal progression. In contrast, there were many who pulled up stakes, moved to new worlds, and reared families of faith and devotion.

There are many who, because troubles come, cease praying to the Lord, letting loose of the very rod of protection at the precise moment when that hand-hold is so vital.

There is the man who, to satisfy his own egotism, took a stand against the Authorities of the Church. He followed the usual pattern, not apostasy at first, only superiority of knowledge and mild criticism. He loved the brethren, he said, but they failed to see and interpret as he would like. He would still love the Church, he maintained, but his criticism grew and developed into ever-widening circles. He was right, he assured himself; he could not yield in good conscience; he had his pride. His children did not accept his philosophy wholly, but their confidence was shaken. In their frustration, they married out of the Church, and he lost them. He later realized his folly and returned to humbleness, but so very late. He had lost his children. "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks."

The Prophet Ezekiel said:

The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge. (Ezekiel 18:2)

There is the man who resisted release from positions in the Church. He knew positions were temporary trusts, but he criticized the presiding leader who had released him, complaining that proper recognition had not been given; the time had not been propitious; it had been a reflection upon his effectiveness. He bitterly built up a case for himself, absented himself from his meetings, and justified himself in his resultant estrangement. His children partook of his frustrations, and his children's children. In later life he "came to himself," and on the brink of the grave made an about-face. His family would not effect the transformation which now he would give his life to have them make. How selfish! Haughty pride induces eating sour grapes, and innocent ones have their teeth set on edge. "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks."

When I was a child, we used the expression, "He cut off his nose to spite his face." To us, that meant that one was fighting against fate, rebelling against the inevitable, damaging himself to spite others, breaking his toe to give vent to his senseless anger.

Eight lovely children had blessed the temple marriage of a man and woman who in later years were denied a temple recommend. They would not be so dealt with by this young bishop. Why should they be deprived and humiliated? Were they less worthy than others? They argued that this boy-bishop was too strict, too orthodox. Never would they be active, nor enter the door of that Church as long as that bishop presided. They would show him. The history of this family is tragic. The four younger ones were never baptized; the four older ones never were ordained, endowed, nor sealed. No missions were filled by this family. Today the parents are ill at ease, still defiant. They had covered themselves with a cloud, and righteous prayers could not pass through. (See Lam. 3:44.)

Sour grapes! Such unhappy food!

The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught. (D. & C. 3:1.)

But the individual who fights them finds disillusionment, disappointment, and misery. The Lord said: "... the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow." (Ibid., 1:3.) He outlines further the fate of the fighters.

As well might man stretch forth his puny arm to stop the Missouri river in its decreed course, or to turn it up stream. . . .

Why are so few chosen?

Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men, that they do not learn this one lesson—

That the rights of the priesthood . . .

. . . may be conferred upon us it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition . . . in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man.

Behold, ere he is aware, he is left unto himself, to kick against the pricks, to persecute the saints, and to fight against God. (Ibid., 121:33-38.)

Of such who defy the Lord, trample upon his sacred ordinances, fight his leaders, the Lord has this to say:

Cursed are all those that shall lift up the heel against mine anointed, saith the Lord, and cry they have sinned when they have not sinned before me, saith the Lord, but have done that which was meet in mine eyes, and which I commanded them.

But those who cry transgression do it because they are the servants of sin, and are the children of disobedience themselves. . . .

Wo unto them; . . . they shall be severed from the ordinances of mine house.

Wednesday, April 6

Fourth Day

... they themselves shall be despised by those that flattered them.

They shall not have right to the priesthood, nor their posterity after them from generation to generation. (Ibid., 121:16-17, 19, 21.)

In the last century the Lord condemned a Brother Almon Babbitt:

... behold, he aspireth to establish his counsel which I have ordained, even that of the Presidency of my Church; and he setteth up a golden calf for the worship of my people. (Ibid., 124:84.)

He was like those Romans of whom Paul spoke:

For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. . . .

Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, . . . but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools. (Romans 1:18, 21, 22.)

For although a man may have many revelations, and have power to do many mighty works, [the Lord said] yet if he boasts in his own strength, and sets at naught the counsels of God, and follows after the dictates of his own will and carnal desires, he must fall and incur the vengeance of a just God upon him. (D. & C. 3:4.)

Martin Harris was chastised by the Redeemer as

... a wicked man, who has set at naught the counsels of God, and has broken the most sacred promises which were made before God, and has depended upon his own wisdom. (Ibid., 3:12-13.)

Only the transgression of His people can nullify the work of the Lord, He says. And Jacob laments:

... O the vainness, and the frailties, and the foolishness of men! When they are learned they think they are wise, and they hearken not unto the counsel of God, for they set it aside, supposing they know of themselves, wherefore, their wisdom is foolishness and it profiteth them not. And they shall perish. (2 Nephi 9:28.)

Men continue to try to create God, to control God, and to thwart his purposes but:

His purposes fail not, neither are there any who can stay his hand.

From eternity to eternity he is the same, and his years never fail. (D. & C. 76:3-4.)

But men in their egotism continue to try. Against men like these, Paul warned his colleague:

O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called. (1 Tim. 6:20.)

The Caesars burned the early Saints as torches, subjected them to the claws of wild beasts in the coliseums, drove them underground into the catacombs, confiscated their property, and snuffed out their lives, but all to no avail, for the fires of devotion and sacrifice were only intensified thereby.

The persecutors decapitated John the Baptist, ran a lance through the Apostle James, and according to tradition martyred the missionary, Paul, and crucified the mighty Simon Barjona. They failed of purpose. Where a relatively few contemporaries ever heard them, hundreds of millions have since been enlightened by their doctrines and inspired by their testimonies.

"Mormonism will fail if we kill their prophet," they said a century ago as they murdered Joseph Smith in cold blood. Undoubtedly their fiendish grins of satisfaction at such a foul deed changed to perturbed grimaces when they came to realize that they had been but kicking against sharp points, injuring only themselves. Mormonism was not destroyed by the cruel martyrdom, but here was its vitality. The bullet-torn flesh fertilized the soil; the blood they shed moistened the seed; and the spirits they sent heavenward will testify against them throughout eternities. The cause persists and grows.

Gamaliel, the noted Pharisee doctor of the law, teacher of Saul of Tarsus, had deeper perception than did his associates, the chief priests who would have slain the Apostles. He warned:

... take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men. . . .

Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God. (Acts 5:35, 38-39.)

What sagacity! How wise this learned man! "Take heed to yourselves," he warned. It was a boomerang. He reminded them of the fate of the influential Theudas with his great swelling words, his vaunted knowledge, his brilliant mind, his superior logic, who with his following of hundreds kicked "against the pricks," resisted truth, fought against God, and "came to nought."

He spoke of Judas of Galilee and his vain philosophies and his flattering words which brought him and his following oblivion. Early leaders whose names are linked with those of Joseph and Hyrum have come and gone. Heavens opened, revelations flowed, and holy angels ministered to them. Positions of trust were given them, but with it all there came arrogance, jealousies, and disaffections.

For their vine is of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah: their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter:

Their wine is the poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps. (Deut. 32:32-33.)

Are not these the self-planted, self-nourished, and self-harvested grapes of wrath? O stupid man, O egotistical man! Thinking only of self he profanes the way of the Lord and brings sorrow to his posterity whose roses turn to ashes, whose fruit becomes only skin-covered stones. The grapes are so sour. How terrifying such a responsibility! "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks."

But wo unto him that has the law given, yea, and that has all the commandments of God, like unto us, and that transgresseth them, and that wasteth the days of his probation, for awful is his state! (2 Nephi 9:27.)

In a page from the journal of the Prophet Joseph, we find this: "At 3:30 p.m. I met with Brigham Young [and others whom he named] in my office." And then this: "Write to Oliver Cowdery and ask him if he has not eaten husks long enough? If he is not almost ready to return, be clothed with robes of righteousness, and go up to Jerusalem? Orson Hyde hath need of him." (History of the Church, Vol. 5, pp. 366, 368.)

This is likely reminiscent of the prodigal son whose sad fate brought him to the eating of husks with the swine after he had turned from the luxurious board of plenty at his father's table. And like him, the modern man of rare opportunity fought against his conscience, stifled his best impulses; and finally when the earthly powers were near an end, his influence in the world largely terminated, he "came to himself" back to the program he had resisted. Many teeth had been set on edge in the years of his unproductive, sterile years. His brother-in-law, David Whitmer, said of him as he was restored to the Church late in life:

"Oliver died the happiest man I ever saw. After shaking hands with his family and kissing his wife and daughter, he said: 'Now I lay me down for the last time. . . .' And he died with a smile on his face."

Peace, sweet peace, finally comes to all men when they humbly yield to the gentle pressures of the Spirit.

The story of the transformation of Alma is not unlike that of Paul. With his companions he set about to "steady the ark," to set straight the leaders of the Church, and to take over the minds of the people. These young men were brilliant, eloquent, impressive. The angel of the Lord in a cloud spoke "as it were with a voice of thunder which caused the earth to shake," and the astonished men fell to the earth, Alma becoming dumb and lifeless. Carried helpless to his father he was recovered after long fasting and prayer by those who loved him. In his remorse he cried out:

I was in the darkest abyss but now I behold the marvelous light of God. My soul was wracked with eternal torment, but I am snatched and my soul is pained no more.

It took courage for Alma and the princes to admit they were wrong, but they went about "zealously striving to repair all the injuries which they had done to the church." (See Mos. 27:35.)

We quote Paul again:

Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. (Col. 2:8.)

The antediluvians were a law unto themselves and locked doors against themselves. Jonah, in his egotism, took offense when the repentance of Nineveh rendered unnecessary the fulfilment of his prophecy. Judas fought against God and suffered the buffetings of Satan. Sherem with his learning, his eloquence and his flattery, sought to turn away people from the simple faith, and he died in remorse and humiliation. Nehor tried to advance his own cause, increase his popularity, and lead a following with his criticisms and flatteries, and came to ignominious death. Korihor, with his teachings of intellectual liberty and his rationalizations, followed his temporary popularity with begging in the streets. The Jonahs and Almas and Korihors live on and undertake to cover their sins, gratify their pride, and vain ambitions. They grieve the Spirit of the Lord, withdraw from holy places and righteous influences, and in the words of the Savior:

Behold, ere he is aware, he is left unto himself, to kick against the pricks, to persecute the saints and to fight against God. (D. & C. 121:38.)

But be it said to the everlasting glory of men, numerous good people who have tasted of and recovered from offense, having come to realize that so long as mortality exists we live and work with imperfect people; and there will be misunderstandings, offenses, and injuries to sensitive feelings. The best of motives are often misunderstood. It is gratifying to find many who, in their bigness of soul have straightened out their thinking, swallowed their pride, forgiven what they had felt were personal slights. Numerous others who have walked critical, lonely, thorny paths in abject misery, have finally accepted correction, acknowledged errors, cleansed their hearts of bitterness, and have come again to peace, that coveted peace which is so conspicuous in its absence. And the frustrations of criticism, bitterness, and the resultant estrangements have given place to warmth and light and peace. And all those who have come into the warmth of the love of the Lord Jesus Christ and his program, could shout with the Prophet Joseph Smith:

... Let your hearts rejoice, and be exceedingly glad. . . .

And let the sun, moon, and the morning stars sing together, and let all the sons of God shout for joy. And let the eternal creations declare his name forever and ever! And again I say, how glorious is the voice we hear from heaven, proclaiming in our ears, glory, and salvation, and honor, and immortality, and eternal life; kingdoms, principalities, and powers! (Ibid., 128:22-23.)

May God bless us all that we may live near him always, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I ASSURE YOU, my brethren and sisters, that it is an easy thing to be a follower of Brother Spencer Kimball, both in making addresses and in the work of the Church. His gentleness and kindness to those with whom he conducts affairs is known by all of you and shared by me. Likewise, it is easy to follow the lead of the Presidency. There have been times in my life when I have had to be rebuked. Never yet, however, was it done in any way other than in the utmost gentleness, and I have found myself more anxious than ever to do better work. "Kicking against the pricks"—that particular kind of pricks—is easy.

Saturday I sat for a good part of the meeting in the last session of the Primary conference as those lovely women portrayed to the audience the things they do for children in Primary. I recalled how in like manner the Sunday School officers and teachers attempt gently to lead children into righteousness, and, as the children grow older, how the Mutual Improvement Associations gather them into groups and attempt to interpret to them the nature of their acts in relation to the gospel—a worthy effort. It occurred to me that we parents leave too much to them.

It was said in my hearing some time ago that if a child goes to all of these auxiliary organizations faithfully, he is bound, all things being equal, to become a good Latter-day Saint when he grows up. Let me assure you that that is true in part, but only if another factor is brought into the picture.

That Primary child will leave about five o'clock for home, will walk down the street, or along the village road, and will arrive eventually at his own domicile. There is where the next test comes.

In the few moments allotted to me, I should like to talk about two items, and I do not wish to be misunderstood, but I want to be as clear as I know how to be. These have to do with the use of things in the home which touch that child's character. You heard it said the other day that Satan has no power over a child until eight years of age. I believe that to be true, but I wish to remind you all, and myself, too, that Satan may have no power to tempt a child before eight years of age, but some of his emissaries go all out to condition a child so that when he becomes eight he will not be conscious that sinning is very bad. Exposing children, small children particularly, to the constant barrage of situations which can affect their outlook on the matters on which they must make decisions is a subtle way to bring them into evil later. I suspect it is no different with large children. Nowadays the home is one place where the child meets this test.

The first item is comic books, and the things we call "funnies." Harmless-appearing things they are. A frustrated mother likes to get the supper on, and the child nagging at her can easily be pacified, if he is old enough, by a handful of these books. It is easy entertainment, and she may feel that the child will look at them and gain something from the pictures.

If I were a parent again and had a small child, I never would allow him to look at a comic book until I had looked through it myself, and if it contained one thing suggestive of anything but the highest principles, that child, if I had the power, would not see that book.

Comic books in the home are a poor substitute for activity on the part of parents in relation to their children. They can do, and often do, untold evil. At best, they are poor entertainment. They stop a child from learning how to read well. They stultify his desire to learn good literature, and he ends up by being a picture gazer, able to absorb ideas through that means only.

I am ever grateful to my uncle, and to my own parents for getting me in the line of reading good things. I well recall two incidents. One day there came to my door the postman, and he brought a magazine known then as the Cosmopolitan. In that day it was not what it is today. It was considered to be a high-class magazine, about as high as they come in America. My name was on it, and there was a note accompanying it, and it said: "You are to have this subscription for a whole year, with love—Uncle Lee." I was then six years old, and I could no more understand the words in that magazine than I could have understood an angel, had I seen one. But it was my magazine, and every month I watched for it, and every month I tried to justify my uncle's confidence in me that he thought I could understand such a thing. The gift, even though not understood, built in me a pride that I wanted to measure up.

Another time he stood in the library of the old house on Fourth East—I suppose he knew I was in the house—and I burst into the library, and there he was in front of a bookcase with a book open in his hand. He said, "Come here." I went there. He read to me a most exciting adventure between some white men and some Indians. He said, "This is a great book, and I know you will like it." Then he put it in my hands, and said, "Read it, and when you finish reading it, I have another one equally good for you." Thus I became acquainted with The Last of the Mohicans, and I thus was led until I could appreciate good literature, and had learned to read well and rapidly—one of the greatest gifts I have ever had.

Brothers and sisters, do not allow your children to have in their hands things which will keep them from learning the art of reading, and which in addition will also give them evil from pictures which you have not censored yourselves.

The second item is a thing which I am sure many of you will not agree about—television—the very thing that is bringing this conference to thousands of people. Used correctly it is a great blessing. Abused, it can be a source of evil. How would you like to have a man walk into your home and say to your daughter, aged ten, "Look, honey, I have some pictures to show you," and then he shows her some pictures of half-dressed people performing antics, doing lewd things or questionable things or uncultured things. You would do anything in your power to keep him from entering your house, and yet at the touch of a button that is what you have if you do not take care.

No one knows how far it will go, and no one knows where it will stop. You keep on feeding to a child—a small child—the sight of his parents laughing over a humorous situation, happily engaged in enjoying something, and then having that thing linked to some item which the producers are trying to sell which is evil, and the child will connect the laughter with the evil, and will not see any evil in it. If you keep that up for several years, over and over again, what do you think will happen?

I saw an example of it just the other day. Sister Young and I happened to be in a small town overnight on our way to a conference, and having an hour or two to spend, we happened to pass a theater which advertised a moving picture which was very famous a year or two ago. We went in.

The theme of the picture had to do with three men coming home from war, two of whom spend their first night home with their families getting drunk. The antics of these drunken men brought hysterical laughter from a certain group. It was not the adults. It was the high-pitched, shrill, laughter of small children. Where do you suppose they learned to laugh at that sort of thing? Do you think that one show would cause it? No. They have been exposed for a long time to such things. Movies are not the entire cause. Television has its share of the blame to take.

I think it would be a good thing sometimes if we had on our instruments at home a little slot in which we had to drop fifty cents before we could enjoy the program. That might be a deterrent to some programs which we view because we do not have the discrimination to turn them off.

Nowadays, gone is the dining room, that sacred place where Father gathered his family around him at suppertime, and where he could give instruction and they could get acquainted. Now it has disappeared into the laps of those who sit by small stools gulping food while they watch their favorite program on television.

There will be other evils come, too, if we do not control this, and the other things which come into our homes uncensored, simply because they are there, and we permit them. Handled correctly television can be an influence for good. Handled incorrectly, it will become a force for endless evil.

I wanted to raise my voice to that extent this morning. My testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ is sure at this moment. I hope it will always be so. If I act right, it will be. I know that the President of this Church, President McKay, is the Prophet of the Living God, and that those who help him are, also, and I pledge myself and all that I have to the service to which they have called me. In the name of Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE Q. MORRIS

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, I am thankful for the privilege of being with you in this great conference, and have been thrilled with the messages we have received, beginning with the impressive and inspired message from President McKay, up until this moment. I sincerely pray that the Lord may direct me to say that which is true and that he would have said.

I have been impressed with the number of references to and testimonies regarding our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. It is our obligation and our privilege to proclaim him to the world. He has come to us in our day. He has established for us his Church. He has placed in it his authority and his power, and he is directing it through his servant on the earth who stands as his representative in the world today.

It is our privilege and our pleasure and our joy to proclaim his divinity, and that fact, the divinity of Jesus Christ, is the center fact of human existence, and the basic truth in human life. If we do not know that and are not governed by it, our lives will be failures. Unless we have his message and his instructions, we shall not know what life is, we shall not know who we are or what we are; we shall not know how to live; we shall not know what aim to place before us in life, because it is only through the gospel of Jesus Christ that we know the truth that should guide us day by day and sustain us through our lives and make us truly intelligent beings.

Jesus Christ is the spirit of truth, the spirit of light; and truth and light the Lord has defined as being intelligence. If we would be truly intelligent, we should learn the truth concerning his character and mission.

The obligations are such and our relations to him are such that it is our most serious duty in life to know him and love him and keep his commandments and thereby know and love our Father in heaven and keep his commandments, because he is the messenger from the Father; he is the one chosen of the Father to represent him in the earth, chosen of the Father to be the Redeemer of the world, chosen of the Father to be the Creator of the world. Into his hands the Father has placed all things, and we are in his hands. One day we will stand before him to be judged, and we will be judged as to our relations to him and our attitude towards him and whether or not we have listened to his word and kept his commandments. We will all come to that day and to that accounting, and so will every man and woman in the world.

It seems easy for some people to appraise Jesus Christ and put him in his place as no doubt a very great Teacher and a great Prophet, a man who lived a wonderful life. The "wise and the prudent" have a way of doing this. I rather think the humble and the meek accept him as the Redeemer of the world. He said:

I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. (Matt. 11:25.)

The Lord Jesus Christ is not on trial before the world. Men should understand that. The world is on trial before the Lord Jesus Christ, and we will have to account for the attitude taken toward him and his message, and we cannot accept him without accepting his principles and his doctrines. If we reject his principles and his doctrines, we reject him. If we reject his divinity, we reject him:

Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.

Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: [but] he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also. (I John 2:22-23.)

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. (II John 9.)

Another thing that the world must understand if they will know the truth,

Wednesday, April 6

Fourth Day

and if they will only be humble and true before the Lord they will be glad to understand it, is that those who receive or reject the teachings and testimonies and admonitions of the servants of God receive or reject the Lord Jesus Christ. He said to the seventy when he sent them out to preach the gospel:

He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me. (Luke 10:16.)

How important to the world, that they understand these simple principles! If it were not for the traditions, the errors, the sins, and the shortcomings of men, all of the world would accept the Lord Jesus Christ. There is nothing but what a true heart and a right mind would rejoice in. He is perfect. He is love. He is righteousness. He is truth, the perfection of all things, and is devoting his great power and his whole being to the loving and saving of the children of men.

Why should we not accept him with all our hearts? Only because of our shortcomings! It is not because of our superior knowledge and intelligence that we reject Jesus Christ. It is because we lack in superior knowledge and intelligence and humility and meekness that he is rejected. If we will be faithful and humble, as the brethren have said in this conference, and keep his commandments, we will know of his divinity, and it will be our salvation and our exaltation.

Read the ninety-third section of the Doctrine and Covenants, on the matter of obedience. It is by keeping the commandments of God that we will gain in light and truth until we are filled with light and truth and know all things and become like unto our Father in heaven. The thing that prevents that is, as the revelation says, that Satan takes from us light and truth through disobedience.

And that wicked one cometh and taketh away light and truth, through disobedience, from the children of men, and because of the traditions of their fathers. (D. & C. 93:39.)

If you keep not my commandments, the love of the Father shall not continue with you, therefore you shall walk in darkness. (Ibid., 95:12.)

Anything that we wish to attain or should attain to that is desirable, noteworthy, lovely, of good repute, that will be to our salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of God will be attained by the principle of obedience to the Lord Jesus Christ.

I bear my humble witness that he is Christ, the Son of the Living God, that this is his Church and kingdom and that it is spreading throughout the earth and will continue to spread. In this conference there has been the announcement of a new era when on a world-wide basis the Church is to be visited regularly and supervised regularly, and we have seen plans put into effect that when finished will give us a line of temples that will encircle the globe—outposts of the kingdom of God.

I bear witness that this spreading will continue until it covers the earth and the will of God will be done. Give us power, I pray, O Father, that we may be true and faithful to these ends, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Our concluding speaker will be Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy. We have just heard Elder George Q. Morris of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, I humbly ask an interest in your faith and prayers and that the Spirit of God may direct what I may say today. I would like to speak briefly on the subject of "Indian Traditions of the Book of Mormon."

Since the publishing of that sacred scripture on March 26, 1830, a number of missionaries have been informed by various Indians that according to their traditions their progenitors in the distant past had possessed a sacred, religious book, which volume had disappeared; and a prominent factor in those traditions is the claim that that sacred record would be possessed again by the American Indians. On a number of occasions these people have identified the Book of Mormon as the record of their ancestors for which, in accordance with their traditions, they had been waiting and seeking.

Elder Glen G. Fisher, former president of the Western Canadian Mission, wrote an article which was published in THE IMPROVEMENT ERA in March 1952, in which he graphically described the experiences had in 1908 by Chief Yellow Face and his Cree Indians in their search for the sacred book of their ancestors.<sup>1</sup> They came from northern Canada to southern Alberta, camped on the Mormon ranch, and during several months' time patiently waited for an opportunity to get a copy of the Book of Mormon and be taught its contents, because they knew that this book was the record of their ancestors. After they had learned of the purpose of the sojourn of Chief Yellow Face and members of his tribe, some of the Latter-day Saints who worked on the Mormon ranch spent evening after evening teaching the Indians the contents of the Book of Mormon. The Indian chief and his followers expressed much joy and deep satisfaction regarding what they were taught, declaring that the Book of Mormon was truly the sacred record of their ancestors which had been preserved for their enlightenment.

In the April issue of THE IMPROVEMENT ERA, Elder Golden R. Buchanan, president of the Southwest Indian Mission, described some of the traditions of the Indians with whom he has been working. He wrote: "The people lost their records and their 'books.'" But as the Hopis say,

We were not left without hope; we were told some day young white men with blue eyes would come knocking at Hopi doors and would bring back to us our records and our true story. They would come from the east and that we would know them by their outstretched hands, and they would call us "my brother" and "my sister."<sup>2</sup>

There may be people who would question the validity of the evidences in the examples I have given of Indian traditions of the Book of Mormon, maintaining that these evidences have all come forth since the publishing of that book and may have been instigated by it or by the Mormon missionaries. Be that as it may!

The important question for our consideration, however, is: Are there any important documents available which were written by the Indians prior to the publishing of the Book of Mormon which furnish evidence that these people had traditions which came down from their ancestors to the effect that their progenitors at a certain time in the distant past had possessed an important, sacred, religious book, which book could be identified as the Book of Mormon?

I shall answer that question in the affirmative. Yes, we do have some very important documents which were written between two and three hundred years prior to the publishing of the Book of Mormon which make the claim that many years ago the ancestors of the American Indians possessed an important, sacred book. These writings are so explicit that one could easily believe that the ancient records spoken of by the Indian writers are the same records as the ones from which the Book of Mormon was translated by the Prophet.

The first of these Indian writings of great significance which shall be referred to is the Works of Ixtlikochitl, written by an Indian of the royal family in Mexico approximately 1600 A.D. In these writings he accounts the history, traditions, and religious beliefs of his people from the time of the migration of the first group from the Tower of Babel—continuing with the emigrations from over the sea of two other groups—and on down to the Spanish conquest.

The most pertinent portion of his book in relationship to our subject today deals with a very important character called Hueman. He and his work are described at great length in several different places in the Works of Ixtlixochitl, his unusual accomplishments being highly extolled. If one was to study thoughtfully Ixtlixochitl's account of Hueman and compare it with the portrayal of the character, personality, activities, and various accomplishments of Mormon as described in the Nephite record, one could easily identify the two men as being the same individual.<sup>3</sup> For example, their names are quite similar—the one in the Indian manuscript being called Hueman and the other in the Nephite account being called Mormon. Each is claimed to have been a great prophet of God. Each is claimed to have been the head general of the army.<sup>4</sup> Each is claimed to have been instrumental in bringing about a treaty of peace in 350 A.D., which treaty is claimed to have lasted for ten years.<sup>5</sup> And the last comparison which I shall make, and probably the most pertinent one to our subject today is: Each is claimed to have been the compiler of a very important religious record which delineated the religious beliefs and history of the inhabitants of ancient America.<sup>6</sup>

Since each of us is more or less acquainted with the account given in the Nephite record of Mormon's activities, under the direction of the Lord, in taking a thousand years accumulation of records and from them compiling and abridging in one book the story of his people, which momentous task was completed by his son Moroni and brought forth in the latter days under the title of the Book of Mormon, I shall not spend time to discuss that point further. I would like, however, to quote directly from the Works of Ixtlixochitl wherein he described Hueman as a collector and compiler of the sacred records of his people. While meditating on this particular quotation, the thought came to me that upon reading this quotation one could easily imagine that he was reading the Nephite account of Mormon's activities as a writer and keeper of records. To quote from the sixteenth century Indian document:

And before going on I want to make an account of Hueman, the astrologer. . . . Before dying he gathered together all the histories the Tultecas had, from the creation of the world up to that [his] time, and had them pictured in a very large book, where were pictured all their persecutions and hardships, prosperities and good happenings, kings and lords, laws and good government of their ancestors, old sayings and good examples, temples, idols, sacrifices, rites and ceremonies that they had, astrology, philosophy, architecture, and the other arts, good as well as bad, and a resumé of all the things of science, knowledge, prosperous and adverse battles, and many other things; and he entitled his book calling it Tecamxtili, which, well interpreted means Various Things of God and Divine Book: The natives now call the Holy Scriptures [meaning the Bible] Tecamxtili, because it is almost the same, . . .

This marvelous quotation describing the activities of Hueman in writing or compiling a very important book is so similar to the Nephites' account of Mormon's activities that such a quotation constitutes a noteworthy Book of Mormon evidence.

The second example which I shall give of an early Indian document which contains numerous, marvelous evidences sustaining the claims made by the Book of Mormon is known today as the Popol Vuh.<sup>7</sup> The original manuscript was written in the Quiché language by a Quiché-Maya Indian in faraway Guatemala, Central America, nearly three hundred years before the Prophet Joseph Smith published the account translated from the Nephites' records. Between the years 1554 and 1558 A.D., an Indian at Chichicastenango, Guatemala, wrote what has become accepted by scholars as a very important and unusual document in which he delineated the mythology, beliefs, and traditions of his people.<sup>8</sup> The Quiché-Maya Indian author claimed that there was a prevalent tradition among his people that his ancestors in the distant past had at one time possessed an important, religious, sacred book which had disappeared, being had no more by his people, and so he wrote his manuscript to replace that lost book.

Father Francisco Ximenez, a Catholic priest who officiated in the St. Tomas church at Chichicastenango, obtained the manuscript from the Quiché-Maya Indians approximately 1600 A.D. No doubt he had won their good will and thereby was able to borrow this manuscript for the purpose of translating it from Quiché into the Spanish language. After his work was completed, Father Ximenez's translation of the Indian document remained in manuscript form for approximately two hundred fifty years before it was discovered and published in the Spanish language. Since that time it has appeared in several Spanish editions, as well as in French and German. It was not until five years ago (1950), however, that it was translated and published for the first time in English, the translation being made by Delia Goetz and the famous Mayan scholar, Sylvanus G. Morley.

When the Quiché-Maya manuscript was first written, it had no title. The Indian writer claimed that the lost Quiché book was called the Popol Vuh, and so it was natural for the publisher of this sixteenth century document to call it the Popol Vuh after the name of the lost Quiché-Maya book. The meaning of Popol Vuh, according to the sixteenth century document, is The Book of the People, or The Book of the Princes, or The Book of the Community. It seems that those titles, according to the content of the Book of Mormon, would also be very fitting for the Nephite records.

I shall now quote directly from the Popol Vuh and let each one evaluate in his mind the possibility of this record referring to the Book of Mormon records as they were when possessed by the people of ancient America:

This we shall write now under the Law of God and Christianity; we shall bring it to life because now the Popol Vuh, as it was called, cannot be seen any more, in which was clearly seen the coming from the other side of the sea and the narration of our obscurity, and our life was clearly seen. The original book written long ago, existed, but its sight is hidden to the searcher and to the thinker. Great were the descriptions and the account of how all the sky and the earth were formed, . . .<sup>10</sup>

In speaking of the original Popol Vuh which the ancestors of the Quiché-Maya Indians had possessed in the distant past, the late Dr. Sylvanus G. Morley, possibly the greatest of the Mayan scholars, wrote as follows:

The Popol Vuh was also the book of prophecy and the oracle of the kings and lords, [Certainly that is exactly what the Book of Mormon was. Then he continues:] according to a reference which the author of the Manuscript makes in another passage, where he states that [Morley quoting directly from the sixteenth century document] "Great lords and wonderful men were the marvelous kings. . . . They knew if there would be war, and everything was clear before their eyes; they saw if there would be death and hunger, if there would be strife. They well knew that there was a place where it could be seen, that there was a book which they called the Popol Vuh."<sup>11</sup>

This quotation reminds one of King Mosiah and King Benjamin, great Nephite prophets, seers, and revelators.

The late Dr. Morley adds the following interesting comment:

And in the final paragraph, the Quiché chronicler adds with a melancholic accent that what he has said in his works is all that has been preserved of the ancient Quiché, "because no longer can be seen (the book of the Popol Vuh) which the kings had in olden times, for it had disappeared."<sup>12</sup>

Since the time that Father Francisco Ximenez translated the sixteenth century Popol Vuh from Quiché into Spanish, scholars have done much speculating regarding this lost Indian book. They have made guesses regarding its authorship, the language in which it was written, the writing materials used, its probable contents, and numerous other things. For example, as early as 1600 A.D. Father Ximenez wrote:

The truth is that such a book never appeared nor has been seen, and thus it is not known if this way of writing was by painting, as those of Mexico, or by knotting string as the Peruvians; you may believe that it was by painting on woven white cloth.<sup>13</sup>

Probably one of the most intriguing subjects regarding the lost book of the Quiché-Maya on which scholars have speculated is: "What has become of the original Popol Vuh?" Of course none of them has known the answer to that question any more than they have known the answers to the other questions on this subject on which they have speculated. It is my firm opinion that we as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have a far better chance to know the answers to such questions than do the scholars, because of the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the numerous appearances of the Angel Moroni, and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon.

Since I firmly believe that the Quiché-Maya Indians of Guatemala are descendants of the Book of Mormon peoples of ancient America, as I believe also that other Indians trace back to the same ancestry, it is but natural for me to regard the lost Quiché-Maya Popol Vuh, which disappeared from among the ancestors of the Quichés many, many years ago, to be the Book of Mormon records. It is evident that they were lost or disappeared when Moroni, the last historian of the Nephite race, hid them in the Hill Cumorah in 421 A.D. A knowledge of the activities of the compilers of the ancient records, their contents, and finally their sudden disappearance was carried down from age to age by the Indians through tradition to the sixteenth century, when at that time a Quiché-Mayan recorded the traditions of his people, according to the late Dr. Morley,

... as a substitute for the Libro Nacional [original Popol Vuh or lost book from which "the kings used to read"<sup>14</sup>], as a revision and a new version of the accounts which had been preserved in the venerable book which had already disappeared.<sup>15</sup>

In our present discussion, I have purposely presented Indian traditions of the Book of Mormon from four widely separated sections of the country: the first from Canada; the second from Arizona; the third from Mexico; and the fourth from Guatemala. My purpose was to show that traditions prevailed somewhat universally among the various

American Indian tribes to the effect that their ancestors in the distant past had possessed an important, sacred, religious book, which volume had disappeared, but, according to many of the traditions, would be mysteriously preserved and eventually brought again to the descendants of the inhabitants of ancient America. It is obvious that these traditions fit well with what has actually happened in regard to the Book of Mormon.

Why should not the Indians have received through tradition the knowledge of the fact that their progenitors in ancient America had had a sacred book written for them, since evidence is abundant in the Book of Mormon which shows clearly that the Lamanites were well aware of the fact that their rivals were record keepers and that the prophets had predicted the eventual destruction of the Nephite nation and the preservation of the records for the Lamanites' descendants? For example, Enos, the son of Jacob and a record keeper, knowing that the Lamanites had

... swore in their wrath that, if it were possible, they would destroy our [the Nephites'] records and us, and also all the traditions of our fathers. [praying diligently, asking] ... that the Lord God would preserve a record of my people, the Nephites ... that it might be brought forth at some future day unto the Lamanites ...

... and he covenanted with me that he would bring them [the records] forth unto the Lamanites in his own due time ...

And the Lord said unto me: Thy fathers have also required of me this thing; and it shall be done unto them according to their faith; ...

... I Enos went about among the people of Nephi, ... testifying of the things I had heard and seen.<sup>16</sup>

The latter two historians of the Nephite nation, like the prophets during the early period, had firm convictions that the records would be preserved and brought forth in the latter days to the descendants of the Lamanites. Shortly before his death, Mormon recorded in the records a sermon to the descendants of the Lamanites in which he said:

... I would speak somewhat unto the remnant of this people who are spared. ... For behold, this is written for the intent that ye . . . will know concerning your fathers, and also the marvelous works which were wrought by the power of God among them."<sup>17</sup>

Following Mormon's death and after Moroni had completed the abridgment of the Jaredite records, he wrote:

Wherefore, I write a few more things contrary to that which I had supposed; . . . that perhaps they may be of worth to my brethren, the Lamanites, in some future day, according to the will of the Lord."<sup>18</sup>

I bear witness that the Book of Mormon contains the word of God and that it was written originally by holy prophets with the knowledge that it would be preserved to be brought forth in the latter days for the benefit of the descendants of the Lamanites—the American Indians. In fact, one of the declared purposes of writing and preserving that sacred book is proclaimed in its preface, which declares that it was ". . . written to the Lamanites."

Since the knowledge of all the things of which I have spoken was so widely had by the Nephites, it is my firm conviction that the Lamanites were also fully aware of the records and the promises contained therein to their posterity. Following the close of Nephite history, certainly the Lamanites and their Indian descendants would hand such knowledge down from age to age by tradition to the present time, which has actually happened; and so it is easily understandable why the Indians who live in various parts of the Americas have similar traditions of the Book of Mormon. These Indian traditions, to my way of thinking, provide important evidences sustaining the claims made by the Nephite writers—thereby constituting additional important Book of Mormon evidences.

I bear witness to these things, and I do so in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

FOR MYSELF and for all of you, I express gratitude to these Singing Mothers. I am grateful that the loveliness of their lullabies has been sublimated into the holiness of their hymns under the inspirational leadership of Sister [Florence Jepperson] Madsen.

Those of us who sit here this afternoon, still subject to our turn, know that this is the hour. It reminds me of the time when we used to play musical chairs. You remember when we gathered in a circle around the chairs and the host took a chair out each time around, so that there was one chair fewer than people. We knew when we got down to the last three or four chairs that that was it. Well, the chairs have all been taken out but three!

Brother Richard Evans and I have been sitting here together for three days, observing to each other that there is strength in this audience—strong men and remarkable women.

It is intriguing to me to know that in a hundred and a quarter years six members have grown into a million and a quarter people. That is a wonderful achievement in the Lord's work.

I am doubly grateful to be here today because last October I missed this conference. Recently out of the hospital, I was convalescing at home. But that experience has brought me something that perhaps I could have had in no other way. I stand here today grateful for the blessings of our Father in heaven and his goodness. I bring you my witness to the power of the priesthood, because under the hands of these my good brethren, I have been blessed back to health and strength. I know the power of healing is in this priesthood, and I give you my witness that it is.

This has been a wonderful conference. I have sat here much of the time with a lump in my throat. I am honored to be here. I rejoice in the power of the leadership of this First Presidency. They are among the strongest men ever to guide the destinies of this Church. I pay my tribute to my brethren. It is a sustaining force to have every one of them give us his blessing for this experience. These are strong men, as you know from the evidence of this conference. They are devoted men, and in their hands you can feel good about the future of this great Church.

I pray that the few minutes I occupy I may be in tune with the Spirit, the uplifting Spirit, that we have felt all the way through this conference.

I am always concerned about the carry-over effect of our teachings. The gospel, in the language of Paul, is the power of God unto salvation, and these conferences and all of our meetings and the very genius of the gospel itself are meant to help us the better to live.

Each week we go out to some stake or to some mission. Each Monday morning I come back lifted up and built up not only in my faith but also in the assurance of the goodness of the people among whom we labor. I bear you witness that the evidence we get week after week is that the gospel makes better men and women; it transforms their lives; and I want to hint from two of our conferences some of the things that shall never leave me the same again.

When I was introduced to the home at which I was to stay in Klamath [Oregon-California] Stake, I felt a little embarrassed because the hostess, the wife of a member of the stake presidency, was in a wheel chair, crippled from the effects of polio for twenty years. But the look in her face convinced me that I need have no misgivings. She wheels around in that wheel chair, thanks to the kindliness of a good husband, as if the house had been built just for her. She wheels out into the kitchen between the range and serving table where she prepares the food, makes a turn, and has it ready for distribution. She teaches a Sunday School class, is a leader in Relief Society, and if you ever shook hands with that little woman and caught the look in her face, you would know that, while an affliction can cripple the body, it never can handicap such a spirit.

A few weeks later I went down to Zion Park [Utah] Stake. I shall be grateful all the rest of my days for the inspiration of that visit. In one family there I think I saw as much affliction as I have ever seen in any other one family. But those good people have risen above it so wonderfully. The president of the stake down there served in the war, and it is almost a miracle that he came back alive. He wears a steel plate now, a cranial plate, with the index across the forehead that it is there. His wife, stricken arthritically, with feet she could hardly walk upon until they were all broken anew and made over, and her hands so gnarled and twisted that as you reach to shake her hand, you wish you could give her a blessing. Two fine boys born into the family and then the third child, a little girl, under the complications of Rh-negative, invalided through eight years. I want to tell you that when you walk into that home and catch the spirit of the father and the mother and you watch the boys rush over to help the little child who, when she falls, cannot get up, when you kneel in the home and you listen to the prayers of that family, with their gratitude to Almighty God for the kindness he has shown to them, you know that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation.

Well, in the light of those two experiences I should like to join with you for just a little while this afternoon in consideration of one of the richest declarations ever made. I love the Book of Mormon and have done so ever since I was a youngster. For this afternoon I have chosen from the second book of Nephi the passage, that I want to develop just a little with you:

And now, behold, if Adam had not transgressed he would not have fallen, but he would have remained in the garden of Eden. And all things which were created must have remained in the same state in which they were after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end.

And they would have had no children; wherefore they would have remained in a state of innocence, having no joy, for they knew no misery; doing no good, for they knew no sin.

But behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things.

And now for my theme:

Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy. (2 Nephi 2: 22-25.)

That same sentiment is echoed in one of the greatest documents ever given to mankind, the Beatitudes in the Sermon on the Mount. You remember that every paragraph in that great document begins with a blessing. "Blessed are the poor in spirit," and so on through all of them. In the concluding paragraph of that great document, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner . . ."—you remember it.

Rejoice, and be exceedingly glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you. (Matt. 5:11-12.)

I think sometimes we let the negative aspects, the disciplinary aspects, the prohibitive aspects crowd out the teaching of the joys of the gospel. I wish we might center our thinking a little while today in the joys of living the gospel, not as an obligation but as a privilege—one of the richest privileges in life.

Did we have time this afternoon I should like to expand on the meaning of joy. In ordinary language we talk as if joy, pleasure, gladness, and happiness were all synonymous. But in this passage from the Book of Mormon joy has a far richer meaning. Pleasure, in my mind, is essentially a gratification of one of the senses. Happiness seems to center in a kind of contentment born of good fortune or of some fortuitous circumstance. But joy reveals a certain spiritual exaltation.

Wednesday, April 6

Fourth Day

As someone has said: "Joy is more intense than happiness, deeper than gladness, to which it is akin, nobler and more enduring than pleasure." As I have been thinking about it, joy seems to me to be essentially spiritual and has an abiding quality with a hint of eternal bliss.

How may we aspire to this thing called the joy of living? We cannot buy it; it is not for sale in the market place, nor can you go out to cultivate it directly. At best it seems to be a sort of by-product. It is an end result achieved from worthy performance.

I come to you today with three suggestions that I think make for joy:

I. In the first place, we can find it in the work of the world. There has been a tendency, perhaps all too strong, recently, to coddle the children we love. In our own state legislature in an attempt to protect children, we could easily do them a great disservice. I notice this morning that our governor indicates that he would be willing to call the legislature back into session to correct the mistake because there is no great wisdom in putting a premium upon idleness, either for children or for men.

You remember what the Lord has said: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." (Gen. 3:19.) And there is this wonderful passage in John. When the Savior was criticized for something he did on the Sabbath, he answered his accusers by saying, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." (John 5:17.)

And then that memorable passage from Ecclesiastes:

"The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: (I am glad I have not been rich—because this next line says) . . . but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep." (Ecclesiastes 5:12.)

All my life I have enjoyed the blessed privilege of living with people who love to work. I rejoice in a helpmate who delights in keeping up our home. Born in a country town out in this valley, I still thrill as I think of the work of two men, Robert and Willard Pixton, who were pioneers in my town. They prided themselves that there was never a weed in the potato patch. They selected their grain, and when it rolled into the fall harvest, it was beautiful. Those men worked as if they loved to work, and when fall came, after they had plowed and planted and cultivated and irrigated and harvested—with the barns full of hay and the granaries rich in grain—and the cellars bulging with fruits and vegetables—I am just sure that Robert and Willard Pixton gathered the family together in a thanksgiving that was full of joy—joy for the blessings of heaven.

I have always been glad that I lived in a humble home—a home in which people loved to work. I can recall the thrill of the days when we brought in the new straw and put it under the rag carpet that had been woven from the rags which mother used to cut and wind into balls to be taken over to be made into a carpet. How we used to love to "tromp" the straw to get it down so that the carpet could be stretched over it; and then we would attach the stretcher and "stomp" some more and pull and push and then tack the carpet down. Those were great days. No man ever relaxed more luxuriously on a Persian rug.

I remember when the pig was killed in the fall, and the hams were put down in brine, and the sausage was made, not of the discarded parts but of the selected parts. I have always thought that eating was in the realm of pleasure—but I want to tell you that some meals get pretty close to joy.

For years I kept in touch with one of the finest writers in America, who wrote this little paragraph awhile back in a Chicago paper:

When a young man finds no joy in his daily work, goes to it in the morning with regret, has no feeling of thankfulness that he has work to do, and dislikes the hours in which he does it, there is something wrong. It is a cheering thing to have the habit of industry, the desire to do each day's work better than that of the day before, and to leave it conscious of having done it well. There is a sad future for the young man who hates work, who dislikes his employer and gives as little of effort as he can get by with. He will suffer more from the shirking than his employer, because he is destroying his own chance for joy in his life.

Someone has said, "Happy is the man who has work he loves to do," but somebody else has added the basic fundamental thought, "Happy is the man who loves the work he has to do."

II. Well, we can find joy in a second place. It is in the life of the home, which has been spoken of here so beautifully throughout this conference, beginning with that inspirational message from our President.

I am mindful of the struggle we have to go through to get a home, and then the pride we feel as we come into it, and then the joy of children as they come to bless it. I still think that the birth of a baby surpasses the greatest miracle ever wrought. The joy in the coming of the children, their development, their questions, their affection, their frank disclosures, the privilege we have of living life over again, and then when we get to the stage of grandchildren, where we have all the joys and not quite the full responsibilities, when, after they have worn us or our nerves a little threadbare, we can suggest, that for the children's sake, maybe they ought to be in bed. These are great blessings and great sources of joy.

Let me give you a homely illustration of the difference between a joyous family and an agitated one. Some people make their lives center in "don'ts" and "mustn'ts" and "can'ts." I often think of the mother who used to say, "Go and see what Billy is doing and tell him to quit." That kind of parent gets into the car and proceeds to tell her children what they cannot do and orders them to be quiet. The wise parent, who has found the joy in the association of the children, says, "Let's see how many white horses we can see in the next hundred miles." Perhaps we shall have to change the white horses to red tractors. It is an interesting game to trace the alphabet on the billboards along the way—good fun to try to work out a complete alphabet. It is fun to find the best signboard along the way or, if you want to, and lean a little to the intellectual side, you can get one of the children's best current books—not the cheap ones that Brother Dilworth [Young] talked about this morning—but one of those beautifully illustrated books now available, and you can sit in the back seat (if you have the right kind of driver) and fill in the time that otherwise might drag. That is joy in the making.

In the home, too, there is the joy of a few good friends—not too many—because you cannot cultivate them—but a few of the friends who will stand by you in all that comes in life. We have such friends—God be praised for them.

In the language of Shakespeare, "Those friends thou hast, and their adoption tried, grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel."

III. I hurry into the third suggestion that I want to give you. We find joy in the work we do. We find joy in the privileges of the home with its children and its friends, but in the third place, and finally, we find joy in the service of the Lord.

I read the other night again from Habakkuk, a book which we do not turn to often enough:

Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls:

And then this ringing line:

Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. (Hab. 3:17-18. Italics added.)

Yesterday, all day long, we had the privilege of sitting in an inspirational meeting with these good mission presidents. I could wish in some magical way their messages might be brought to all of you because it was a day of dedication and consecration. I bless them for the work they are doing.

In the spirit of that wonderful meeting of yesterday, I bid you to find the joy of life in service of the Lord whether it is a call to be a ward teacher, a call to be a Sunday School teacher, an MIA leader, a quorum officer, or a call to visit those who are a little disinclined or indifferent or bound down by some unfortunate habit. The promise of the Lord is so rich in its blessing:

And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!

And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me. (D. & C. 18:15-16.)

Your joy is akin to the joy of heaven, for as the Master declared:

Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth. (Luke 15:10.)

When you have felt the power of his Holy Spirit, when you have been inspired to meet your perplexing problems, when you have had the privilege of comforting the brokenhearted, when you have led an erring one into the sunlight of a new day, when you have achieved the goal of your dreams, when you have done these things, you enjoy this promise that was given to the laborers in the vineyard years ago:

And whoso receiveth you, there will I be also, for I will go before your face. I will be on your right hand and on your left, and my Spirit shall be in your hearts, and mine angels round about you, to bear you up. (D. & C. 84:88. Italics added.)

Add to that promise the glorious one already quoted in this conference by President Richards:

Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven.

The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth; and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee forever and ever. (Ibid., 121:45-46.)

I give you my witness, my good brethren and sisters, that in the service of the Lord comes the supreme joy of life. And when you have coupled it with the nobility of work and the satisfaction of having friends and children about you, God can bless you, and he will. May he do so abundantly, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve has just concluded speaking. Elder Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve will now speak to us.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I CHERISH the privilege of sitting by Brother Adam S. Bennion, but not that of following him as a speaker. He makes this task doubly difficult.

What I should least like to do today would be to detract in any way from the glorious quality and content and spirit of the messages which we have heard here these past four or five days—beginning with President McKay's message of Sunday morning on peace in the world and the influence of the home; going back before that to President Richards' remarks in the priesthood meeting on Saturday evening, as concerning the counsel that we should not overextend ourselves in debt (which reminded me of the counsel given to Joseph Smith not to run faster nor labor more than we have strength and means); then the glorious talks—two of them—by President J. Reuben Clark on fundamentals, including the counsel to keep all of the commandments; and President Smith's remarks at the missionary meeting, reminding us of our inescapable obligations to bear witness to the world.

And so we have been edified and encouraged and strengthened by the messages of all the brethren, on the home, on the teaching of children, on the example we must set before them, on the divinity of our Savior, Jesus the Christ, on the glorious reality and divine calling of Joseph the Prophet, of the reality of the appearance to him of the Father and the Son. Right down to the present, to the immediately previous talk, it has been a glorious, inspiring, and solid and satisfying general conference.

I think at this point we could well ask the question, or questions: What is the ultimate meaning and purpose of these conferences; what is the real meaning of this miscellany of messages (or seeming miscellany to those who are not quite aware of the wholeness of the gospel)? Why do all this? Why come together? Why so exert ourselves and so concern ourselves? Why not just relax and be comfortable and complacent? Why is it all important? I suppose we are busier, per capita, than any other people that I know of, and if there were not some great far-reaching, basic importance to all this effort we go to, and all this gathering we do, all this activity, and all this instructing and edifying of one another, it would save us a lot of time and trouble if we knew that it were not important.

These things would not be so important except for the reality of everlasting life, but the most meaningful things in life are everlasting, and what we do is important because we are everlasting—

For whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it. (Matt. 16:25.)

Now Brother Bennion has already pursued a theme that I might have pursued; and some comments that I might have made on happiness he has transcended with his on joy. But the meaning of all this that we do, and the reason for all of it, is because men are immortal; because the object of life is happiness, peace, eternal life, and everlasting progress; and these are sufficient indeed to justify all we do, and much more.

I should like to read into the record, in witness of the truth of this statement, a sentence from Joseph Smith concerning the aim and object of life:

Happiness is the object and design of our existence; and will be the end thereof, if we pursue the path that leads to it; and this path is virtue, uprightness, faithfulness, holiness, and keeping all the commandments of God. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, pp. 255-256.)

Brother Bennion has ably brought before us some of the things that have in them the makings of joy and of happiness. There is a long list of other things. We could extend ourselves into the recital of them for a long time to come; among them: obedience; freedom, freedom to think, a kind of freedom in which we keep ourselves from the enslavement of habits that are detrimental to happiness; an open mind to truth; love; a sense of belonging; a conviction of purpose, purpose in time and in eternity; cleanliness; the peace that comes with a quiet conscience; patience; repentance—these are all indispensable elements of happiness.

Another I have not named is family unity. Not many days ago my lovely wife, the mother of our four sons, and I, with our sons, were all together—the six of us—in a car going to the same place with a common purpose and a common destination in mind; and sharply the thought came to me, how much less it would mean if we were not together, and if we were divided in our objectives; if their mother were trying to tell them to go one place or to believe one thing, and I were trying to tell them to go another place or to believe another thing; if she were setting before them a certain set of ideals or objectives, and I were setting before them a different set of ideals and objectives. This would not be fair to a home. It would not be fair to children. It would not be fair to the future.

One of the greatest elements of joy and peace and effectiveness in life is the unity of parents in a home; and with my young friends who are contemplating entering into this most important of all relationships, that of marriage, I would plead this day to think of this: No marriage has a right to be made, which, at its making, has less than the prospect of lasting everlastingly. No marriage at its making, has the right to impose the penalty upon a home of pulling children two ways at once. It is not fair to the children. It is not fair to the community. It is not fair to the future. It is difficult enough to teach children when both parents are pulling in the same direction, but when the two people that children have the most right to look to for guidance are each telling them something basically different, and are each persuading them on a different course in a different way, it has in it the seeds of trouble and discontent and frustration and unhappiness and ineffectiveness in life.

I would leave this with you as one of the greatest elements, one of the indispensable elements of happiness: unity in the home.

We could mention many more. There is humility, always an indispensable. I like to recall a sentence from Owen Meredith which rings in my heart: "O be sure that no man learn anything at all unless he first learn humility."

Of course, there is faith, the first of the first principles of the gospel. What a glorious thing faith is! Faith! All of us would like to know a lot of answers we do not know. All of us shall some day. But it was meant that men should live in part by faith. It is a glorious thing to have it, to meet the unanswered questions, to meet the fears of life, to carry us over all difficulties—the glorious principle of faith, the first of the first principles of the gospel.

From the fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants I would recall these elements of joy and happiness, of peace, and of purpose in life:

Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.

Ask, and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. (D. & C. 4:6-7.)

I haven't the language to express to you the love I feel for these, my brethren, for their fatherly and brotherly affection, confidence, and encouragement. I haven't the words to express to you the gratitude I feel for my fellowship with you and my membership in this Church, in this choice and cherished fellowship; and I am grateful for the love and affection I feel in my heart for all men, all of my Father's children, and for the things we have in common.

I think I know something of the weight of responsibility that comes with influencing the lives of others. I believe I sense something of the responbility of bearing witness; and yet to you who are here, and to all who may listen within and outside membership in this Church, I would leave with you the witness of my soul as to the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ; as to the Fatherhood of God, who made us in his image; as to the divine reality of the mission and message of Joseph Smith, and the appearance of the Father and the Son unto him, not just in a manner of speaking, but in very fact; as to the inspired and authorized leadership of this Church in this day; the prophetic calling of President McKay; as to the glorious destiny of all men, if they will follow the promises, the purposes, the commandments, and go all the way in keeping them—not just part way.

God lives. His purposes are eternal. Truth will triumph. Injustice will be righted. Men are immortal. There are happiness, peace, everlasting life, eternal progress for all of us on the terms on which our Father offers them to us.

To my beloved young friends of this glorious young generation that we have in the Church today: May I plead with you to be patient, to search the scriptures, to keep your lives balanced, and to reserve judgment, to keep faith, to keep clean, to go forth and rise to the high destiny that is yours, and to live your lives and make your homes with unity of purpose with your companions so that you may realize that joy and effectiveness and peace and undivided purpose in life which will lead to limitless possibilities here and hereafter.

God bless you and give you every needed thing in life, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened is Elder Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve. The Congregation will now sing, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire is Burning," conducted by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall. After the singing, Elder Bruce R. McConkie will speak to us.

The congregation and the Singing Mothers joined in singing the hymn, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire is Burning."

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

IF WE ARE to inherit eternal life in the kingdom of our Father, we must overcome the world. The world is a state of wickedness, evil, and carnality, a corrupt state in which men dwell and in which wickedness holds sway. To overcome the world, we must triumph over these things.

All men who live in this world, in this state of carnality, and who have not overcome the world, are themselves carnal and sensual and devilish by nature. That is the kind of inheritance that we have received as part of this mortality, and our object and end is to overcome the world and develop the kind of bodies, and the attributes and perfections, that will enable us to dwell with holy, pure, and exalted beings in the eternal world.

These truths have been revealed to us in many revelations; for instance, John wrote these words:

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever. (1 John 2:15-17.)

And the great Nephite prophet, Alma, in discoursing upon the probationary nature of our mortal existence said that all men are "carnal, sensual, and devilish, by nature." (Alma 42:10.)

From James we have these words:

... know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God. (James 4:4.)

Then finally, we have these expressions, as spoken by the angel who appeared to that righteous King Benjamin on this continent:

For the natural man is an enemy to God, and has been from the fall of Adam, and will be, forever and ever, unless he yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord, and becometh as a child, submissive, meek, humble, patient, full of love, willing to submit to all things which the Lord seeth fit to inflict upon him, even as a child doth submit to his father. (Mosiah 3:19.)

As we understand the plan of salvation, we came into this sphere of existence for two purposes. First: We came to gain this natural body, this tangible body, this body which here in this life is a temporary house for the eternal spirit, but which body we will receive back again in immortality through the atoning sacrifice of Christ. Second: We came here to see if we would have the spiritual integrity, the devotion to righteousness, to overcome the world, to put off the natural man, to bridle our passions, to curb and control the appetites that are natural in this type of existence.

We have been put in this environment advisedly. We were on probation of a sort when we lived in the presence of God, our Heavenly Father. But in that sphere we walked by sight; in that sphere we had spirit bodies. We have been sent down here to walk by faith, and we have been given natural bodies, which are subject to the ills and vicissitudes, the temptations and lusts of the flesh. And now, if by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel, by keeping the standards of personal righteousness that are found in the gospel, if by doing this, we can overcome the world, we will be taking the bodies which we possess and transforming them into the kind of bodies that can dwell with exalted beings.

The Prophet said that if we would go where God is, we must be like him; that is, we must develop the characteristics and the attributes and the perfections which God has. The struggle which we face is whether we will overcome the world or whether we will be overcome by the world. All men forsake the world when they come into the Church; they then overcome the world if they continue in righteousness and in diligence in keeping the commandments of God.

No one has overcome the world, the world of carnality and corruption, until he has given his heart to Christ, until he uses all his talents, abilities, and strength in keeping the commandments of God, and in causing this great work to roll forth.

The Lord has given us the agency, the talent, and the ability to achieve in this field. He sent his Son into the world to be the great Exemplar, to be a Pattern, to mark the way whereby we, like him, might attain glory and eternal reward.

It was Christ who said: "I have overcome the world," (John 16:33) and it was also Christ who promised,

To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. (Revelation 3:21.)

In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STERLING W. SILL

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

IN THE early part of the year 1842, John Wentworth, editor of the Chicago Democrat, went to Nauvoo and obtained an interview with the Prophet Joseph Smith. He requested, among other things, that the Prophet write out a statement of the things in which the Church believed, and the Prophet wrote the Thirteen Articles of Faith. Later these were accepted by the vote of the people and became a part of the doctrine of the Church. They are now included in the Pearl of Great Price and form a part of that great volume of latter-day scripture.

This afternoon, and on this anniversary of the birth of the Savior of the world, I would like to offer for your consideration the first four words of the Prophet's statement, from the point of view of its being the greatest success formula in the world. Victor Hugo said, "There is nothing in the world as powerful as an idea whose time has come," and if we can learn anything from the signs of the times, we know that the time has fully come when great faith in God should take a firmer hold upon our minds.

It has been a hundred thirty-five years since God the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ, reappeared upon the earth to re-establish among men a belief in the God of Genesis and to usher in the greatest and final dispensation. And so as the very foundation of our faith, the Prophet said, "We believe in God."

If the meaning of this phrase were limited to the idea that we believe that God exists, it would still be one of the great statements of the world. That is, there is great strength in the knowledge that we were not created by, nor are we at the mercy of, the forces of a blind and capricious chance. But when we say "we believe in God," we mean much more than merely that God exists. We mean that we understand something about the kind of being he is, that he is literally the Father of our spirits, and, according to the great law of the universe, the offspring may sometime become like the parent.

But the most thrilling and motivating part of this idea is what the words themselves indicate, that "we believe in God." We trust him. We believe that he knows his business, that regardless of chance or the errors of men, his purposes will prevail. We believe that our interests are his interests, that he meant what he said in that wonderful declaration that "This is my work and my glory to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." We believe that God does not desire that his children be dull, or unattractive, or unhappy, or unsuccessful.

There are many things that we do not understand. We don't understand our own birth or life or growth or death. We don't understand light or darkness. No one in mortality has ever seen his own spirit. We didn't discover the circulation of our own blood until just a little over three hundred years ago. It must be obvious, therefore, why a wise Heavenly Father would give us detailed instructions, setting forth objectives and the best methods for attaining them. It must be equally obvious that there are tremendous advantages in a complete acceptance of, and an unwavering faith in, the gospel; for as an earthly father is powerless to confer the maximum benefit upon a son who has no confidence in the motives or abilities of the father, so God is powerless to confer the greatest blessings upon men who do not believe in him. A great power attaches to a definite objective held by a strong faith. Jesus said, "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believe." (Mark 9:23.)

Sometime ago I read about the great woman swimming champion, Florence Chadwick. In 1950 she swam the English Channel, and then on July 4, 1952, she attempted to swim the twenty-one miles of water lying between Catalina Island and the southern California coast. The temperature of the water was forty-eight degrees, and a heavy fog lay over the sea. When she was only half mile or so from her objective, she became discouraged and decided to quit. Her father who was in the boat nearby tried to encourage her by pointing through the fog and telling her that land and success were near at hand. But she was discouraged, and a discouraged person is always a weak person.

The next day Miss Chadwick was interviewed by some newspapermen. They knew that she had swum greater distances on previous occasions, and they wanted to know the reason for her present failure. In answering their questions, Miss Chadwick said, no, it wasn't the cold water and it wasn't the distance. She said, "I was licked by the fog."

And then she recalled that on the occasion when she swam the English Channel, she had had a similar experience. When only a short way from shore she had given up, and this time also, her father had pointed ahead, and she had raised herself out of the water just long enough to get the picture of her objective firmly fixed in her mind. This gave her a great new surge of strength, and she never stopped again until she felt under her feet the firm earth of victory.

I thought of this recently when a stranger called me on the telephone and asked if he and his wife might come and discuss with me a great tragedy that had recently occurred in their family. He explained that a speeding automobile had taken the life of their only daughter, and they asked me to try and help them understand something about the purpose of life and the meaning of death and what their relationship ought to be with each other, and where God fit into the picture, and whether or not there was any use for them to try to live on.

This great tragedy weighed upon them so oppressively that they almost seemed to be suffocating, and for three and a half hours I tried as hard as I could to help them with their problem. But there wasn't much of a foundation on which to build, and I discovered that it can be a devastating thing all of a sudden to need great faith in God and not be able to find it. It wasn't that they were rebellious or that they disbelieved in God. Their skepticism went deeper; they hadn't given him a thought one way or the other. It wasn't that they disbelieved in immortality; up to this point, they hadn't cared. Then death had stepped across their threshold and taken the best-loved personality there. And then all of a sudden, they needed great faith in God and were not able to find it.

You can't merely snap your fingers and get great faith in God, any more than you can snap your fingers and get great musical ability. Faith takes hold of us only when we take hold of it. The great psychologist, William James, said, "That which holds our attention determines our action," and one of the unfortunate things in life is that we sometimes focus our attention on the wrong things.

I have been disturbed a little, as I have gone around and become more conscious of the great variety of temptations that we wrestle with and succumb to. When we enumerate all of the temptations, we find that we often fall before some very small ones, merely because we have continued to entertain them. We talk until we are weary about the "temptations down," not so much about the "temptations up."

The dictionary says that to tempt is "to arouse a desire for," and so I assume that I am correct in thinking that temptation can go in either direction, although it is the easiest thing in the world to allow our minds to become loaded with the temptations downward—the temptations of lethargy, the temptations of sloth, the temptations of ignorance, the temptations of sin.

But every thought tends to reproduce itself in an act. Rags, tatters, and dirt are always in the mind before they appear on the body. One of the greatest handicaps to spiritual growth, or any other kind of growth, is to have a negative mind, and I suppose that one of the functions of a great faith is to lift our thoughts upward, to houseclean our minds, to sweep out our "temptations down," and fill our minds with the "temptations up."

And so I would like to offer you the thought of some of the thrilling temptations upward—the temptations of culture, the temptations of service, the temptations of great industry, the temptations to focus our minds on great spirituality, the temptation to believe in God.

I am certain that the greatest waste there is in the world is not the devastation that goes with war; nor is it the cost that accompanies crime; nor is it both of these put together. The greatest waste in the world is that human beings, you and I, live so far below the level of our possibilities.

Henry Ward Beecher was once asked whether or not he believed that Christianity had failed, and he said that so far as he knew, it had never been tried. Compared with what we might be, we are only half awake. We have great concern that our lives may someday come to an end, but the real tragedy is that so many lives never really have a beginning. The fires in our souls need rekindling. In speaking of education, Francis Bacon said, "If you want a tree to produce, don't worry so much about the boughs; fertilize the roots." Then suppose we give in to that temptation to stimulate those great God-given powers within ourselves which can lift us toward heaven.

The brute creation goes down on all fours, which tends to throw its gaze upon the ground. But man stands upright in the image of his Maker that his vision may reach to the stars.

The mission of Jesus was up. Even in Gethsemane with the awful weight of our sins upon his soul, his face looked up to God. But whatever may be the attitude of the body, the spirit should be on its toes. When Jesus was teaching us to pray, he inserted that wonderful phrase which says, "Thy will be done." But even when we repeat these inspiring words, intended to lift us up, we usually surround it with a spirit of martyred resignation. When we say, "Thy will, not mine, be done" (see Luke 22:42), we may be hoping for the best but we are usually expecting the worst.

We fill our hearts with too many doubts and fears and negative thoughts. But try to imagine what the great Creator would have us do if we did his will. Can you conceive of any limits he would place upon our progress? What would God have us "arouse a desire for"? Certainly not for weakness, or failure, or sin! Certainly he does not want us to fill our minds with the temptations down. He is not pleased when we become the problem children of God. His will is for us to become beautiful and glorious like him.

But the great truths of life become known only to those who are prepared to accept them. So I would like to present for your consideration the thrilling temptations of the gospel, the temptations to live worthily of the celestial kingdom, to attain a celestial body, a celestial mind, a celestial personality, to live with a celestial family and celestial friends on a celestial earth. The gospel offers us the temptation to accept the challenge of Jesus when he said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5:48.)

"Thy will be done," means to become like God. Now try to imagine what the mind of the Creator is like. If you should lose all of your material possessions, you might have reason to be greatly depressed. But how poor you would be if you lost your faith in God!

My brothers and sisters, we have lived successfully through the long ages of a pre-existence. Now we live in mortality which is very short. And we are very near the end of the race. How unfortunate are they who relax their efforts when on the very verge of success, like the great Roman general, Cato, who committed suicide on the very eve of his triumph. If you sometimes feel that the water is a little cold and the way is a little foggy, then is the time to look up and have faith, for there is land ahead.

"All things are possible to him that believeth," and so in our daily devotions we hold ever closer the very foundation of our faith, God's formula for success, "We believe in God."

May God bless our faith, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Sterling W. Sill, Assistant to the Twelve, has just spoken to us. We shall now hear from Elder LeGrand Richards of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER LEGRAND RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I AM SURE as we come to the closing moments of this great conference our hearts are full of gratitude to the Lord for the blessings it has brought to each of us individually, and to the Church. We have had some wonderful counsel and advice and instruction given to us. The music has been delightful. The prayers from these mission presidents have thrilled us, and, altogether, I am sure that we feel in our hearts a re-dedication of our lives and our talents and all that we have to the building of the kingdom of God in the earth.

I recall fifty years ago when with the missionaries and President Grant who was then the president of the European Mission, I attended a conference in Holland that lasted all day. There were many tears shed during that day. At the close of the conference President Grant said: "Today we have feasted on the fat things of the Spirit of the Lord. Now, brethren, go out and give it away. The more you give away the more you will have left." That should be the feeling in the heart of every member who has been privileged to attend this conference. We ought to carry its spirit wherever we go—in our workshops, in our businesses, on our farms, and in all our activities in the Church, and in whatsoever we are called to do, we should carry this wonderful spirit with us into the world.

I am grateful for the presence here of these mission presidents and the great work that they are accomplishing. They are noble men. They have great responsibility. They have entrusted to them your boys and girls, the youth of Zion, who have gone forth as missionaries, and when new converts come into the Church, they have the responsibility to see that they are all put to work, that they use the gifts and the talents with which the Lord has endowed them for the building up of his kingdom, and for the honor and glory of his name, and for the blessing of his children, that there shall be no wasted manpower, just as the bishops in these wards share that great responsibility also.

While Brother Bennion and Brother Evans were speaking about joy and happiness, my thoughts went to the experiences I have enjoyed during the past year. It has been my privilege, besides mingling with the Saints in the stakes of Zion, to go to four of the missions of the Church. I toured two of them. Over in Hawaii, with President Nelson, we held a testimony meeting that lasted from seven o'clock in the morning until five o'clock at night, and we had only a fifteen minute recess. We were all there fasting, and eighty-eight of us bore our testimonies, and the Spirit of the Lord was manifested in rich measure.

Then I toured two missions and in-interviewed eighty-five missionaries individually in one and sixty-five in the other. I was in another mission where one young man said, "Bishop, why do the brethren not send someone around to teach our parents the gospel the way we are teaching it to these people here in the mission field?" I came to feel that if you wanted to find the happiest people in this world, and those who really have had their hearts touched with divine joy, you should go into the mission field. You find these young men and young women who are giving all their time to the work of the Lord, and one by one they will testify that it is the happiest time of their entire lives. I have met for hours with the missionaries in the mission field, and they would say: "When we were home, we heard the returned missionaries say that their mission was the happiest time of their lives, and we did not believe a word of it, and now we know what they were talking about." One young man said, "There isn't a corporation or a company in this world that could pay me a large enough salary to get me to leave my mission." Another young man said: "I would not take a check for a million dollars for the experience of my mission," and as I listened to such statements, I thought of the words of Alma when he said that he would that he had the voice of an angel that he might cry repentance to all the world. Surely the Lord is the best paymaster in all the world. He knows how to make his children happy when they are doing his great work.

I have said, and I repeat here, that as long as the Lord will put such faith and feelings and satisfaction and joy in the hearts of his missionaries, you just cannot stop this work from rolling on in the earth, and I thank the Lord for the great work that is being done in the missionary fields of the Church, not only in the foreign fields, but also here in the stakes of Zion.

Last year, according to reports, 18,573 people decided to cast their lot with this great Church, leaving the teachings they had been taught, because of the efforts of the missionaries in bringing to them the gospel of the Lord, Jesus Christ, and I thank the Lord for each one of them and pray that they themselves may become working units and witnesses of the great truths the Lord has established in the earth.

We have a great responsibility, those of us who are privileged to be here in Zion. You remember the words of the Prophet Jeremiah of old when he said,

Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:

And I will give you pastors according to mine heart. (Jer. 3:14-15.)

Now, when we are gathered to Zion, either here or in her stakes or missions, we have a great responsibility. I think of the words of the psalmist, who saw our day. Quoting from the fiftieth Psalm:

The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth, from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. (Psalm 50:1-2.)

Now, I ask you, how has the Lord "shined" out of Zion the perfection of beauty? He has gathered them one of a city and two of a family and taught them with pastors after his own heart, and then he sends them out again, calling to the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof, and God cannot call to the earth crying repentance to bring his children to a knowledge of the truth without instruments to do the calling. That is where our great responsibility lies, and as I have indicated, over 18,000 during the past year have heeded that call and have gone down into the waters of baptism, being born again, taking upon them the name of Christ, and as Paul said,

There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. (Gal. 3:28.)

That, we feel as we travel in the missions, as President McKay has just done, down in the islands of the South Pacific, and down in Central America where I have just been, I interviewed some of the missionaries who are converts to the Church who have never been here in our midst, and when they tell us that they had nothing to live for until the gospel found them, and now they really have something to live for, and bear witness that the time that they have been in the Church is the happiest time of all their lives, it makes you feel grateful to God that the Church has grown to such proportions that it can begin to reach out into all these foreign fields and carry to them the message of eternal truth as the Lord has revealed it.

I told those good people down in that land that if I had come to them from the States with enough money to give each of them a million dollars, it would not be worth one hundredth part as much to them as the message that I had to bring to them. That represents the importance of our message. It is what Jesus called the "pearl of great price."

He said that when a merchant man seeking goodly pearls found the "pearl of great price," he went and sold all that he had and bought it. (Matt. 13:45-46.) And when one has acquired it, it is a thing that brings joy and peace and happiness and satisfaction into one's soul, the like of which he cannot find in any other way in the world.

I have great faith in the words of the prophets. I believe, as Isaiah said, that known unto God are all of his works from the beginning, and he has permitted his prophets to speak of those things, and when you stop to analyze what prophecy really is, no mortal man of himself could catch as it were the intelligence of God and know the future events of the world and portray them to the world except by the power of the Holy Ghost.

That is what Peter meant when he said,

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts:

Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (II Peter 1:19-21.)

When you put the prophecies together and see what the Lord permitted his prophets to see, you realize that we are living in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times that all of the prophets have looked forward to, the greatest gospel dispensation the world has ever known. In the words of the Lord through the Prophet Joseph Smith, we live in "the light of the noon day sun," and you know that is the brightest period of the entire day. We live in the day when the brightest spiritual light is available to all men, and if the world knew what we have, I testify to you that there is not an honest man, or an honest woman, in all this world who really loves the Lord, and who would be willing to sacrifice friends and loved ones in order to be identified with his Church, who would not accept the gospel message as it is brought to them by the elders of this Church, because it is in very deed God's eternal truth.

Therefore, I said to the people in Central America, that if I could bring them a million dollars it would not be worth as much to them as the message we have to bear.

Some years ago, one of our great commentators is reported to have made this statement. He said he was asked what message could be broadcast to the world that would be considered of greater value than any other message that could go out over the air. He said after giving the thought consideration, he came to the conclusion that the greatest message that could be broadcast to this world would be to say that a man who had lived upon the earth and died, had returned again with a message from God. If that be true, we have the greatest message that can possibly be broadcast to the world. We not only testify that a man who lived upon the earth and died has returned with a message from God, but also that God, the Eternal Father, introduced his own Son in his resurrected body of flesh and bone, to the boy Prophet, Joseph Smith, which event we will celebrate next Sunday, it being Easter, and from him, this boy Prophet, Joseph Smith, learned that he should join none of the churches.

Now, that is a hard thing to say to most people because they think all the churches are good. And there is good in them, just as there is in the Kiwanis Club and the Rotary Club, and the

Wednesday, April 6

Fourth Day

Exchange Club, and other civic organizations, but there are no people, no organization, nor individual, who can take upon himself or themselves the power of the Holy Priesthood, the power to bind on earth and it shall be bound in heaven. That power has to come from God, the Eternal Father.

When we see the perfectness of nature and how marvelous the Lord's works are, it is hard to believe that he could be the author of all the confusion there is in the world today in spiritual matters. Some of our greatest leaders have borne their testimonies of the need of Christianity coming again as it was formerly. I would like to read a few words from Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, who you know is one of our great spiritual leaders in the United States. He said:

A religious reformation is afoot, and at heart it is the endeavor to recover for our modern life the religion of Jesus as against the vast, intricate, largely inadequate and often positively false religions about Jesus. Christianity today has largely left the religion which he preached, taught, and lived, and has substituted another kind of religion altogether. If Jesus could come back to earth now, hear the mythologies built up around him, see the creedalism, denominationalism, sacramentalism, carried on in his name, he would certainly say, "If this is Christianity, I am not a Christian."

This is not a statement from the Mormons but in substance is the same statement the Redeemer of the world made to this boy Prophet, Joseph Smith, when the Father introduced him and the Savior inquired of Joseph what he wanted to know. He told him he should join none of the churches. President McKay has referred here today to that great promise that a marvelous work and a wonder was about to come forth. That was also the statement made nearly three thousand years ago recorded by Isaiah, when he said:

Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men:

Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people even a marvellous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. (Isaiah 29:13-14.)

I wonder, in the minds of the world, when they read such promises as this, how they can sit idly by and not believe that some day the God of heaven would fulfil this promise, because as Peter said, we have a more sure word of prophecy, and here the Lord declared that he would bring forth a marvelous work and a wonder. Why should not the world open their hearts and be willing to investigate when we bring to them the announcement that the God of heaven has revealed himself, and with him, his only Begotten Son? Such a knowledge as this certainly is worth more than all the wealth of the world and is the greatest message that could possibly be broadcast to the world.

Take the other prophecies of the scripture. I think of the words of Jesus as he walked along the way and met the two disciples on their way to Emmaus, following his crucifixion, and as he listened to them you will recall he said,

O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken:

Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and enter into his glory? (Luke 24:25-26.)

Then he began to explain the scriptures to them and opened their understanding that they might understand the scriptures.

So today, if the Savior were here among us, he would say to this world in which we live,

Have I not permitted the prophets to speak unto you? Have I not given them the signs of the times in the latter days by which you should know that there was to be a new truth revealed to the earth in the day when men should teach for doctrine the commandments of men? Why should you not be praying unto the God of Israel that this great message that is promised by the prophets should come, just as Israel should have been praying for the coming of the great Redeemer of the world when he came in the Meridian of Time?

Today we are, as the prophets of old have indicated, speaking of the world generally, as they who have eyes that see not, and ears that hear not, and hearts that do not understand and comprehend the marvelous things that the Lord has done.

We have testimony here today of the fact that the Father and the Son are real personages with bodies. You remember, some of you, who read the book written by Senator Beveridge, in which he devoted a chapter to the young man and the pulpit. He told of his experience interviewing ministers and others during his vacation time, and how people wanted to believe. They wanted to believe that there is a God who is a real Personage, and then he said that one great railroad magnate said that he would give all the wealth of the United States to know that after he died he would live again with a conscious identity, knowing who he was and who other people were.

To every Latter-day Saint, through the restoration of the gospel, that becomes an obvious common truth in our Church, and yet here was a man who would have given all the wealth of the United States in order to know that one great truth that we have to teach.

I want to say a few words about the coming of Moroni, who brought the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. You just cannot believe the words of the prophets, you cannot believe the Holy Bible, without knowing that there is a companion volume of scripture to go with it. What is it worth? To some of us it has been a great inspiration in our lives.

I heard a young serviceman, who returned from the service, talking in a youth meeting not long ago. He held up the Book of Mormon and said: "This book kept me clean and brought me home clean to my loved ones. I read from it every day that I was in the service."

Some years ago a story was told about an elderly brother who was sent on a mission. He wrote letters back to President Joseph F. Smith, calling his attention to this statement and that statement in the Book of Mormon, so wonderful he thought the Presidency of the Church had never read them just because he had not read them.

I wonder how many copies of the Book of Mormon there are in our libraries that never get read?

A short time ago an article appeared in the newspaper which stated that William A. Kennedy was here from Lima, Peru, to gather money to establish a research university down in Lima, Peru, to study the early inhabitants of the Americas, particularly dealing with the Mayan and Incan civilizations. This article said that with the pledges he had, when matched by the small American countries, as they had promised, it would give them over thirty million dollars, with an assurance that within five years the amount would be increased to between sixty and seventy million dollars, and that President Hoover had agreed to serve on that board.

I have never heard what became of it, but this was the thought I had. They were willing to contribute sixty to seventy million dollars to learn something about the early inhabitants of that land, and when they have spent it all, they would not know one thousandth part as much as they could learn by reading the Book of Mormon that they could get for fifty cents, and if they did not have the fifty cents, we would give them a copy for nothing.

The Book of Mormon not only tells us the history of the people, and what they did, but it also gives unto us the words of their prophets, and not only that, it also tells us that this is a land choice above all other lands. Upon this land shall be built the New Jerusalem of the Lord our God, and they will not likely find that recorded in any relics they find down in those mounds in South and Central America, many of which I have recently seen.

I was thrilled by Brother Hunter's testimony of these records that parallel the records of the Book of Mormon. I have never seen this in print, but I heard President Callis make this statement: that after the Book of Mormon came forth the Prophet Joseph was terribly worried about what the world would say, and he said, "O Lord, what will the world say?" And the answer came back, "Fear not, I will cause the earth to testify of the truth of these things," and from that day until now, and only the Lord knows what is yet ahead, external evidences have been brought forth of the divinity of that book.

Wednesday, April 6

Fourth Day

But more than all this is the promise contained in the last chapter by Moroni, that if one will read it with a prayerful heart the Lord will manifest the truth of it unto him by the power of the Holy Ghost.

When I was a boy, I led our Sunday School in reciting the testimony of the three witnesses, and their words have rung through my heart from that day until this, when those men testified that an angel of God came down from heaven and brought and laid before their eyes the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated and testified that it was translated by the gift and by the power of God.

I give you that witness today. I wish there were time to discuss other marvelous things the Lord has given us in the restoration of the gospel. Then you would know why it is the greatest message that could be broadcast to the world and why it is worth more than all the wealth of this world.

I bear you solemn witness that I know this work is of God. I know the greatest joy that can fill the human soul and breast is the testimony of the Spirit of God, and I tell you, brothers and sisters, we ought to go out and share it with our neighbors and our friends, and may God bless every effort that is being put forth by the membership of this Church in that direction I pray, and leave you my love and blessing, in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder LeGrand Richards of the Council of the Twelve, has just concluded speaking.

There are two other members of the General Authorities from whom we should like to hear, but we told them in the Thursday meeting preceding the opening of this Conference that we would excuse them, that they might conserve their physical strength which they lost, one several years ago, and one a few months ago, in over exertion in the performance of their duties: Elder Thomas E. McKay, and Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin.

I extend to you their appreciation and gratitude for your faith and prayers and their love for the Church, for the membership, their testimony of the truth of the divinity of this work. God bless them both.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

NOW, IN CONCLUSION of this inspirational Conference, we wish to express once again our gratitude to all who have contributed to its success including those who have furnished these lovely flowers not only for the beauty of the flowers themselves, but especially for the spirit that prompted the giving. The calla lilies come from Berkeley Stake and the daffodils, from the Tacoma Stake through the courtesy of the Puyallup Daffodil Festival Committee of Tacoma.

We express appreciation to City officials for their efficient care in directing traffic during the Conference; to the reporters; to radio and television stations, for the service in our own City and State and other States named throughout the sessions—this service has been the means of permitting tens of thousands to hear the proceedings of the Conference:—to the daily papers, here in the City and in the State, we express appreciation for their cooperation and their efforts accurately to report the proceedings of this great Conference.

Once again, we express appreciation and gratitude for those groups who have furnished such inspiring music—the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir last Saturday night; the Tabernacle Choir, faithful members, capable, inspiring; the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses. You who heard them will join me in expressing appreciation of their presence, as well as for their inspiring singing; and finally, and how glorious it is to have our Conference concluded with their singing—we express appreciation to our singing Mothers. You notice the Choir seats are filled, and also the two rows extending on each side of the gallery.

I should like to acknowledge with gratitude the presence of the Spirit of the Lord. After all, that is what makes a Conference inspiring. I felt its uplifting influence last Saturday morning. It was about one hour after this unprecedented snowstorm swept over the valley. As Sister McKay and I approached the Tabernacle to fill our appointment with the Primary Association officers, we felt that there would probably be many vacant seats. It was snowing, in fact it was almost a blizzard as we entered the Tabernacle. I shall never forget the inspiration that I felt as I looked over an audience that completely filled this historic building.

That morning, two great impressions came to my mind. One, that this demonstration of the Primary Association is but illustrative of other groups in the Church, equally active, equally responsible. There came to my mind the saying in Ephesians: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers . . ." and so forth. (Eph. 4:11.) Seven organizations, including two of the Aaronic Priesthood, with 273,142 officers and teachers—teachers, guides, inspirers, of the membership of the Church, engaged in perfecting the Saints, working in the ministry, edifying the body of Christ.

When I listened to the Primary workers and heard them report several stakes that have 100% enrollment, and the officers and teachers guiding them and teaching them, I was reminded of an article, a story I read twenty years ago in one of our national magazines. It is a story of a little boy who had wandered from his home into the "Bad Lands" of North Dakota.

On Tuesday, July 18, 1933, at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, a little three-year-old lad was lost in the "Bad Lands" of North Dakota. He was bareheaded, barefooted and wore only a pair of coveralls. The "Bad Lands" are noted for their pitfalls, canyons, rattlesnake holes and as a rendezvous for wild animals.

Upon discovering that the little boy was missing, his parents began an immediate search. Later in the evening neighbors and friends were notified, an all-night search was made. Early Wednesday morning a neighbor rode sixteen miles to Walford City to give the alarm that a child was lost. Farmers, housewives, shepherds, cowboys, business and professional men, storekeepers, Boy and Girl Scouts, law officers without delay gathered on the town square at Schafer to hear Sheriff Thompson's instructions as follows:

"We are all going out to the 'Bad Lands' to find and bring back the little Cornell boy. The best way I know to do this is for all of us to form into one single line and march out there. Each man, woman, and child of us will be spaced a few feet from each other. Every hole and canyon in the way must be searched. Every brush must be examined as we go along. This line, friends and neighbors, must not be broken. Every water hole, ravine and cave must be searched thoroughly. Every square inch must be scanned by us as we go. It is the only way. I don't know how long our search will take, but Alfred Cornell is out in the 'Bad Lands' somewhere and when we turn back the little fellow will be with us. We can only hope that we shall not be too late. Now, let's get going. I have appointed some of you deputies to ride on horse back so that there will be no slip up, and there will be none if I know anything about the people of this state."

The line formed—at 6:30 Thursday evening the boy was found kneeling at a water-hole. His legs and feet were badly bruised and inflamed. His father and mother rushed to him clasping him in their arms and said, "How did you like it, lad?"

"Fine," answered the plucky little fellow and burst into tears.

When that ten-mile-line of human beings saw that the boy was found and really alive, a great cheer arose from 250 voices.

They had found that which was lost. They had answered the challenge, had overcome all obstacles and saved a life.

Two hundred seventy-three thousand, one hundred forty-two officers and teachers are assembled in the Church of Christ, going out to search for young boys and girls who are in the Bad Lands of immoral influence that surround us. Let us pray God that we shall not be too late, and we shall not be if we will honor our callings and do our duty as urged upon us through this great Conference.

I have time just to summarize the address given by King Benjamin at the conclusion of his great address as recorded in Mosiah:

"I say unto you . . ." if ye "... humble yourselves even in the depths of humility, calling on the name of the Lord daily, and standing steadfastly in the faith of that which is to come, . . .

"... ye shall always rejoice, and be filled with the love of God, and always retain a remission of your sins; and ye shall grow in the knowledge of the glory of him that created you, or in the knowledge of that which is just and true.

"And ye will not have a mind to injure one another, but to live peaceably, and to render to every man according to that which is his due.

"And ye will not suffer your children that they go hungry, or naked; neither will ye suffer that they transgress the laws of God, and fight and quarrel one with another, and serve the devil, who is the master of sin, or who is the evil spirit which hath been spoken of by our fathers, he being an enemy to all righteousness.

"But ye will teach them to walk in the ways of truth and soberness; ye will teach them to love one another, and to serve one another." (Mosiah 4:11-15.)

God bless you, officers and teachers of the Church in the Church of Jesus Christ.

May the love of our Redeemer be in each heart, and that means that that love will be expressed in serving one another, for—

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," said Christ. (Matt. 25:40.)

Oh, what love is in your heart this moment as you contemplate the greatness and goodness of our Father throughout this Conference.

May the Lord continue to bless these brethren of the General Authorities, and others who have spoken to us during this Conference. They represent the hundreds of thousands of others in the Church. God bless his work here among mankind, that the influence of love and goodwill may radiate from this center throughout the whole world, and bring glory to our Father in Heaven, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the Conference convened Friday morning, September 30, 1955 at 10 o'clock, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

The large Tabernacle auditorium and galleries were filled with people, the Assembly Hall just south of the Tabernacle was also occupied by Saints who had come from far and near, as was also Barratt Hall (60 North Main Street), provision having been made for the overflow crowds to hear and see the services of the various Conference sessions by means of television. In addition, many others assembled on the Tabernacle grounds where they listened to the Conference proceedings by means of amplifiers that had been installed for the accommodation of the listening audience on the grounds.

The choral singing for this session was furnished by the German-Speaking L.D.S. Organization Choir, Elder Heinz Rimmasch, Conductor. Frank W. Asper was at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

This is the opening session of the 126th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

I wish to make an announcement at this time of a special meeting to be held on the fourth floor of the Salt Lake Temple Sunday afternoon, October 2nd, at 4:45 o'clock—a meeting of Temple Presidencies with the General Authorities of the Church. We announce that now so that those who are not here may have an opportunity to be present.

We are pleased to announce that all the General Authorities are in attendance at this session, excepting probably Elder Ezra Taft Benson who was called to Washington to a special meeting of the Cabinet this morning. He will return sometime tomorrow and be with us at some of the sessions of the Conference.

Elder Joseph Anderson is Clerk of the Conference.

These services, and all General Sessions of the Conference, will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, over a public address system and by television.

The services this morning are also being televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5, and by arrangement through KSL over 14 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Arizona, and California. Special television cable installation will be shown in four chapels in Pocatello, Idaho. The names of these stations have already been announced to the radio audience.

We desire to express our appreciation to these various television and radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts.

To the audience seated here in the Tabernacle and the Assembly Hall and to the thousands listening in over the radio, the First Presidency and General Authorities extend a most hearty welcome, and pray that we may receive encouragement and inspiration during our attendance at this great Conference of the Church.

We acknowledge the presence of the following distinguished visitors and others who hold prominent positions in educational circles and in the State. We are not sure that we have been able to observe all who are present, but we mention the following: Senator Arthur V. Watkins; United States Representatives, Honorable William A. Dawson and Honorable H. Aldous Dixon; Secretary of State LaMont Toronto; President A. Ray Olpin of the University of Utah; Dr. William P. Miller of Weber College; President Ernest L. Wilkinson of the Brigham Young University, and probably others. If we have omitted you, you know that our eyesight is getting dim, and also be assured that you are welcome with these whom I have named.

Friday, September 30

To all we extend a hearty welcome and express satisfaction and pleasure in your presence, and especially for your cooperative spirit in these sessions.

The singing for this morning's session will be furnished by the German Speaking Church Organization Choir, with Elder Heinz Rimmasch conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin this session by the German Speaking Church Organization Choir singing, "Guide Us, O Thou Great Jehovah," conducted by Elder Rimmasch.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Marden D. Pearson, president of the Sevier Stake.

The German-Speaking L.D.S. Organization Choir sang the hymn, "Guide Us, O Thou Great Jehovah."

Elder Marden D. Pearson, President of the Sevier Stake, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was just offered by President Marden D. Pearson, president of the Sevier Stake.

The German Speaking Church Organization Choir will now sing, "Christ is Risen," conducted by Elder Heinz Rimmasch.

Singing by the Choir, "Christ Is Risen."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

BRETHREN AND SISTERS: Being keenly sensitive of the great responsibility of this moment, I crave an interest in your sympathetic attention and especially in your faith and prayers.

My feelings this morning can be expressed in one word—gratitude. I should like to quote from the Psalmist:

"O give thanks unto the Lord; call upon his name: make known his deeds among the people.

"Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him: talk ye of all his wondrous works." (Psalm 105:1-2.)

Giving thanks means in this case, I am sure, a fulness of thanks, which is the outward expression of a grateful feeling. Gratitude is the feeling itself. That is in the heart. Thankfulness is measured by the number of words; gratitude is measured by the nature of our actions. Thankfulness is the beginning of gratitude; gratitude the completion of thankfulness. "Gratitude is the heart's recognition of kindness that the lips cannot repay."

I feel grateful and happy this morning for so many evidences of the goodness of the Lord that I wish I could strike a note of optimism that would reverberate to the uttermost parts of the Church. In the words of Frank L. Stanton:

"This world o' God's is brighter
Than we ever dream or know;
Its burdens growin' lighter—
An' it's Love that makes 'em so!
An' I'm thankful that I'm livin'
Where Love's blessedness I see,
'Neath a Heaven that's forgivin'
Where the bells ring 'Home' to me!"

I know that since our conference last April, many of us have had difficulties, disappointments, and failures where we wanted so much to succeed; wounded feelings from barbed tongues; sickness; some of us have passed through the experience of death of loved ones; but these are all incidents in life which, when not understood, may harrow our feelings until we are crushed.

I am aware, too, that there have been jealousies, petty intrigues, meannesses, misunderstandings on occasions, and that men and women, magnifying these weaknesses of human nature, have made themselves miserable and perhaps scattered gloom instead of sunshine into the hearts of their associates.

But notwithstanding these disagreeable, discouraging facts, I am sure that we have cause this morning to rise above petty things and, as the Psalmist says, make known among the people the Lord's deeds, which are always good and beautiful. Paraphrasing a familiar song, let us, "Count our many blessings; name them one by one, and it will surprise us what the Lord has done."

There are so many things for which we should be thankful, time will not permit our even naming them, but I should like to call your attention at least to four or five:

First: loyalty and devotion of the presiding priesthood of the Church.

Second: the vitality and growth of the Church.

Third: the success of the choir on its recent tour in Europe.

Fourth: the dedication of the temple.

Fifth: the happiness we may secure in obedience to the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

I haven't words to express my gratitude for the support and loyalty of President Richards and President Clark and the work they have carried on at the office and throughout the Church. I make this public expression of my appreciation and gratitude, which applies also to the Council of the Twelve, the Assistants, the Seventy, the Bishopric, and the Patriarch, and to all those who preside in stakes and wards and quorums and organizations, in the presidencies of missions throughout the world. Nobody who has not come in contact with these men and women can realize their loyalty, their energy, and devotion. I wish to express, too, appreciation for the co-operation of the civic authorities in our state and in nations, in the South Pacific, in Europe, and wherever the missions of the Church are operating. I know these are mere words, but they express a true feeling of gratitude. God bless them wherever they are.

Activity and Growth of the Church

Now as to the activity and growth of the Church, that is shown in many ways:

First, in the increase in membership. You will be pleased to know that since we met last October, over 73,500 people have joined the Church; two new missions have been organized—the South Australian Mission, attended by Elder Marion G. Romney, who was accompanied by Sister Romney; and the Southern Far East Mission (the Japanese Mission changed to the Northern Far East Mission) where President Joseph Fielding Smith officiated, accompanied by Sister Smith, and by Brother Herald Grant Heaton, who is president of the Southern Far East Mission—a great opportunity—the ground laid for that division by Elder Harold B. Lee and Sister Lee a few months ago.

Other missions are demanding similar attention.

The activity and vitality of the Church are shown also in the increase in tithing. Last year the tithing was the largest we have ever had, and this year up to September, it is 10.7 percent higher than last. This is a very significant index to the service, loyalty, and spirituality of the members of the Church. We are grateful to you for your devotion. You have shown in increased attendance at sacrament meetings that devotion. I sincerely hope that I may report an improvement in these sacrament meetings in order and reverence.

As members of the Church in our worshiping assemblies, we should improve I think, in this regard. Presiding authorities in stake, ward, and quorum meetings, and especially teachers in classes, should make special effort to maintain better order and more reverence during hours of worship and of study. Less talking behind the pulpit will have a salutary effect upon those who face it. By example and precept children should be impressed with the inappropriateness of confusion and disorder in a worshiping congregation. They should be impressed in childhood, and have it emphasized in youth, that it is disrespectful to talk or even to whisper during a sermon, and that it is the height of rudeness to leave a worshiping assembly before dismissal.

Courtesy, respect, deference, and kind consideration are all pleasing attributes that may be shown on all occasions, and wherever manifested contribute to the pleasure and sweetness of human relations.

If there were more reverence in human hearts, there would be less room for sin and sorrow and more increased capacity for joy and gladness. To make more cherished, more adaptable, more attractive, this gem among brilliant virtues is a project worthy of the most united and prayerful efforts of every officer, every parent, and every member of the Church.

Successful Tour of the Tabernacle Choir

Another reason for gratitude and joy this morning is the recent successful tour of the choir in Europe.

The reception given them at Greenock, Scotland, when the Provost, Mr. John Porter, and the Bagpipe Band of that city, gathered on the wharf, took a tug out even to the ship, and returned with the second group of singers, was almost a royal welcome. I cannot refrain from mentioning that, because fifty-eight years before, I stood on the same wharf and saw emigrants, returning missionaries take the tugboat out to the ocean liner. I contrasted our feelings and the attitude of the people fifty-eight years ago with this reception on that morning.

Then in the afternoon, it was repeated by the Lord Provost of Glasgow and his Lady, Lord and Lady Andrew Hood. As he stated, in his extemporaneous speech of welcome—as he laid aside his prepared speech—this is probably the first time an organized group of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has been officially received in Scotland. That was Friday, August 19, 1955.

I shall let others who were constantly with the choir report their achievements. Sister McKay and our party had the opportunity to attend only four concerts—the one held in Kelvin Hall, Glasgow; in Royal Albert Hall, London; the Fest Hall in Bern, Switzerland; and in Tonhalle in Zurich, Switzerland.

The service rendered by the Tabernacle Choir on their tour brought credit to our state, and the Church, and to our country as perhaps no other organization has been able to do.

To transport 379 members of a singing group with their escorts, making a company of approximately 600, was a herculean task. The difficulties of transportation and hotel accommodations had really just begun when they landed at Greenock. But their tour, as you all know, proved to be successful beyond our fondest hopes. At every concert they were given an ovation.

Elder Richard L. Evans—especially, who gave the spoken word, Elder Lester F. Hewlett, president of the choir, the directors, the organists, and every member of the choir deserve the highest praise. The dignified attitude of the group as a whole, their comely deportment, their evident sincerity of purpose, their responsiveness, won the audience even before they started to sing.

Mr. Edmund J. Pendleton, music critic of the New York Herald Tribune of Paris, France, wrote as follows: (I will read this one because I think it has not been published.)

"The simplicity of attitude and the evident sincerity on the part of every participant from the last chorister to the conductor, J. Spencer Cornwall, is moving to behold. The wealth and health of the choir's sonority, and its freely consented discipline, achieved results difficult to duplicate without a similar faith in a job to be done. The whole program was sung by heart, in the most literal sense.

"The technical side of the performance—balance, tone quality, attack, shading, diction—was thoroughly satisfactory, and in certain strong moments thrilling."

It gives me great pleasure, therefore, to make public acknowledgment and express the thankfulness of a grateful heart to Elder W. Jack Thomas and his faithful wife, Emma, who first suggested a European tour and worked so diligently and enthusiastically in soliciting funds, and who labored so faithfully for months in looking after the transportation and physical comforts of the members of the choir; also to the advisory committee—Elders Mark E. Petersen, Adam S. Bennion, LeGrand Richards, who proved themselves masters of details, the application of which contributed much to the success of the tour.

To President Paul C. Child, who with Mr. Charles D. DeKock, manager of the Foreign Escorted Tours Department, New York City, and Mr. Robert H. Smith, also representing the Foreign Escorted Tours Department of New York, had complete charge of all the transportation problems as soon as the choir landed at Greenock, Scotland, until the final concert held in the Palais de Chaillot Theater, Saturday night, September 17, we wish to express deep appreciation.

These men, with Elder Richard L. Evans, worked night and day to make the trip successful. In London, for example, when the tour managers were selling round-trip tickets to the groundbreaking ceremonies in Newchapel near London, at a cost of two dollars each, Mr. DeKock worried all night about it and the next morning said to Brother Child: "This is a very important event, and many people are coming from all over Great Britain and various other countries to attend; it would be a shame if members of the choir were not present." (That was not scheduled, you see, originally.) "I am going to furnish the transportation free of charge to everyone who wishes to attend those services."

After he heard the choir concert in Manchester, England, the same gentleman said: "Paul, I took this job as an objective thing; I want you to know from this hour on it is subjective. I have never been so lifted up in all my life! I am going to give everything I have to the success of this tour."

Mr. Robert R. Mullen who handled the over-all publicity of the choir tour and worked in conjunction with the J. Walter Thompson Company in Europe, told Elder Mark E. Petersen that his company was so much in sympathy with the over-all purpose of the choir tour that they did all of their work at cost, without charging any agency commission such as is usually the case.

To all individuals and business firms who contributed their money towards paying the expenses of this eventful tour, we now publicly express our gratitude. I have no hesitancy in saying that from the standpoint of good will, in fostering better understanding between our Church, our state, our country, and the European nations visited, money has never been spent more profitably.

Of course, there were difficulties and inconveniences, even tragedies, but these are incident to any great undertaking, and especially one of such herculean proportions as transporting six hundred people over Europe in thirty days.

To the doctors who looked after the health of the choir members and to all others who assisted in any way in making this tour successful, we now express our thanks and deep appreciation.

Dedication of the Swiss Temple

Another cause for rejoicing this morning (and I tell you it is a most significant one as an event in the history of the Church) is the dedication of the first temple on European soil, Sunday, September 11, 1955, with two sessions that day, and two each succeeding day until Thursday, September 15. The Tabernacle Choir was present and furnished the music, with Sister Ewan Harbrecht as soloist. The choir and Sister Harbrecht never sang more feelingly than they did at both the morning and afternoon sessions of the first day of the dedication. I wish all members of the Church might have felt the intensity of the spiritual services on that memorable occasion.

When the time came to welcome the hundreds who crowded the rooms at the first session, it seemed proper to express also a welcome to an unseen, but seemingly real audience, among whom were possibly former presidents and apostles of the Church, probably headed by the Prophet Joseph Smith, to whom was revealed the essential ordinances of baptism for those who died without having heard the gospel; also his nephew, President Joseph F. Smith, who prophesied forty-nine years ago in the city of Bern that "temples would be built in divers countries of the world." Among them, too, I thought surely might be numbered Elder Stayner Richards who was president of the British Mission at the time those two temple sites in Europe were chosen. With these distinguished leaders we thought, too, there might have been departed loved ones whom "we could not see, but whose presence we felt." At any rate, we all agreed that the veil between those who participated in those exercises and loved ones who had gone before seemed very thin.

Again, we take opportunity to express publicly appreciation to the architects, contractors, technicians, and workers who labored long and faithfully to have the temple completed for dedication on that day. Two nights before that service, workmen labored all night long and expressed themselves as doing it willingly.

Friday, September 30

First Day

It had been announced that regular ordinance work would not commence until Monday morning, September 18, but through the indefatigable efforts of Elder Gordon B. Hinckley, assisted by Elder Paul Evans and others, it was reported that a company might be accommodated on the morning of the 16th following the final dedicatory service Thursday night.

Accordingly, two sessions were scheduled for German-speaking people—one at 7 o'clock in the morning, and the other at 1 p.m. But members from the French Mission said, "the choir will be in Paris Saturday night, and if, while we are present here, we could go through the temple and get home for that, we should appreciate it." Accordingly, we gave them 5:00 p.m. Friday, as their opportunity to go through the temple.

Then came President Eben R. T. Blomquist, representing the Swedish people, who said, "if we could come at 9:00 o'clock at night, we would be willing to wait over so that we could return Saturday in accordance with our schedule." So instead of two sessions, we granted four, resulting in continual sessions from seven o'clock Friday morning until seven o'clock Saturday night.

Members from the Netherlands Mission had been invited to come Saturday morning at 7:30. They were there, and the workers who had worked all night, who were necessary to guide the workers from Holland, continued on duty.

The faithful members endured the inconveniences gladly because the privilege of going through the temple at that time was a great accommodation to them.

We here express appreciation to President William F. Perschon, President Samuel E. Bringham, Elder Edward O. Anderson, Elder Gordon B. Hinckley, Elder Paul Evans, and all the missionaries and workers who rendered such unselfish service to the fortunate members of the Church who were privileged to go through the first temple in Europe.

The Gospel Plan the Greatest of All Blessings

Truly, it is fitting to give thanks to the Lord and to talk of all his wondrous work; and in doing so, we must include the greatest of all of his blessings—the sending of his Only Begotten Son to give to all our Father's children redemption, and to those who will listen and obey the gospel, salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of our Father. Obedience to the principles of the gospel brings happiness, and happiness is what all men seek. Indeed, the Prophet Joseph Smith said that "Happiness is the object and design of our existence, and will be the end thereof"—and this is important—"if we pursue the path that leads to it." As an end in itself, happiness is never found; it comes incidentally. Note: "It will be the end thereof if we follow the path that leads to it, and this path is virtue, uprightness, faithfulness, holiness, and keeping all the commandments of God." (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, pp. 255-256.) "Happiness consists not of having, but of being—not of possessing, but of enjoying. It is a warm glow of the heart at peace with itself. A martyr at the stake may have happiness that a king on his throne might envy. Man is the creator of his own happiness. It is the aroma of life lived in harmony with high ideals. For what a man has he may be dependent upon others; what he is rests with him alone. What he obtains in life is but acquisition; what he attains is true growth."

William George Jordan continues: "The basis of happiness is the love of something outside itself. Search every instance of happiness in the world, and you will find, when all the incidental features are eliminated, there is always the constant, unchangeable element of love—love of parent for child; love of man and woman for each other (husband and wife); love of humanity in some form, or a great life work into which the individual throws all his energies.

"Happiness is the voice of optimism, of faith, of simple, steadfast love," interest in some great cause, that is worthy of a life's work. My fellow workers: What is the "Great cause worthy of our life's work?" The restored Church of Jesus Christ! Is there anything greater in all the world?

My heart rejoices that we have the privilege of working together to establish through that Church the kingdom of God on earth.

May our great life's work be the promulgation of the restored gospel, that God's purposes may be consummated for the peace and happiness of mankind, I humbly pray this morning, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Elder Richard L. Evans will be our next speaker. He will be followed by Elder Bruce R. McConkie.

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Y BELOVED brethren and sisters:

I should like to echo from the depths of my heart this morning, that gratitude of which President McKay has so beautifully and eloquently spoken; gratitude to my Father in heaven for so much beyond my ability to mention, for the onward march of his Church and kingdom, for his goodness in the lives of all of us.

At this time I should like to express gratitude for Sister Evans and me for the privilege we have had of being witnesses of some of those glorious and significant events of which President McKay has spoken; and gratitude for the leadership of President McKay and his Counselors, and for the association of these, my brethren, and you, my brethren and sisters.

We watched the President under a wide variety of conditions in a number of countries of Europe, in several of the great cities of the continent and of Great Britain, exchanging greetings with public officials, meeting in press conferences, attending the concerts, and participating in public receptions. He was seemingly indefatigable, always gracious, always an effective and wonderful representative of this Church and people; not sparing himself, traveling many hours and many miles sometimes to attend one of the choir concerts under stormy and difficult conditions, getting back to his hotel in the very early hours of the morning.

I should like to echo his gratitude for the success of this tour.

I think a public confession here would not be inappropriate: Some of us, many of us, maybe most of us, had great apprehension and some reservations concerning the choir's tour. I must confess humbly, that some of us might have postponed it, and perhaps would have looked again at the commitment to do it. I must confess that as the two trains pulled us out of Salt Lake City on the evening of August 10, I felt, if not like a lamb going to the slaughter, at least like one that was going to be shorn. But the President of the Church had committed us to it, and so we went. (I should hesitate to say this publicly, but when he sets a deadline, the seemingly impossible happens, as witness the dedication of the Swiss Temple. When you get a mixture of the quiet, purposeful stubbornness of the Scots and the Welsh, along with the courage and conviction of a prophetic calling, you have a combination which, once having been committed to a course or a great cause, is something to be reckoned with!)

Blessedly and providentially, by the combined services of a great number of able and devoted people, many of whom the President has mentioned, and by the hand of Providence, we had a great venture in understanding, as we so characterized it before our European audiences.

I am glad that the President paid tribute to all of those to whom he paid tribute and appreciation this morning. There are many others, who could and should be mentioned, and perhaps that can be done at another time and place.

Now, to some of the highlights, briefly: The President has mentioned the reception at Greenock, Scotland, by the Provost of the city and the Bagpipe Corps, and the reception of the entire choir by the Lord Provost of Glasgow and the great audience at

First Day

Glasgow's Kelvin Hall the following evening. Then we went to Manchester and to Cardiff, where the Stars and Stripes were raised over Cardiff Castle by the gracious Lord Mayor of that great city in honor of the Tabernacle Choir and its sponsoring institution, and of the country from which it came—not beneath the British flag, or any other flag, but waving there alone as we came into the city, the Stars and Stripes over Cardiff Castle, with the Lord Mayor addressing us as brothers and sisters, and giving every evidence of his feelings of sincerity in the terms in which he addressed us.

There are many other unforgettable experiences. Berlin is one of them. We presented an extra concert in the afternoon for those who came, principally from the Eastern Zone, who would neither be able to afford, nor, for the most part would be able to be present in the evening hours because of distances traveled and restrictions encountered. To see that audience of those from the areas which have not known some of the great privileges and blessings that we have known, to feel their spirit, to feel them wanting to be demonstrative, wanting to overflow in appreciation, and seemingly not knowing quite how to, and then melting and overflowing—it was an unforgettable experience. The audience of the evening was one quite in contrast with the refugee audience and those from eastern areas who had come in the afternoon.

The President has mentioned the temple dedication and the concerts in Switzerland, where we sang in Bern and Zurich; those in Copenhagen (an extra one being presented there by our male chorus in Tivoli Gardens, in response to public demand); the great audience in the Royal Albert Hall in London, a place of great tradition, of great prestige, sometimes of great reserve—an overflow audience there in that great hall of some seven to eight thousand people, melting, taking us into their hearts and we taking them into ours. It was a wonderful and satisfying and unforgettable experience.

Then in Paris, the final concert (not forgetting those in Amsterdam and Scheveningen in the Netherlands and in Wiesbaden, Germany, which were equally significant) where the city council and the ranking officers of the city of Paris presented medals to the principals of the choir and scrolls of commendation, not only to individuals, but also to some of us as representatives of the Church, they having also passed a special appropriation for refreshments for the entire group of six hundred in the magnificent city palace where royalty has been entertained for generations. There was no honor that we knew of that the city of Paris could do for the Tabernacle Choir and the Church and the country from which they came that they did not do and extend to us.

Everywhere public officials of the countries in which we found ourselves, as well as our own diplomatic officers, and the press, and the public, were as gracious and warm and wonderful as one could ask from his own kin and countrymen. Scores—hundreds—of pictures and fair and favorable stories appeared throughout Europe in the public press; and we were on the air in many places. It seemed that virtually no doors that we had time to open were closed to us—and no hearts either, or so it seemed.

Thank God for all his blessings and mercies and for far-reaching consequences beyond our ability to estimate or to foresee.

I think the Berlin Telegraf summed it up in a sentence when it said in its edition immediately after the Berlin concert, "This was not only music, but the building of a human bridge." This we also felt is what it was.

Now as to two or three of the side-lights: One was the language barrier. What happened at the Tower of Babel never should have happened, but by the perverseness of men it did, and by the dispersion of men it has continued. We wrestled with it all the way, but not with so much difficulty as we might have supposed. In all places to which we went a large percentage of our audiences were bilingual and understood us without translators. We used interpreters, but in many places the reaction of the audience to the English was more immediate than the reaction to the translations which followed.

We found no insurmountable barrier of language or of geography to understanding among men. We found nothing that could prevent sincere and honest people from taking one another to the hearts of each other, in peace, in honor, and in understanding.

We found nothing to cause us to come to any conclusion except that all men are children of the Lord God, and that all are precious in his sight. We found no people that we could not love. We found no people for whom we did not come away with affection in our souls and in our hearts. We found no people for whom we did not feel a genuine, deep, and grateful friendship. Thank God for this, also—for not letting the barriers of language or of boundaries or of geography keep us from a satisfying and glorious understanding.

There were some other sidelights. We had about two-thirds of the passenger list on the SS Saxonia, on which we sailed from Montreal to Europe—some six hundred out of a passenger list of some nine hundred. I think perhaps the most frustrated man on the SS Saxonia on this trip was the bartender! (I think perhaps the next most frustrated man aboard was the steward who operated the bingo game!)

There were many incidents of humor, some of illness and difficulty, but despite fatigue, despite difficult and sometimes discouraging conditions and a close, demanding schedule, the choir rose magnificently on every occasion and did a marvelous and wonderful service.

I am grateful this morning in following the theme of gratitude, for the courage and conviction of President McKay in committing us to the tour, despite our fears and apprehensions. I am grateful for the favorable outcome, which is beyond our ability to estimate.

If I may be pardoned another thought or two of personal gratitude: I am grateful that my gracious wife was with us. I was proud of her performance at press conferences and public receptions and on all other occasions (as I was of Sister McKay also, and those who were with her and the President). I am grateful to have our eldest son serving among the missionaries of Europe (hundreds of whom we have met), serving in my own field of labor at precisely the age, even to the month, at which I entered the same field, some twenty-nine years ago. I am grateful for the work of all the missionaries, and the mission presidents, and all the devoted people, and for the onward move and the great and glorious achievements and progress and opportunities that are ours.

We come back not much given to boasting. We are aware of the art and culture of Europe, of its great cathedrals, of its great contributions, its great peoples, its great history, its great accomplishments, and are not so much disposed to boast of ourselves or of any physical attainments. I am not sure that we have the greatest of many things here. But of this I am sure, and of this I bear you witness this day: that we have the greatest message for mankind, the gospel of Jesus Christ restored in its fulness, and the greatest opportunity to convey it to others that any people ever had, and the greatest responsibility upon us to do it.

God help us to do it and to meet the greatness of this responsibility.

I should like to close with a few words from the closing sentences of King Benjamin's great sermon to his people, from the Book of Mormon:

My friends and my brethren, my kindred and my people, . . .

if ye have come to a knowledge of the goodness of God, and his matchless power, and his wisdom, and his patience, and his long-suffering towards the children of men; and also, the atonement which has been prepared from the foundation of the world, that thereby salvation might come to him that should put his trust in the Lord, and should be diligent in keeping his commandments, and continue in the faith even unto the end of his life, . . .

this is the means whereby salvation cometh. And there is none other salvation save this which hath been spoken of; neither are there any conditions whereby man can be saved except the conditions which I have told you.

Believe in God; believe that he is, and that he created all things, both in heaven and in earth; believe that he has all wisdom, and all power, both in heaven and in earth; believe that man doth not comprehend all the things which the Lord can comprehend.

And again, believe that ye must repent of your sins and forsake them, and humble

Friday, September 30

First Day

yourselves before God; and ask in sincerity of heart that he would forgive you; and now, if you believe all these things see that ye do them.

* * * * *

And behold, I say unto you that if ye do this ye shall always rejoice, and be filled with the love of God, and always retain a remission of your sins; and ye shall grow in the knowledge of the glory of him that created you, or in the knowledge of that which is just and true. (Mos. 4:4, 6, 8-10, 12.)

God help us to have the courage and the wisdom to be what we should be, to live as we should live, to do what we should do, and to arise to the greatest message to mankind and to the greatest opportunity and responsibility that is ours, to deliver it, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve has just spoken to us. Elder Bruce R. McConkie of the First Council of Seventy will be our next speaker. Following Elder McConkie the Choir and Congregation will join in singing, "Come, Come, Ye Saints."

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Y HEART WAS moved today, as I am sure all of your hearts were, as we heard President McKay tell of the achievements and results of the Tabernacle

Choir trip and then bear witness of his feelings and sentiments relative to the dedication of the new temple in Switzerland.

It appears from what is going on relative to this temple and others that are in course of construction and are contemplated, that you and I are living in an age when the brethren feel that the great blessings of the temple should be made readily available to people in all nations and in all places where congregations of the Saints are of sufficient numbers to warrant such.

I think if I might have the Spirit for a few moments, that I would like to say something to you as to why the Latter-day Saints build temples. Temples are not just houses of worship; they are not meetinghouses or tabernacles; they are not something designed where we can assemble together and be fed the bread of life and taught our obligations and responsibilities. But temples, as we understand, build, and dedicate them, are sacred sanctuaries, set apart from the world, houses prepared and given to the Lord in which can be performed the ordinances, and in which can be taught the principles, whereby you and I can have opportunity to enter into an eternal fulness in the kingdom of our Father.

When we come out of the world and join the Church, when we become members of this kingdom, we get on a path which is named the "strait and narrow path." Membership in the Church starts us out toward a goal which is called eternal life. Baptism is not an end in itself; it is the beginning of the process of working out our salvation with fear and trembling before the Lord.

After we have joined the Church and have come into the kingdom, and have been given the right to the constant companionship of the Holy Ghost, then if we press forward and keep the commandments of God, at long-last and eventually, we are entitled to an inheritance in his eternal world where the fulness of his glory is found.

As we understand the revelations, when we accept Christ and join the Church, we have power given us to become the sons of God. We are not his sons and daughters by Church membership alone, but we have the ability and the capacity and the power to attain unto that status after we accept the Lord with all our hearts. (See D & C 39:1-6.)

Now the ordinances that are performed in the temples are the ordinances of exaltation; they open the door to us to an inheritance of sonship; they open the door to us so that we may become sons and daughters, members of the household of God in eternity. If we go to the temples with an honest heart and a contrite spirit, having prepared ourselves by personal righteousness and worthiness and proper living, then in those houses we receive the ordinances and the instructions which enable us, if we thereafter continue faithful, to receive eventually the fullness of the Father.

The temple ordinances open the door to gaining all power and all wisdom and all knowledge. Temple ordinances open up the way to membership in the Church of the Firstborn. They open the door to becoming kings and priests and inheriting all things.

Now the mere fact that we receive the ordinances in no sense guarantees that we will receive these rewards. The fact that we are sealed in the temple for time and eternity to our wives and our children does not guarantee that in the end we shall obtain those blessings.

In my judgment there is no more important single act that any Latter-day Saint ever does in this world than to marry the right person in the right place by the right authority. The right person is someone for whom the natural and wholesome and normal affection that should exist does exist. It is the person who is living so that he or she can go to the temple of God and make the covenants that we there make. The right place is the temple, and the right authority is the sealing power which Elijah restored.

All of these things, these exaltations and honors and glories, are offered to us and all the world in and through the ordinances that are performed in these sacred sanctuaries which are set apart from the world. After we have partaken of these ordinances, then it is incumbent upon us that we live in harmony with the principles of eternal truth and walk uprightly before the Lord. If we keep the covenants that we have made in these holy places, then we will have reward and honor in eternity, to say nothing of that peace and happiness in this life which is beyond any comprehension or understanding that anyone of the world could have.

It appeals to me that we ought to think, all of us as individuals, since the brethren are doing all the things they are relative to temple building, that this is an age and a time and an hour when all of us ought to set our houses in order and do the things that I am sure we already know we should, in order to become inheritors of these eternal blessings. The blessings come on conditions of personal righteousness, on conditions of overcoming, as the Lord said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." (Rev. 3:21.) In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Wherever "Come, Come, Ye Saints" was sung in Europe, the audience demanded an encore. It was remarkable.

Let us all join with the Choir in singing that favorite hymn, conducted now by Elder Heinz Rimmasch.

Singing by the Choir and congregation, "Come, Come, Ye Saints."

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Y BROTHERS AND SISTERS: I face you humbly this morning. A feature of a general conference is the diversity of messages treated by members of the General Authorities. I hesitate to break the theme of the previous speakers, but I firmly believe variety does have some value.

I have often thought that I should like to say a few words about the Church welfare program in a general conference of the Church. I believe in

Friday, September 30

First Day

and accept the program with all my heart and soul. Perhaps I cannot add anything new, but a re-emphasis of some basic principles with a few personal thoughts and feelings may more fully encourage complete acceptance and support of this inspired plan.

It is distinctly a new approach to providing social care. The plan is not a dole. The edict, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," (Gen. 3:19) applies today as anciently. Also in this dispensation the Lord declared, "... he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer." (D & C 42:42.) Each able person is expected to work for what he receives, which in part is the genius and a basic principle of the plan; however, the incapacitated and aged, unable to work, whose relatives cannot or do not provide for them, are taken care of according to their wants and needs as long as these needs are just.

Welfare workers should make those helped feel good in receiving welfare assistance. Some claim humiliation in accepting help from the Church, yet are not embarrassed by receiving a government dole. The best antidote against humiliation is to furnish work opportunities for those receiving benefits in the program to give them the right feeling of having earned and therefore entitled to welfare assistance.

We are setting a pattern in welfare work that the world is watching. Being inspired of God, it must work successfully, but the success of it lies in leadership and people. It is leadership's point of view and attitudes which must be right. The stake presidents and bishops of the Church who stand out as acknowledged and respected leaders are those who, according to their divine appointment, have taken seriously the welfare program and in love and understanding have made it work advantageously in the lives of their people. Training Church membership in welfare activities has proved an important facility in getting them to do other things important to spiritual growth and testimony.

Welfare is still, however, a program of education. Leadership must see to it that information concerning the plan, together with the counsel and instruction from the presiding brethren, reaches the rank and file of Church members for better understanding. Improved understanding wipes out prejudice and resentment to the plan. Our people are entitled to be properly informed. The better informed they are, the more ready the acceptance and the better work they will do. We cannot overlook the importance of proper attitudes toward the plan on the part of the membership of the Church. All must be encouraged to accept and come the Church way completely or the program will fall short in its goals. It does not replace tithing but is an added step supplementing that divine law in the care of the needy of the Church.

Ofttimes the greatest antagonisms and the worst enemies to the program are found within our own ranks. I will always remember and thank Elder Marion G. Romney for the important lesson he taught me many years ago in a special stake and ward welfare meeting held in Phoenix, Arizona, while the program was still quite young. I informed him our company was paying heavy taxes, and I wanted to see our people obtain their proportionate share of public assistance. At that time I felt keenly the rightness of this position. He said to me, "That may be good for the world, but it isn't the Lord's plan. The welfare program is the Lord's way of providing for his own." He then explained its purpose and operation in more detail. No doubt other of the welfare brethren or General Authorities had given the same counsel on previous visits, but somehow it did not register nor take root in my mind. On that occasion the Holy Ghost bore witness to my spirit of the truth of that which Elder Romney testified. Fortified with this witness, from that time forward I have strongly advocated and supported this worthy program from the Lord. It is right in principle and true in its concepts, regardless of one's approach to the plan. A little prayerful meditation in an honest and sincere manner will bring true conviction into the hearts of the uncertain and skeptical.

The welfare program in operation since 1936 is a continuing plan for the people of the Church until a more perfect and higher plan is revealed. When we demonstrate our faith, worthiness, willingness, and unity to live fully the principles of the welfare plan, it will lead and prepare us for the higher law of the celestial kingdom. The Lord has affirmed in this dispensation:

And Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom; otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself. (Ibid., 105:5.)

I would dislike to see any logical facet or service that comes within the concepts and functions of the welfare plan sacrificed in exchange for what I would term insecure man-made social formulas for collective or personal benefits. I should not like to see any proposed substitute for the plan unless it is better, and the only way it could be better, in my estimation, is for God to reveal it.

We may not yet see or understand the immediate need of the welfare program, but as surely as God lives and as time goes on, the inspiration of it will prove a blessing to the people of the Church. Sometimes I think people not of the Church who take time to learn about the program see the divine nature and the rich blessings of it more fully than some of our own who have not gone to that trouble. I am confident that knowledge of the welfare program has brought much good will and friendliness to the Church. Thus it has opened many doors to our missionaries for the teaching of the restored gospel of our Lord. It has become, then, a powerful missionary agency, not for the help it offers but for the faith the plan promotes.

Listen to the written comments of a few visitors representing a cross section of many faiths who have visited Welfare Square to learn about the program and have the privilege of seeing it in action:

"A very good piece of work. Every church should have it."

"The Mormons are to be admired for their great work which sets an example for others."

"Wonderful program! If only there were more, it would be a better world."

"This has been a real opportunity to see the way the entire world problem could be solved."

"Am surprised. Think your program is almost beyond conception. Wish you all success."

"I've found this a truly inspiring experience. The sincerest principles I have ever found. A program and religion one should well be proud of."

"I do not question that this program is divinely inspired."

"I think your work is wonderful, and Christ must have a hand in all of it."

"As anyone can see, God has his eyes on this organization. May the people continue to live this way. It is uplifting to anyone's morale to see that people can still work together."

"I consider this a God-given project."

"Truly wonderful what God can do with his people who will obey."

"I believe it's God's plan of salvation. God bless you."

"This is a wonderful work! The Mormons have shown me what it means to have God with them."

"This work is truly God-inspired, and our prayers will be with you in the continuation of such a good work."

"The whole program is most amazing, and I have seen with my own eyes Jesus Christ at work in the hearts of people."

"The philosophy back of your welfare program is sound. However, [and here is some real advice] I feel that it must take constant indoctrination to keep up the enthusiasm of employed people to continue working here. Off-hand I would welcome the opportunity to work a day in the cannery. The women appear to be having fun."

About a year and a half ago I received an answer to a letter of condolence I had written to a school friend of mine, not a member of the Church, who in loving devotion had taken care of her parents throughout life. Her aged father had just passed away. The letter in part read, "Old age is tragic in many respects. I am so thankful I could take care of my parents. The attitude of your Church for the aged is wonderful. Never fail to stress family obligations to the aged and helpless. May God bless your Church and you in your work."

Such favorable expressions from our friends should give us greater appreciation for the welfare plan. Also, these expressions emphasizing the God-given values and encouragement for continued functioning are challenges for us to make the plan succeed, which it cannot do unless we accept it fully and really work at it enthusiastically.

If some people of the Church are waiting for adverse circumstances to affect them personally before supporting the program, they should remember that there are many faithful souls who now require assistance, and some of them may be their own immediate relatives. If the true concepts of this plan are operating in families, the families will be drawn closer together through helping the ones in distress out of financial problems and temporal difficulties. In the eyes of God this work is of a spiritual nature; therefore I have more faith and assurance in the stability and the effectiveness of the welfare plan to care for the needy of the Church under all conditions and circumstances, if operated fully by faithful and devoted members of the Church, than I do in any plan of assistance devised by man, regardless of how good those plans may be or how well they may be administered. With the heavy costs of operating government at all levels and the interest and principle payments on the national debt, any downward changes in our present economic structure would make insecure cash assistance payments to qualified recipients. Also, high inflationary conditions or excessive war needs of machinery, goods, and services would render impossible to low income groups life's necessities. These conditions, as a Church, we must guard against, for God will hold us responsible for failure to care for his people.

Love and brotherly kindness in administering help are basic concepts of the Church welfare plan. We own and operate diversified production projects and distribution centers manned by those receiving help in the program or by voluntary labor. Dollar costs for the most part have been eliminated. We are not dependent on economic factors nor the amount of cash income. We produce and store ahead on a recommended two year basis in homes and in stake, region, and Church storehouses. At the present time we are producing seventy percent of all welfare requirements, and thirty percent is acquired from commercial sources. When all stakes have acquired projects and meet fully budget assignments, it is anticipated welfare can produce ninety-two percent of all commodities used, and only eight percent will come from commercial channels. During 1954, 56,566 persons were assisted through the welfare plan of the Church, which represents a marvelous and invaluable service.

As I have analyzed the causes for increased faith, activities, devotion, and tithing throughout the Church, I am constrained in all honesty to give much credit to the functions, activities, and work connected with welfare. The organizational plan that makes possible immediate contact with bishops, presidencies of priesthood quorums, and Relief Societies for help and assistance from its members on any given welfare project or activity, brings into service many people, the inactive with the active, whose opportunity of working together develops moral and spiritual strength that expresses itself in the improved record of ward and stake accomplishments.

I call your attention to the great service the Church through its welfare program rendered to the destitute Saints in Europe following World War II. Conditions were tragic; the outlook of the people hopeless. Immediate help was required. The storehouses of the Church were well-stocked. Here was a test to meet a real crisis. How well that crisis was met is now history, but the performance was creditably done, thanks to the faith and works of the people. In what finer way could the second great commandment, to "love thy neighbour as thyself" (Mark 12:31) be so ably demonstrated? Friendly and brotherly hands clasping across the sea in the spirit of love and good will! A strength and blessing to the faraway Saints who in their troubles were not forgotten by their brothers and sisters in Zion! Their morale was lifted; their courage and faith returned. The Church became better known in Europe through the welfare distribution of life's necessities; the attitudes of non-members became more tolerant and friendly toward us; and missionary work flourished again. It was a turning point for a brighter and a more hopeful future for the Church.

I sincerely believe and am bold enough to suggest that one of the chief foundations and contributing factors leading to the erecting of the Swiss Temple, with all of its blessings to the European Saints, can be credited to this magnificent welfare effort.

It has been said that future events cast their shadows before them; therefore, accepting the experience of history and the prophecies concerning the calamities of the latter days, there is sufficient cause to promote and develop the great welfare program further, to make it fully and successfully operative, stable and strong, with assurance and security to our people, and thus inviting to the entire Church membership. The people of the Church can then be encouraged to come the Churchway with confidence.

We must always remember the parable of the five wise and the five foolish virgins. When difficult times come, and surely they will, let us not be found unprepared and thus appear foolish because we have not obeyed the Lord or the counsel of his servants. The welfare plan is the Lord's way to care and provide for his people. We have been sufficiently warned; now it is a test of faith and devotion. Can we, my brothers and sisters of the Church, measure up?

I bear you my witness to the truthfulness of this great program. I hope we have the faith and the strength to go forward and make it function even as it has been revealed and as it has been outlined for the blessing of the people of the Church, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You have just listened to Elder Delbert L. Stapley of the Council of the Twelve. Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Twelve, will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

THE HUMBLE and moving prayer of our President at the opening of his address, and his request that we pray for him, were gloriously answered as he gave us that inspiring opening talk. When I hear him, and the other great men on this stand, express feelings of weakness and inadequacy and prayers for strength as they address us, I wonder how some of us even dare approach the pulpit. My soul is subdued, my heart is humble, as I listen and worship with you.

There are two activities of the Church which are not only of paramount importance to the members of the Church, but are also of great and increasing interest and concern to all who hear of them. They have the same objective and the same purpose. They are a part of the everlasting and unchangeable plan of redemption. I shall speak for a moment on the great missionary work of the Church—the preaching of the gospel—and of the building and operation of temples—to make available to both living and dead the blessings that come through the performance of the ordinances of the gospel.

The gospel of Jesus Christ makes knowledge of and obedience to law prerequisite to the enjoyment of its blessings. The plan of redemption provides that all the sons of God must hear the gospel and be given an opportunity to embrace it, directly or vicariously.

The injunction of the Savior, given in Jerusalem and repeated in this day, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," (Mark 16:15) is imperative. That it must be done before his work can be consummated is evidenced by his further statement,

... this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come. (Matt. 24:14.)

This gospel of which we speak is a message of good will, of glad tidings. It is the way of salvation in this life, and a method of exaltation in the life

Friday, September 30

First Day

to come. Furthermore, it is a message of peace on earth, for which all the world is praying. The Apostle Paul defined it as "... the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." (Romans 1:16.)

Now if this gospel, this power of God, is to be effective unto the salvation of men, they must believe it, but quoting Paul again,

... how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?

And how shall they preach, except they be sent? (Romans 10:14-15.)

That the preaching of the gospel is of transcendent importance is evidenced by the fact that it was enjoined in every dispensation from the beginning. Jehovah himself taught it to Adam, who received it and called upon his sons to repent. Enoch and his associates taught it and lived it so effectively that their city was translated, and Enoch walked with God.

And thus the Gospel began to be preached, and by his own voice, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Moses 5:58.)

For one hundred and twenty years Noah warned the unheeding people of judgments to come. The gospel was known to Abraham, to Moses, and to the prophets.

Jesus of Nazareth, in the Meridian of Time, went about the whole of Galilee teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. (See Matthew 4:23.) Peter taught it, and on the day of Pentecost epitomized its saving principles in the memorable words, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, ...

For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. (Ibid., 2:38-39.)

He predicted the latter day appearance of the Savior saying,

Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you:

Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. (Acts 3:19-21.)

We have the same message, and it is taught by the same authority as that which led the apostles to dedicate their lives to it. To carry this message to Jew and gentile, Paul went from Jerusalem to Antioch, thence west to Cyprus and Asia Minor, even into Europe, and finally took his long and adventurous journey to Rome where he knew prison awaited him and where some of his greatest epistles were written. It was in Rome that he gave his life for the cause which he advocated with such consummate skill. He ended his life with a benediction,

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. (II Timothy 4:7.)

The early missionaries of this Church, like their predecessors, endured persecution, made many sacrifices, and were willing to die if need be in proclaiming and defending the gospel of Christ. The prophet founder of the Church, the organizer of the missionary system in this dispensation, was, like Paul of old, tried before many magistrates and judges, appealed to the highest authority, was imprisoned many times, and finally sealed his testimony with his blood.

Believing as we do that this is the same gospel which Jesus taught, that in fact, as Paul said, there is no other gospel, and that it must be preached to all the world as a witness, all Latter-day Saints are or should be missionaries, either at home or abroad. Let him that is warned warn his neighbor.

Since 1830 more than 71,000 men and women have served in foreign mission fields. They are literally carrying out the injunction, "Go ye into all the world." Missions have been established in Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia, North and South America, and in the islands of the sea. We are constantly pushing back the frontiers of the mission field. Since the British Mission was established in 1837, modern apostles have dedicated many lands and countries for the preaching of the gospel. The last to be so blessed were Korea, Okinawa, the Philippines, and Guam. They were dedicated for this work by President Joseph Fielding Smith in August last.

The weekly broadcasts of the Tabernacle Choir have carried the gospel of good will and harmony unto millions during the past twenty-six years. In their recent tour of Europe, 379 members of the choir sang their way into the hearts of all who heard them. Many were led to say with Isaiah and with Paul, "How beautiful are the feet of them who publish the gospel of peace; . . ." (See Isa. 52:7.)

Other millions of strangers within the gates of Temple Square have learned of the heretofore unpublished chapters of the life of Christ—chapters telling of his visit to his other sheep on the American continent after his crucifixion in Jerusalem—also of his glorious opening of the last dispensation as he appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith in 1820.

That the General Authorities of the Church are devoted to this work with self-sacrificing zeal is evidenced by the fact that they traveled since last October conference a total of more than 756,000 miles.

Let us refer to only a few of the brethren and only part of their travels. President Joseph Fielding Smith traveled over 30,000 miles in his recent tour of the South Pacific Mission. Elder Lee made a similar journey last year. Elder Kimball has just returned from Europe where he visited fourteen countries and traveled more than 50,000 miles. Elder Mark E. Petersen in his tour of South American missions covered 20,000 miles, and Elder Romney traveled 33,000 miles in visiting Australia, New Zealand, and other South Pacific countries.

The members of the Council of the Twelve spent their whole time visiting stakes and missions. The members of the First Presidency have been even more active. We all wonder at and pray for a continuation of their vitality, endurance, and inspiration.

From January 1954 to October 1955, President David O. McKay, now in his 83rd year, visited twenty-five countries on six continents in land, sea, and air journeys of approximately 100,000 miles.

Our Heavenly Father, in order, as he said, to cut his work short in righteousness, has made available to us such improved facilities of travel and communication as would have been nothing short of miraculous in the days of Peter and Paul or even to our pioneer fathers. Steamships and airplanes enable us to go farther in hours than they could have gone in months. Radio and television have amplified the voice and made it possible to take the gospel into the homes of the people of almost all nations.

The day may not be far distant when there will be a world-wide re-enacting of the day of Pentecost on such a colossal scale that people in every land may hear the message of the gospel, each in his own tongue and at his own fireside. Surely out of Zion shall go forth the law and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. He has said,

... he shall utter his voice out of Zion, and he shall speak from Jerusalem, and his voice shall be heard among all people;

And the Lord, even the Savior, shall stand in the midst of his people, and shall reign over all flesh. (D & C 133:21, 25.)

But is salvation to come only to those now living who accept the gospel or to the few—always a minority—who listened to the prophets in other dispensations. No, the thought is repugnant to reason, and inconsistent with the character and attributes of God. That the preaching of the gospel is not to be limited to mortal beings is attested by the scripture, for Christ

... went and preached unto the spirits in prison; Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing. . . . (1 Peter 3:19-20.)

And further,

For . . . this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. (Ibid., 4:6.)

While the message of the gospel is being carried to them that are dead, the living have for the past 125 years been doing for them what they could not

Friday, September 30

First Day

do for themselves. Jesus said a man must be born of the water and of the spirit before he can see the kingdom of God. This is a universal law applying to all, both living and dead. Water is a mundane element, and baptism is an earthly ordinance. How then shall the dead comply with the law respecting baptism?

The need and efficacy of the law of agency, of proxy or vicarious service was recognized before the world was created. The doctrine of the atonement could not have become operative unless it were possible for one person to do for another that which the latter could not do for himself. It was under the law of vicarious service that Christ redeemed us from the fall of Adam,

... as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. (1 Cor. 15:22.)

Since the Church was organized more than fifteen million saving ordinances have been performed by the living for the dead. New temples are being built in many lands to facilitate and consummate this stupendous work. The tremendous cost of preaching the gospel to both the living and the dead and making its blessings available is met largely from the voluntary contributions of the people. The missionary and temple work of the Church is an unequaled mass demonstration of self-sacrificing service.

Yes, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe. There is a power available to man which, when properly utilized, will result in his salvation. This power is equal to the task because it is in fact the power of God as Paul declared it to be. Before men can use this power, they must hear, believe, and obey. There will be no arbitrary use of this power; no force will ever be applied. The keys to its use are faith and intelligent co-operation. Our mission is to declare to the world first that there is such a power; second, to explain the eternal and immutable laws which govern its use; third, to perform authoritatively the ordinances which by divine decree have been made prerequisite to seeing or entering the kingdom of God; and fourth, to warn the nations of the calamities which shall be visited upon the ungodly before the second advent of the Savior.

We preach the same gospel that was taught anciently. We teach it by the same authority. That gospel, and the authority to teach it and administer in its ordinances, was restored to this earth at the dawn of the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. We hail that dawn as we sing the great hymn of Parley P. Pratt:

The morning breaks; the shadows flee;
Lo, Zion's standard is unfurled!
The dawning of a brighter day
Majestic rises on the world.

* * * * *

Jehovah speaks! let earth give ear,
And Gentile nations turn and live.
His mighty arm is making bare,
His covenant people to receive.

Heavenly Father, wilt thou bless all of us that we, too, may fight a good fight, may finish the course, may keep the faith, we humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

Y BRETHREN AND SISTERS, those who are before me and those who are on the air: I rejoice with you in the glorious inspiration that we had in the morning session and for the encouragement which it gave to us as to the way in which we are regarded in the world, and as to the duty which that imposes upon us, and for the other instructions which we received. It is my earnest desire and my prayer that I may be able to say something today that will be fruitful, that will build up our faith, and that will, I hope, call attention to one great principle which I think is at the base, one of the two great incidents that are at the base of all that we believe and all that we know.

Paul, speaking to the Corinthians, in the beginning of his First Epistle, thanked God that he had only baptized two of them in Corinth, Crispus and

Friday, September 30

First Day

Gaius, and he more or less repudiated the rest of them because of their paganism and their unbelief. Very early in his First Epistle he told them about how he felt about this. He said: "For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." (1 Cor. 2:2.)

And if you would read in this connection, and I hope you will, the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, dealing with the resurrection, you will read there one of the great, masterful sermons that have been preached in the world on the resurrection, in which, with searching logic and great argument, Paul showed how vain was all we believed and all we taught if Christ was not resurrected.

I recall, also, in this connection, those words of Peter at the time he and John had gone to visit the Temple. As they started inward from the Court of the Gentiles to the Court of the Women, there at the Gate Beautiful, which was the entrance, they came to a beggar who seemingly had been brought there for years. He made his living by what he got begging from those who went in. Peter and John stopped a moment, said to him: "Look on us," and he, expecting to receive alms from them, looked up, and Peter said to him:

"Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." And he reached down and took the man by the hand, and as the man came to his feet, his feet and his ankles straightened, and he walked and leaped for joy and praised God. (See Acts 3:1-8.)

The Jewish rulers could not endure this challenge. Peter and John were arrested, thrown into jail, and then, when morning came, they were called before Annas, the real high priest, Caiaphas, his son-in-law, who was the titular high priest, made so by the Roman government, with John and Alexander, and others, kindred of the high priest, and the others who were members of the Sanhedrin. These demanded of Peter and John by what power and by what name they had done these things. (See ibid., 4:1-12.)

Peter, who made their defense, said: "... by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified." And added: "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Ibid., 4:10, 12.)

Today the great Christian world are retreating from their early and true belief in Jesus as the Christ. They are explaining him in different ways. They are taking away from him his divinity.

One great church is loosening, apparently, the bands which they formerly had that bound them to Jesus Christ, by setting up in his place the mother of Jesus, Mary. We of our faith know that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ. This is our knowledge. We must proclaim it at all times and under all circumstances.

You know, it is not difficult to understand that the Christian world does not have the knowledge which we possess, because the Bible, the Old Testament, contains scant notice about the Christ and about his work. There are some glorious passages in the Psalms which describe his crucifixion, tell about his birth, but by and large there is not much told about him.

Why should Jesus of Nazareth assume this tremendous place and importance in the Christian world, as described by Paul and Peter?

Modern revelation has revealed this to us. I have not time, this is not the place, to undertake to discuss the Fall and the atonement, more than to say a few words.

We know of the Grand Council, we know of the determinations there made, we know that the world was created in order that the spirits from the spirit world might come here and be tabernacled.

We know of the placing of Adam in the Garden and the instruction which was given to him regarding the two trees. We know of the disobedience to the instruction with reference to the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. I do not like to call it a transgression because the act that was done by Adam had been foreseen; and it had been planned before the world was that he would do all he did do.

But an immortal being had disobeyed the commandment of the Lord. An immortal being had eaten the fruit. An immortal being had suffered the consequence. He and Eve became mortal, and she afterwards sang in a great hymn of praise, her gratitude for thus having disobeyed, because now they could have seed. (See Moses 5:11.) We know that by having seed they could go forward in fulfilling the plan that was originally mapped out in the Grand Council.

ADAM BECAME mortal; spiritual death came to him; and mortal death came to him. This was the first great crisis in the history of mankind. Indeed, it may be said to have produced mankind.

In order for him to get back to the place whence he began, it was necessary that there should be an atonement for this disobedience.

Quite obviously, Adam could not retrace his steps; he could not un-eat. He was mortal. No matter how good any of his children might be, they, also mortal, had no more power than had he. So, to pay for the disobedience, it took a Being conceived by the Infinite, not subject to death as were Adam's posterity; someone to whom death was subject; someone born of woman but yet divine. He alone could make the sacrifice which would enable us to have our bodies and our spirits reunited in the due time of the Lord and then go back to the Father, thus reunited; and finally, body and spirit together, we might go on through all the eternities.

Jesus of Nazareth was the one who was chosen before the world was, the Only Begotten of the Father, to come to earth to perform this service, to conquer mortal death which would atone for the Fall, that the spirit of man could recover his body, so reuniting them.

(Note: Speaking to the multitude in Jerusalem, Jesus said:

"Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again.

"No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." [John 10:17-18.]

That is the reason why, however good any man, son of Adam, may have been, he could not do the things, make the atonement that would bring us back into the presence of our Heavenly Father. Again, he could not un-eat the fruit. Jesus was not the son of Adam, but of the Father.

As John was baptizing in the Jordan, he saw Jesus approaching and exclaimed:

"... Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." (Ibid., 1:29.) The record does not say sins.

We frequently are told and understand that not alone did Christ atone for that "original sin," so-called, but that he atones for our sins, generally. As I understand it, so far as the resurrection is concerned, the overcoming of mortal death, he did atone for our sins. That is to say, no matter what we do here on earth, even though we commit the unpardonable sin, yet the atonement of Christ will for that purpose and to that end atone for our sins, and so will bring about our resurrection. But after the resurrection, then we have to be judged according to the deeds of the flesh, good or bad. On the judgment day we will receive our rewards or punishments; we must pay for our own sins.

So as I conceive it, we must stand adamant for the doctrine of the atonement of Jesus the Christ, for the divinity of his conception, for his sinless life, and for, shall I say, the divinity of his death, his voluntary surrender of life. He was not killed; he gave up his life.

You know, I think that all through his life, he gave evidences of his divinity, his divine powers and authority. It is true that frequently other prophets who were not divinely begotten had done some of his works. If you run it over in your mind, you will remember that by walking on the water he defied gravity. You will remember his control over the elements, the winds, and the waves, and the storm. You will remember the exercise of his creative powers, for he created food when he fed the five thousand and the four thousand, and he made wine out of water. You will remember how he cured the halt, the lame, the blind. You will recall how he brought life back to the lifeless. You will recall his great duel with Satan which he won.

You will recall his great victory, when he died and was resurrected.

I often think that one of the most beautiful things in the Christ's life was his words on the cross, when, suffering under the agony of a death that is said to have been the most painful that the ancients could devise, death on the cross, after he had been unjustly, illegally, contrary to all the rules of mercy, condemned and then crucified, when he had been nailed to the cross and was about to give up his life, he said to his Father in heaven, as those who were within hearing testify: "... Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." (Luke 23:34.)

It is our mission, perhaps the most fundamental purpose of our work, to bear constant testimony of Jesus the Christ. We must never permit to enter into our thoughts and certainly not into our teachings, the idea that he was merely a great teacher, a great philosopher, the builder of a great system of ethics. It is our duty, day after day, year in and year out, always to declare that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ who brought redemption to the world and to all the inhabitants thereof.

I bear my testimony that I know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that he was divinely begotten, was born, lived his life, was crucified, and on the third day arose, the first fruits of the resurrection, thus making it possible for all of us to be resurrected.

I bear my testimony that he, with the Father, appeared to the young Prophet and opened up the Dispensation of the Fullness of Times.

I bear my testimony to the truth of the restored gospel.

I bear my testimony to the restoration of the priesthood.

I bear my testimony that the keys and powers which Joseph the Prophet held as President of the Church, as prophet, seer, and revelator, have come down from him until now with the Presidency of this Church, down to and including our present President, David O. McKay.

God give us all increasingly, day by day, this testimony. God give us the power and the faith and the courage always to declare, Jesus is the Christ, the only name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved.

This is one of the prime duties of this people. That we may fulfil it and meet it unto the last degree, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened, a great testimony regarding Jesus the Christ, is J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency. He will be followed by Elder Thomas E. McKay, Assistant to the Twelve.

ELDER THOMAS E. MCKAY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I AM VERY GRATEFUL, my brethren and sisters, for this wonderful opportunity again to bear you my testimony to the divinity of this work. I have thoroughly enjoyed the testimonies that have been borne this morning and now the testimony of President Clark.

I was very pleased to hear our German brethren and sisters furnishing the music this morning. I thought at one time that perhaps there might be some in the choir to whom I taught in English my favorite song, "Love At Home"; but after hearing their voices, they all sounded so young and fresh I got to thinking of how long ago that was—over fifty years—so I decided that none of them were born at the time I taught that English class. I am grateful for the great missionary work that is being done in the Church. I am grateful especially for the gospel, and as I say, this opportunity of again bearing my testimony of its divinity.

I am thankful, especially for my parentage and for my brothers and sisters. About a week or ten days ago, Sister McKay and I were up at the old home; we had some visitors. They came in. We knew them, not too well; I had met them before. We were delighted to say some things about the old home, about our childhood experiences there, especially those with President McKay, and when we got through and were saying good-bye, the brother there held my hand a while. Then he said, "You have been blessed with understanding parents." I had not heard it described just that way before, not in so many words, and I told him so. I said, "Yes, not only have I been blessed with understanding parents, but with a kind, black-eyed, beautiful, understanding wife."

I am very happy for this opportunity to bear testimony to the goodness of my parents, my wife, our family, my brothers and sisters, and children and grandchildren, for their kindness to me. I can truthfully say that there has been love in the home, there in the old Huntsville home.

My favorite song, as some of you already know, is "Love at Home."

There is beauty all around
When there's love at home;
There is joy in every sound
When there's love at home.
Peace and plenty here abide,
Smiling sweet on every side.
Time doth softly, sweetly glide
When there's love at home.

In the cottage there is joy
When there's love at home;
Hate and envy ne'er annoy
When there's love at home.
Roses bloom beneath our feet;
All the earth's a garden sweet,
Making life a bliss complete
When there's love at home.

Kindly heaven smiles above
When there's love at home;
All the world is filled with love
When there's love at home.
Sweeter sings the brooklet by;
Brighter beams the azure sky;
Oh, there's One who smiles on high
When there's love at home.

Yes, I am grateful for my parents, my wife, and my children. God bless our mothers, our wives, not only in the Church but throughout the world. Whenever you find a leader among the men, you will find that there is a good wife at his side. She may not be mentioned; she may not be very well-known; the man gets the credit, the plaudits of the people, but I tell you when the final score is made up, perhaps the wife will receive greater mention, greater blessings than the husband. So do not forget these wives and our mothers, you brethren.

I was so happy to hear all about the movements of the Tabernacle Choir in Europe. Sister McKay read to me all we could get out of the newspapers, and I listened to the radio very carefully. I received a thrill, brothers and sisters, when they were in Berlin, and I do not know who had charge of the broadcast, but there came over the radio the singing of our members in Berlin. They burst forth in song to express their appreciation for this great event in their district. I was especially overcome when I heard the choir had been able to sing to those refugees. God bless them. There are thousands and thousands of them there that need such music now, and that need the gospel. I know what kind of people some of them are.

On my second mission over there I had the privilege of visiting the members up in Koenigsberg, where they had, I think I may say, one of the finest choirs in the Church. To hear those brothers and sisters sing, you would know they are of the house of Israel. We went on up farther north and had the privilege of crossing the boundary line from the Memel Branch into Russia. The people there were so kind. They are ready for the gospel, so do not be hard on them (the people are not responsible for what the leaders do), but pray for them.

I am so happy and thankful that our Church school, Brigham Young University, has a class in Russian. I hope more of the young men will prepare. I am not saying that anything might happen, but so many things are happening and are happening so fast that we cannot tell. It is a good thing to be prepared. I often thought, while in the mission field, of some of the prophecies that have been made with reference to the conclusion here on this earth, "when the end shall come"; for example, the gospel, it says, of the kingdom shall be preached to all nations, "and then shall the end come."

Well, I visited in Europe, Germany, Austria, Hungary, France, Switzerland;

Friday, September 30

First Day

all included in the then Swiss-German Mission. There are millions of people there. I thought, "Well, if the end does not come before all of these people receive the gospel, I guess it will be a long while." But judging from events that have recently happened, especially with my brother, President David O. McKay, visiting so many countries of the world in such a short time, the broadcasts of our choir and their wonderful visit over there, the gospel may be preached to all people before we realize it.

I am so thankful for the temple that has been established in Bern, the beautiful capital of Switzerland, beautiful Switzerland. It is a great little country. If I had been consulted on the location, (I am so thankful now I was not) I believe I would not have thought of Bern. The larger branches and most of the members are outside of that city. But Bern is the capital where are located the beautiful government buildings. There is one of the finest genealogical libraries that I have ever had the privilege of visiting located in Bern. I visited there and met the head man. We visited so long we could not get away. The telephone rang, and his wife asked why he did not come home to lunch. She was not very happy about it, but he told her to never mind waiting any longer, that he would get his lunch down near the building that day.

They are anxious and ready to explain the work that they have done there already in genealogical work. I believe from all I have heard and studied that the records in Switzerland that have been kept in the various churches are the most complete or as complete as any others in the world, and in Germany, also. Now we have the modern inventions that are able to film these records. Before it was so difficult for our members to decipher them; the churches are not heated and dimly lighted. Our members had great difficulty going down in the archives and getting the names. But it has been changed. The records have been filmed, and thousands of names are ready to be taken to the temple.

And may I say this, many of the members are already here, and I suppose over eighty per cent of them have come here with hundreds of names to work for in the temple. I love these members; they are temple workers; they are temple-minded; and I am so happy and thankful for the completion of this temple in Bern.

God bless the brethren for their inspiration in building it there. I am thankful that I have had the privilege of bearing my testimony to so many people over in Europe. I was there on three different missions.

I remember very well the last testimony I bore in Berlin, at the time of World War II in 1939. At the conclusion of the meeting, a stranger spoke to me. He appeared to be a very intelligent man. He said, "You ought not to talk to people that way; they will believe you." I told him of the goodness of the gospel, and that all mankind would be happier if they followed the plan of salvation, as it had been revealed in the gospel and added, "I do hope they follow my testimony." I asked him his name, and he said, "Never mind."

Scores of people since have arrived here in Zion and are living examples of the testimony that I bore in Berlin.

I could mention many names, but time will not permit. However, I have lived to see the benefits realized by those who have accepted the gospel.

The gospel is true and given to us for our happiness in this life.

God lives; Jesus is the Christ and head of this Church. I bear you this testimony, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder LeGrand Richards of the Council of the Twelve will now speak to us, following Elder Thomas E. McKay, Assistant to the Twelve, who has just spoken. Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve, will follow Elder LeGrand Richards.

ELDER LEGRAND RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Y BROTHERS AND SISTERS: I rejoice with you in the wonderful testimonies and instructions we have received in this conference. I pray that the Lord will let me have the spirit of testimony bearing for the few moments that I stand before you.

After listening to the beautiful discourse here this afternoon by President Clark on the life and the mission of the Redeemer of the world, and remembering what President McKay said this morning, as he counted his blessings and advised us to count ours, and he put at the head of the list in counting his blessings the great work of the Master, I am sure that all of us as Latter-day Saints feel that the greatest event of recorded history of all time was the life and the mission of the Redeemer of the world.

His work is not yet finished. We read in the Book of Mormon that—

... my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be until the end of man, neither from that time henceforth and forever. (2 Nephi 29:9.)

And I think today of him as the Creator of worlds, as we are told in the Pearl of Great Price, unnumbered to man, "but all things are numbered unto me," the Lord said, for I made them and by the power of mine Only Begotten, created I them. (See Moses 1:33, 35.)

Then I think of his great atonement and of the promises that yet await us of his unfinished work. You remember when he stood before the chief priest of the Jews, Caiaphas, and Caiaphas said,

... I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God. (Matt. 26:63.)

And Jesus answered,

Thou hast said: nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. (Ibid., 26:64.)

It is this "coming in the clouds of heaven," and the work that is necessary to be done to prepare for his coming that I would like to say a few words about this afternoon. Let us turn to the holy scriptures for the promises of the resurrection, and President Clark has referred to the resurrection. Think of getting our bodies back out of the grave and being reunited with our loved ones, and then read the testimony of John when he was banished upon the Isle of Patmos, describing that time:

And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away. . . .

He that overcometh shall inherit all things: and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. (Rev. 21:4, 7.)

Then we read farther that it is they who die in Christ who shall come forth in the morning of the first resurrection, but that the rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are ended.

What is there in this world that we could do as individuals to repay for the privilege of coming forth in the morning of the first resurrection and receiving our loved ones and being united with them and with the servants of the Living God, and with the Redeemer of the world, when he comes in the clouds of heaven?

If we understood really what the gospel is, we would know why Jesus said that the merchantman seeking costly pearls would sell all that he had in order that he might acquire it and called it the Pearl of Great Price, and we would also understand what he meant when he said,

For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (Matt. 16:26.)

We just do not have the capacity to appreciate the great blessings that await the faithful, for the Lord said to the Prophet:

Friday, September 30

First Day

Great shall be their reward and eternal shall be their glory. (D & C 76:6.)

In this great preparation the Master is to make, it requires that he have an organization. He called his twelve, humble men they were, but they were men who could be taught, and they were men full of faith, and they were true to the testimony that they had, and they went forth fearlessly even until each one gave his life, except the Apostle John, who was privileged to tarry until the Savior should come, for the testimony of Jesus that burned in their souls.

I sit here among these brethren who are special witnesses of the Lord Jesus Christ unto the world. I do not believe there is one of them who would not give his life willingly for the testimony of Jesus. I know that the Presidency of this Church never has to ask any of these men if he is willing to go here or there or assume this responsibility or that responsibility. They could not find men in all the world who would be more willing to accept the assignments that come to them. I know they are men of God. I know the joy of the testimony of the Holy Ghost, that rapture that fills your bosom as you feel yourself in his very presence. I know it is worth every effort that we can put forth.

In our meeting in the temple yesterday, one of the Presidency indicated that he thought one of the things we needed to teach the Saints most was to live worthy to go to the temples. We are building temples. They are great institutions in the Church, and we should teach our young people to appreciate them. I had this additional thought that what our people, who have been through the temple, need to know is the sacredness of the obligations they enter into in these holy temples.

When they agree there to consecrate all that they have and all that they are for the building up of the kingdom of God, I do believe that in the eyes of the Lord they are not idle words; that we ought to put first our duty and responsibility to the priesthood that we bear and to the building of the kingdom of God, and all other things ought to be secondary unto that. And if we realize this, and we realize the majesty of this great work in which we are engaged, it would not be difficult for us to do that very thing.

I have great faith in the fulfillment of the prophecies. I think of the words of Jesus as he walked along the way to Emmaus following his crucifixion. The eyes of the two disciples, as you will recall, were holden that they could not recognize him, and as he heard them talking of the things that had been done in Jerusalem, (his crucifixion), he answered, "... O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." And then he explained to them from the scriptures the words of Moses and the prophets how that they had all testified of him and of his work. Then we are told he opened their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures. (See Luke 24.)

And then we have the words of Peter in which he said,

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts:

Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (II Peter 1:19-21.)

And that is what makes the word of prophecy more sure than anything else in all this world.

We ought to analyze the prophecies with respect to this great latter-day dispensation and the preparation for the coming of the Son of Man as he testified to Caiaphas that he would come in the clouds of heaven.

I would like to read to you a statement about the need of a prophet. This is from a minister. While I was in the South, two conventions were held by one of the large churches in Atlanta, Georgia, and in one of them Bishop Warren A. Candler, among other things, made this statement:

"We need the reappearance of prophets sent from God."

Then Dr. Ainsworth discussed the condition of the world and the need of something to arrest the world from its present decadent condition, and asked these words:

"Never in the nation's history was the arresting voice of a prophet of God more needed than it is today."

Then here are the words of a minister in England a few years ago:

"We all recognize that something has got to be done, for at the moment we are in a plight where our earthly leaders falter, our people drift and die. We cannot forget that when the blind set out to lead the blind, chances are that both will find themselves in a ditch. A dictator being out of the question, what about a prophet? The prophet never is self-appointed. It is well to keep that in mind. Nor is he chosen of his fellows. Always he is heaven-sent; yet I am cheered at the thought that he has the knack of appearing at the right time. That being so, I incline to the belief that our prophet must surely be getting ready for us. Let us not forget that; hope and pray as we will for his coming. Men have an old habit of greeting the true prophet with stones. We need not be surprised if an old-fashioned welcome awaits the prophet of our day. No one can say when such a prophet will come, but of our need of him there is no question."

We find people today who say, "Well, we could accept your message, but we cannot believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet." If they believed in the pre-existent life, they could then understand. When Jeremiah was called as a boy to be a prophet, he could not understand it, and the Lord said to him,

Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations. (Jer. 1:5.)

The Lord not only knew Jeremiah, but he also knew Joseph Smith. Three thousand years ago the Lord revealed unto Joseph who was sold into Egypt, that in the latter-days, out of his loins, he would raise up a choice seer and a prophet like unto Moses. (2 Nephi 3:11, 14-17.)

And we read in holy writ that there was no prophet in all Israel like unto Moses because Moses talked with God face to face, and that is the kind of prophet the Lord promised Joseph he would raise up out of his loins in the latter days, and that Joseph Smith was this promised Prophet is our testimony to the world. The things that Jesus and the prophets declared would have to be accomplished before his coming, could not be accomplished without a prophet through whom the Lord could work.

We read in Malachi where the Lord said through his prophet that he would send a messenger to prepare the way for his coming, and swiftly he would come to his temple. Who but a prophet could be this messenger? Has there ever been a time that he came swiftly to his temple? How could the temple be prepared for his coming without a prophet? This promise has reference to his second coming, for Malachi adds:

... who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap. (Mal. 3:2.)

So in his last coming, he will come swiftly to his temple. He will come to sit in judgment, as Malachi saw, and Malachi's thoughts, going along that same line, saw the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord in the latter-days when

... all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. (Ibid., 4:1.)

And then he goes on to say that before that day he would send Elijah the prophet to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children. Now why does not the world believe that Elijah will come? They can believe that he was taken to heaven in the clouds of heaven, in a flaming chariot, and here is the promise that he should come in the latter days. And we bear witness that Elijah did come, and because of the knowledge and the information he brought, we continue to build these temples and do this great work that is being done in the temples of the Lord.

When Peter was speaking to those who had put to death the Christ, he said,

Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

Friday, September 30

First Day

And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you. (Acts 3:19-20.)

Now, remember he had already been among them. He had already been crucified, and here is the promise of Peter that the Lord would send him again, but he adds:

Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. (Ibid., 3:21.)

How can one believe the Holy Bible and not believe that one of the preparatory things for the coming of the Redeemer of the world would be a "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

We have mentioned the coming of Elijah. President Clark mentioned the restoration of the priesthood, the Aaronic and the Melchizedek, and then there was the kingdom to be set up that Daniel saw in the last days that should become as a great mountain and fill the whole earth, and how could that be without a prophet of God?

Then there was the new record of Joseph to come forth to be joined with the record of Judah according to the command the Lord gave to Ezekiel, and how could that be without a prophet who should do this work, for the Lord said that he would bring it forth and he would join it to the record of Judah, and he would make them one in his hands. (Ezek. 37:16-17.) The Lord works through his servants, the prophets.

These are only a few of the things the Lord promised to do before the coming of the Redeemer of the world. We bear witness to the world that this Prophet, Joseph Smith, raised up of the Lord, was in very deed the instrument that the Lord had in waiting through the centuries, in the pre-existent state when the Lord stood in the midst of the spirits and said to Abraham:

"These I will make my rulers"; for there were many of the noble and great ones there, and then he added: "Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born." (Abraham 3:23.)

Jesus knew that he would work through the instrumentality of his servants just as he did when he called the Twelve, and that is why he said, as he stood overlooking Jerusalem,

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.

For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, [notwithstanding his promise]—Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. (Matt. 23:37-39.)

We have had some wonderful testimonies of people of standing on the great work that the Prophet Joseph has done. I cannot take time to go into that. I will just give you this one thought. The other day Brother Levi Edgar Young showed me a history of the state of Vermont, and under the caption, Sharon, we read these words:

Sharon enters the Hall of Fame by being the birthplace of one of the immortals of American history, Joseph Smith, who founded the Mormon religion.

The world is beginning to recognize the power and the spirit that is in this work, a power which causes every man to be willing to devote himself to the building of the kingdom which is the kind of power and influence that can overcome the world and establish his kingdom in the earth.

I bear you my witness that this is in very deed the work of the Lord, and that he is at the helm, and I do it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder LeGrand Richards of the Council of the Twelve has just spoken to us. Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve, will now address us.

ELDER JOHN LONGDEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

JOSEPH SMITH was and is a Prophet of the Living God. We have heard witness from this pulpit today that a prophet should be called to lead, guide, and direct latter-day Israel. I believe that Joseph Smith was a great spiritual leader. I believe that he is the greatest spiritual leader since the advent of Jesus Christ in mortality. I believe there are four great events, spiritual events, if you please, that may form the cornerstones of this great Church.

First, the vision to the boy, Joseph, who humbly desired to know truth and secluded himself in the woods to pray. Four weeks ago it was my privilege to stand in that hallowed place, and with bowed head and gratitude in my heart for the witness that has come to me that he is in very deed a prophet. I visualized in my mind's eye what the experience must have been as he was visited there by God, the Father, the Father of our spirits, and Jesus Christ, his divine literal Son. This was in answer to his humble plea and prayer after reading the first chapter of James, and the fifth verse:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. (James 1:5.)

But there was a provision,

But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. (Ibid., 1:6.)

As we have heard testimony borne today, he sealed his testimony with his life's blood, that he had seen God the Father and Jesus Christ, the Son.

I believe in that vision.

I believe the second great event is the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. It was not written by Joseph Smith but translated by him under the inspiration of our Heavenly Father.

It was my privilege a few months ago to visit a stake in Idaho. I listened to a young man, a convert to the Church, bear witness and testimony in the morning session, and I shall ever be grateful for his testimony. During the war he was assigned in a Naval unit to Logan, Utah, at the Utah State Agricultural College. He attended one or two of our meetings, and then he was sent for further training to San Diego. He became acquainted with one of our chaplains, Elder John Boud. John Boud presented him with a Book of Mormon. The young man, after completing his service for Uncle Sam, returned to his home in the East, attending again Columbia University, so he might finish his studies and graduate.

He had a Jewish professor in one of his classes. He presented the Book of Mormon to this professor one day. He fingered through it for a few moments, then he made the statement that either Joseph Smith was a genius or he was inspired. The young man said, "Take it and read it, and when you have finished with it, bring it back." After several weeks he did that, and he said to the young man, "Joseph Smith was inspired."

The young man further investigated truth as each soul has a right to investigate truth. And I testify by the power of the Holy Ghost ye shall know truth, if you have that desire. And so he embraced this great gospel because he had that witness.

I believe the third great spiritual event was the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ, with apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists and so forth. And you have my witness and testimony this afternoon that these men in the First Presidency, the Council of the Twelve Apostles, and the Patriarch to the Church, are in very deed prophets of the Living God, representing him and bearing special witness of his divinity to the world today.

Then I believe, finally, the fourth cornerstone or spiritual event was the embodiment of the truths contained in the message which Joseph Smith gave to the world, completely revolutionizing, if you please, the spiritual things, something that was definitely contrary to the doctrines of men which had been taught up to that period, and in that gospel we have a form or a pattern for living. For the gospel of Jesus Christ teaches me how to live, not how to die, but to enjoy life here in this mortal life, with all its problems, with all its trials, with all its troubles.

Friday, September 30

First Day

I am grateful that I can have echo in my heart and in my mind the words of Jesus:

Come unto me, . . . Take my yoke upon you, . . . For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light. (Matt. 11:28-30.)

Brothers and sisters, may we be further resolved today, as we leave this glorious conference, more to spiritualize our lives upon the great truths which are presented for our study, contained in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price.

I bear you my testimony that God lives, that Jesus is his divine Son, our Elder Brother, that he is the Savior of the World, that Joseph Smith was and is a Prophet of God and that those who have succeeded him in that position in this Church have been men of God, even prophets, down to President David O. McKay today.

May God bless us that that testimony may abide within our hearts, that we will be equipped to meet the various trials and problems which may confront us, I humbly pray, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, our divine Savior. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. The congregation will now join in singing, "High On the Mountain Top." Elder Alvin Brey, assistant conductor of the German Church Choir, will lead us. After the singing, Elder Levi Edgar Young will speak to us.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn "High On The Mountain Top."

President David O. McKay:

Elder Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of the Seventy will now speak to us, and Elder Young will be followed by Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I AM VERY GLAD TODAY to know that the members of this choir are descendants of the German people. Many of them were born here, it is true. It always reminds me, when I hear music rendered by Germans, of the lovely words of Schiller: "You weep today, but you have peace in your hearts tomorrow."

We, my brethren and sisters, have a great heritage, and the object of our general conferences is to bring the members of the Church together to hear the word of God. We are living in an age when the truths of God are needed to solve the problems of our times. Our fathers, their lips glowing with the words of faith, called God to witness that the truths of the gospel would be taught our children of the future. No age of history has been more complex than that of today, and one of the problems is how to teach our children that they may grow up with faith in God and his eternal purposes. There are fundamental truths that must ever be known and held sacred by us and by the children of the world, for we have been passing through an age of wars, and never in all history has the hate of man for man been so universal as it has been the last few years. It was a writer of ancient times, 500 years B.C., who wrote:

The age in which we live should be distinguished by some glorious enterprise. Let the leaders strive to put an end to our present troubles. Treaties of peace are insufficient for that purpose. They may retard, but they cannot prevent our misfortunes. We are in need of some durable plan which will forever put an end to our hostilities and unite us by the lasting ties of mutual affection and fidelity.

It is only a few weeks ago that Albert Schweitzer left this message to Americans, and we may say the world, for he has become a world character:

If men can be found who will revolt against the spirit of thoughtlessness and who are personalities sound enough and profound enough to let the ethical ideals radiate from them as forces, there will start an activity of the spirit which will be strong enough to evoke a new mental and spiritual disposition in mankind.

A few days ago we had the opportunity of meeting a group of students who are doing advanced work in a well-known university who came with the purpose of talking over a few questions that had puzzled them. It was a pleasant hour which we spent together, for their minds were open to the great truths of religion. They were not all of the same church, and one of them was the son of well-known Jewish parents. We had a chance of speaking about the Holy Bible and particularly the book of Genesis, part of which came up for discussion. We all agreed that nothing surpasses the first chapter of Genesis in sheer beauty, for it is the divine truth that God lives and is the Creator of heaven and earth and is the Father of mankind. What a fine thing for the youth of the world to have this knowledge taught them. It was just a few days ago too, that a student from Harvard College, writing his thesis for his doctor's degree in philosophy, had his attention called to the belief that Williams James, one of the most learned men, wrote when his little boy died:

Our little Humster, whome you never saw since his first babyhood, has also gone over to the majority. We buried him yesterday under the pine tree, at my father's side. For nine days he had been in a desperate condition, but his constitution proved so tenacious that each visit of the doctor found him still alive. At last his valiant little soul left his body. He was a broad, generous, patient little nature, with a noble head who would have done credit to his name had he lived. It must be now that he is reserved for some still better chance than that and that we shall in some way come into his presence again.

Another beautiful truth could be taught to the youth of our schools. It concerns the American Indians. The tribes of America always held through the years that the whites had taken their lands, and this brought about many Indian wars. Indian chiefs rose at times to great heights of noble thoughts and actions. It was in the early days of the last century that one of the noblest chiefs left this message. It is called the message of Gard and was quoted in the Overland Monthly in 1872:

Many snows ago, there lived a young Hoopa named Gard. He knew the stars and the habits of the trees. "Wide as the eagles fly," was he known for his love of peace. He walked in the paths of humility, and clean was his heart. His words were not crooked nor double. He went everywhere, teaching the people the beauty of meekness. He said to them, "Love peace, and eschew war and the shedding of blood. Put away all wrangling and the spirit of wrath. Dwell together in the singleness of love. Let all your hearts be one heart. So shall ye prosper greatly, and the great One above shall build you up like a great rock on the mountain. The forests shall yield you abundance of game, and rich nutty seeds and acorns. The red-flecked salmon shall never fail in the rivers. Ye shall rest in your wigwam in good joy, and your children shall run in and out like the young rabbits of the field for number."

The report of Gard went throughout the land. Gray-bearded men came many days journey to sit at his feet. But one day Gard went from his wigwam and was gone many suns. His brother was distressed and feared. At first he said: "He is teaching the people and will come back."

But his people feared, and in a few days they left the wigwams and began to search the hills and valleys for their Gard. They called through the forests. Day after day they beat up and down the mountains. They shouted in the gloomy canyons, but no sound came to them except the echo of their own voices. Still the brother wandered on. He went through the forest; he exclaimed aloud: "O Gard, my brother, if indeed you are already in the land of souls, then speak to me at least one word with the voice of the wind that I may know it for a certainty and therefore be content."

Then Gard came to him from the sky and spoke to his brother. "Listen. I have been in the land of souls. I have beheld the great God above. I have come back to earth to bring a message to the Hoopas, that they must dwell in peace with their neighboring tribes. Put from you all thoughts of vengeance. Wash your hearts clean. Redden your arrows no more in your brother's blood. Then the Great Man will make you to increase greatly and be happy in this good land. Ye shall keep the dance of Peace which the Great Man has appointed. When ye observe, ye shall know if ye are clean in your hearts by a sign."

Having said these words, Gard was wrapped in a cloud and floated up into the land of souls.

With all the individual and racial differences among men of the nations of the world, there are also common characteristics. Spiritually minded people have always lived. The sublime faith in God as shown in the writings of the Old Testament indicates that this life on earth is but a period of preparation for the life hereafter. Maeterlinck, the Belgian writer, tells us that when we become acquainted with ancient religions, we find them complete in their broad outlines and divine principles, and the farther back we go, the more perfect they are and the more closely related to the loftiest beliefs of our own times. Rudolph Steiner, a German scholar, says that what we read in the Vedas or Hindu scriptures gives us only a faint idea of the sublime doctrines of the ancient teachers. It seems that the more ancient the texts, the purer and more awe-inspiring the doctrines which they reveal.

Then we think of the Hebrew conception of immortality and how the prophets taught the word of God. Men were to find their relationship to the Creator which was an eternal tie here and hereafter. Community of conviction grew up, and this conviction bound men into a brotherhood to serve God and to learn and keep his commandments. The sublime faith in God as shown in all the writings of the Old Testament shows that this life is but a period of preparation for the life hereafter. From the Psalms we have "The Lord is my shepherd," and then in the book of Job we have Job uttering these divine words:

For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth:

And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God. (Job 19:25-26.)

In the early days of Kirtland and following the organization of the Quorum of Twelve and the Seventies, the Prophet Joseph Smith organized Hebrew and Greek classes in the temple which had just been finished. This was in keeping with the ideals of education which the prophet had at the very beginning of our history. In the dedicatory prayer of the Kirtland Temple, we have these words:

Seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom, seek learning even by study and also by faith. (D & C 109:7.)

We are further admonished:

... study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people. (Ibid., 90:15.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith employed a noted Hebrew scholar from New York City to come and teach classes in Hebrew. While he also kept Greek and Latin in mind, he first wanted to be able to read Hebrew that he might read the Holy Bible in the original language in which it was written. From the journal of the Prophet, we find him studying daily and attending the classes with many of his brethren who were reading and studying with him. We read: "After a hard day's work, went to my Hebrew class, and studied far into the night. Up in the morning and out at nine o'clock, attended the school and translated with the morning class. . . . Attended my studies as usual and made some advancement."

"Every man who learns," says Ralph Waldo Emerson, "must do so by laborious reading." Such a man looks forward to an expanding knowledge. He becomes a lover of books, and great books tell us of God and truth. The attitude of the Prophet Joseph Smith alone in reference to study and the gaining of knowledge from books is one of the sublime truths of his life. He had the spirit of learning, a thing we need in our schools today.

The gospel of Jesus Christ will yet appeal to millions; yes, it will be seen and known in all the world. The future is lighted for us with the radiant colors of hope. Strife and sorrow will disappear. Peace and love will reign supreme sometime. The lesson of prophets, the dream of poets and musicians is confirmed in the light of modern knowledge, and as we gird ourselves for the work of life, my brethren and sisters, today and tomorrow, we may look forward to the time when in the truest sense the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever as King of kings, and Lord of lords.

That is the great ideal of the future of the members of this Church, of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and that we may know it, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Levi Edgar Young, Senior President of the First Council of Seventy, has just concluded speaking. Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin of the Presiding Bishopric will now speak to us.

BISHOP JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

Presiding Bishop of the Church

RESIDENT MCKAY, my beloved brethren and sisters; I sincerely trust that the Lord may bless me in the endeavor to express to you one or two thoughts that I have in connection with my belief that we are in the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ established through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

In thinking of the Prophet Joseph Smith, there comes to mind a great statement made in the Doctrine and Covenants, section four, wherein the Lord said this to the Prophet:

Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men. (vs. 1.)

That was given to the Prophet in 1829. In 1830, the Church was organized with but six members. The Prophet lost his life in 1844, at which time there were in the Church approximately forty to forty-five thousand members, an indication to me, and I am sure to you, that when the Lord said to the Prophet, "Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men"—the men who heard of that great revelation accepted it, and the result, as I said, was that there were between forty and forty-five thousand who were members of the Church when the Prophet lost his life.

It is most inspiring to me to know that the Church was in existence for fourteen years when the Prophet died, and when you think of the accomplishment in that period of time, there is no question but what the Prophet Joseph was being inspired by the Lord in building up the kingdom.

From that time on, after the death of the Prophet, it was necessary for the Church to leave Nauvoo and come into the tops of these mountains where we now exist. Brigham Young became the President, and during his period there were approximately 150,000 members; in the time of President John Taylor, approximately 200,000; in the time of President Wilford Woodruff, approximately 250,000; in the days of President Lorenzo Snow, approximately 278,645; in the days of President Joseph F. Smith, approximately 495,960; in the days of President Heber J. Grant, approximately 979,454; and in the days of President George Albert Smith, approximately 1,111,314 members. Today, in the day of President David O. McKay, there are approximately, in 1954, 1,302,240.

This again proves to us, as the Lord said through the Prophet Joseph, "Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men." And the children of men have accepted it from that day until this day, and are accepting it as it is being taught to them by missionaries and others who are bringing to them the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I think of the great work of President David O. McKay. In 1952, President McKay visited eleven nations. In 1953, President McKay selected sites for two new temples—one of which, of course, has already been prepared and dedicated, you know, in far-off Switzerland, and another one soon is to be built in Great Britain. In addition, in 1954, President David O. McKay covered 50,000 air miles, visiting eight nations in Europe, South Africa, and South America. In 1955, President McKay visited seven nations in the South Pacific, including Hawaii, Samoa, Australia, and New Zealand, and at the same time selected a site for a temple in New Zealand; all of which again is evidence of the fact that the Lord did reveal to the Prophet Joseph that a great and a marvelous work was about to be taught and sent forth among men.

In 1893, President Woodruff made this statement as he dedicated the Salt Lake Temple, "That from this time on, the power of the evil one would be broken and that the enemy would have less power over the Saints." How true that is! When we go back into the history of this great Church, from 1893 until now, we find that the power of the evil one has become weak; and therefore, it has been possible to go out and preach the gospel in the world. When you stop to think, the Prophet Joseph lost his life through the power of Satan; and the Saints were driven from Nauvoo to this country because of the power of the evil one; and from that time until 1893, there was difficulty and suffering for our people; nevertheless, as the Lord said to the Prophet Joseph, "Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men."—and the children of men have accepted the same, even though the Prophet was murdered; and the Church has grown and exists to the point now to where we have, as I said, over 1,302,000 members.

It is marvelous to know that in this day and age we have more missionaries out in the world than ever before, preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. There will be more, and the time will come when mankind will listen to what the Prophet said in the establishment of the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I also, brethren and sisters, would like to say this, that each and every one of us has great responsibilities because we belong to the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Lord said this through the Prophet Joseph to us:

Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day.

Therefore, if ye have desires to serve God ye are called to the work;

For behold the field is white already to harvest; and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perisheth not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; (Ibid., 4:2-4.)

Actually, if we have the faith in our hearts that this is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ and desire to serve the Lord, we can only do it through the work—through the results of our efforts in building up the kingdom and making it strong, so strong that the world will accept the great truths as they are being forwarded to them through our missionaries, and as has been done through our Prophet in the last two or three years.

I accept what the Lord said through the Prophet to us, in speaking about what we should do, and what our attitude should be:

And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

Then he went on to say:

Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.

Ask, and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Amen. (Ibid., 4:5-7.)

There is no question in my mind that when an individual who, in his heart, desires to serve God and live the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and prays to the Lord, he will receive the blessings of the Lord according to what his needs are. I think of the words of the Lord, too, wherein he said this: "The glory of God is intelligence, . . ." (Ibid., 93:36.)

What a marvelous opportunity we all have in this great Church where the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ teach us the gospel! Therein we do receive the knowledge of the glory of God. "The glory of God is intelligence, . . ." (Ibid., 93:36) which intelligence we can use in our lives from day to day. Surely it becomes the glory of God unto us.

In my testimony I feel as did the apostle of old, when Paul said:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. . . . (Rom. 1:16.)

I would make one addition, and I might say, I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation revealed to us and given to us through the Prophet Joseph and every one of the Apostles who has lived from that day until this time.

I am grateful for the testimony I have that this is the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ. I am grateful for the testimony that I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, and every President of the Church has been a prophet of God—has been an apostle. I am grateful for the opportunity of the services that are rendered through the power of the priesthood, for with our priesthood, brethren and sisters, we have many responsibilities and many opportunities to help build up the kingdom. I leave you my humble testimony that this is the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, that Joseph Smith was indeed a Prophet of God. There is no question about it: This is the work of God. May we do all within our power to continue to build it up, and therein enjoy all of the blessings that the Lord will give us as we go forward in his behalf, I humbly ask, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

I know I express your feelings when I say that we are grateful to hear Bishop Wirthlin speak with his characteristic energy and faith. The Lord bless him, and continue to bless him that he may continue in the great work he is performing.

The Presiding Bishopric will conduct a special meeting in the Tabernacle tonight, beginning at seven o'clock. The meeting will feature the Aaronic Priesthood program. The following leaders are invited to be in attendance: stake presidencies, high councilmen, bishoprics, members of stake and ward Aaronic Priesthood committees, and all other leaders interested in the Aaronic Priesthood program—in the Tabernacle tonight at seven o'clock.

The singing for this session has been furnished by the choir organized and composed of our German speaking Saints, led by Elder Heinz Rimmasch, with Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ. We are truly thankful for their inspirational singing this day. What a blessing their songs have been, and the way they have been rendered. The song of the righteous, truly is a prayer unto the Lord.

We thank you members of the choir and your leaders. Less than three weeks ago, it was our privilege to meet several hundred of your countrymen, perhaps some of your relatives, and I feel impressed in their behalf to thank you for representing them so inspirationally, and I express the appreciation of all who have listened in as well as those who have been here this morning and this afternoon.

The Choir will now sing, "The Lord Bless You and Keep You," following which the benediction will be offered by Elder Harry E. McClure. After the benediction this Conference will be adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning. President McClure was formerly president of the Gridley Stake. At the present time he is a member of the Church Building Committee.

Singing by the Choir, "The Lord Bless You and Keep You."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Harry E. McClure. Conference adjourned until Saturday, October 1 at 10:00 a.m.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

The third session of the Conference was held in the Tabernacle Saturday morning, October 1, at 10 o'clock, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting.

The music for this session was furnished by the M.I.A. Chorus from the Salt Lake Valley stakes, with Elvis B. Terry conducting. Roy M. Darley was at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

Several requests have been received this morning for announcements. All announcements will be made on the bulletin board of the Bureau of Information.

The poet has asked, "What is so rare as a day in June? Then, if ever, come perfect days."

I think we can paraphrase that and say, "What is so rare as a day in October in Utah?" This beautiful sunshine this morning, the hills bedecked in the autumn colors, all nature seems to be at peace. This is, indeed, a glorious occasion, and a glorious state.

The third session of the 126th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is convened in the Salt Lake Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

We welcome all present in the Tabernacle, which is filled to overflowing, and announce that over flow meetings are held in the Assembly Hall and in the Barratt Hall, and that 13 Radio Stations in Utah, Idaho, Nevada, Colorado, Arizona, and California are broadcasting the messages and proceedings of this Conference. There is a special television cable installation showing in four chapels in Pocatello, Idaho. The names of the stations broadcasting the proceedings have already been announced to the radio audience. We express appreciation for the presence of prominent national and state officials, and educational leaders in our own state.

The singing for this session will be furnished by the Mutual Improvement Association Chorus from the Salt Lake Valley stakes, with Elder Elvis B. Terry conducting, and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

We shall begin these services by the Mutual Improvement Association Chorus singing, "The Morning Breaks."

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Oral J. Wilkinson, President of the Murray Stake.

The M.I.A. Chorus sang the hymn, "The Morning Breaks."

Elder Oral J. Wilkinson, President of the Murray Stake, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was offered by Elder Oral J. Wilkinson, president of the Murray Stake. The Mutual Improvement Association Chorus from Salt Lake Valley stakes will now favor us with "Break Forth, O Beauteous Heavenly Light."

I wish all who are listening in could see this beautiful choir, made up of the young people of these stakes. You television operators, just let the observers see the overflow from the choir seats into the gallery on each side—an impressive illustration of the interest of youth.

Singing by the Chorus, "Break Forth, O Beauteous Heavenly Light."

President David O. McKay:

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, will now give the vital statistical data, the changes in ward and stake organizations, and the obituaries of the Church.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I SUPPOSE THERE are members in the congregation and who are listening in who are anxious to know something about their boys who are in the service of the country in the Far East; and others who are anxious to know about their sons serving in the mission fields in that section of the world. I will have more to say about that as I continue. I wish to make a brief report of what was accomplished in the mission assigned to me to the Far East.

Monday, July 25, accompanied by my wife, Herald Grant Heaton and his wife and baby, and a group of missionaries, I arrived in Tokyo, Japan. The first two days were spent in visits to military quarters with the chiefs of staff, all of whom received us kindly.

Wednesday the 27th, conference convened in Karuizawa in Japan and was held for three days with the missionaries of the Japanese Mission and servicemen who were able to attend. At that conference the division of the Japanese Mission was presented, renaming the northern part composed of Korea, Japan, and Okinawa, the Northern Far East Mission, and the southern part, composed of Formosa, Hong Kong, the Philippine Islands, and Guam, the Southern Far East Mission, with Herald Grant Heaton as president, Hilton A. Robertson remaining as president of the Northern Far East Mission. He had been presiding over all that territory before the division.

At this conference, for the first time, a vote was taken by those assembled to approve the division of the mission and other action which was taken. This vote was received unanimously in the affirmative, and every place we went and held conference from that time on, the same procedure was carried out, so that the members of the Church in each place had an opportunity to vote on the matter of creating two missions out of what was the Japanese Mission.

Now the term Japanese Mission hardly suited the situation, for it was not just Japan that was concerned. Therefore, they readily accepted the change and that the northern part be called the Northern Far East Mission, taking in Korea, Japan, and Okinawa.

Monday, August 1, Presidents Robertson and Heaton, Colonel Robert H. Slover, Captain Hildebrand, and I left Japan for Korea, arriving in Seoul that afternoon. Of course you realize we could only do that by going by air, and all of our traveling after reaching Japan was by air.

Tuesday afternoon, August 2, on a hill overlooking Seoul and in the presence of a small group, I dedicated the land of Korea for the preaching of the gospel and the establishment of the work of the kingdom of God. We held meetings with the Saints in Seoul and also with the servicemen. I will give these details, and then, if time will permit, I wish to say something about the servicemen and the missionaries.

Wednesday we went to Munsani-ni. We held a meeting there on the borders of the land separating North from South Korea. On Thursday following, we returned to Seoul, attended to some business there, and then took plane for Pusan and held meetings with members of the Church and servicemen there.

In Korea at Seoul and at Pusan, I ordained men to offices in the Aaronic Priesthood, ordaining some priests, some deacons, so that these good people could hold their meetings and administer the sacrament. Also I set apart Dr. Kim Ho Jik, the only elder in Korea, as president of the Korean District of the mission, and gave to him as counselors, Elder Frederick Shumway, who was in the service of the country in that part of the country, and later Houk Yung Gil, a native, as second counselor.

Returning to Japan we held meetings in Osaka and Tokyo.

August 11, President Robertson, his wife, Sister Smith, and I, left Japan for Okinawa. President Heaton had previously left for Hong Kong. On the island of Okinawa we located a site for a building. On Sunday, August 14, in the presence of a large group of members, I dedicated the island of Okinawa, as we had done the land of Korea, for the establishment of the work of the Lord in that island.

Monday, the fifteenth we parted from Colonel Robert H. Slover, who had accompanied us in all of our travels up to that point, and took a plane for Hong Kong, and there were met by President Heaton. In Hong Kong, before a small group of members, we presented the matter of the division of the mission and the sustaining of Herald Grant Heaton as President of the Southern Far East Mission, which was enthusiastically received.

Friday evening, August 19, we parted company with President and Sister Robertson who returned to Japan, and President Heaton and wife, my wife and I left for Manila, Philippine Islands. We arrived at 10:30 p.m. and were met by a number of servicemen and E. M. Grimm, better known as "Pete," who was very kind to us and placed at our service an automobile and driver, two automobiles and drivers when necessary, for our entire stay in the Philippine Islands, and in other ways he was very kind and looked after many of our interests.

Sunday, August 21, 1955, at a beautiful grove in Clark Military Field, I dedicated the Philippine Islands as I had done Korea and Okinawa.

Tuesday, August 23, we left at 10:30 p.m. for the Island of Guam where we arrived the next morning. We remained in Guam, holding meetings with Saints and servicemen until the morning of Friday, August 26, when we took our leave and by plane arrived in Honolulu, Friday morning, August 26, at 4:45 a.m.

Before leaving, however, on August 25, in the presence of a large congregation of members, I dedicated the Island of Guam, thus dedicating Korea, Okinawa, the Philippines, and Guam while on this mission to the Far East.

I want to say a few words of commendation for some of these brethren in the Far East who are doing a wonderful work: first, Colonel Robert H. Slover, chairman of the servicemen's co-ordinating committee in those lands, a vigorous, energetic, faithful man in the service of the country, devoting his time to our servicemen, attending to the details and looking after the interests of the young men in the service in a most thorough manner.

He is assisted by Captain Clain Smith, Major LeRoy Walker, Corporal Mark Frazer, and with these I must also mention Elder Rodney W. Fye, who is serving in the intelligence department of the Army in Korea, who has done a wonderful work for our young men in Korea. He is a very outstanding young man. Also, I wish to mention Elder Youngberg in Okinawa, presiding in the branch; Blain Elmer in the Philippines where we do not have members, but who is looking after the interests of our servicemen there, and Victor A. Olsen in Guam.

Now I want to say to you mothers, particularly, fathers, too, who have sons in the mission field in any of these Eastern countries—(Well, we have no missionaries in some of these places yet.) If your sons are called to go to the Far East to labor among the Japanese people, the Korean people, the people on these islands of the Far Pacific, do not feel disappointed. Do not feel sorry and wish that they had been appointed to some European country or somewhere within the borders of the United States or the South Pacific. These people in these lands who have joined the Church are just as good as we are. Those people in those Far East countries are human beings, with like feelings and passions. They can love and they can hate just as you and I may love and hate. When they receive the gospel of Jesus Christ, they are just as good as we are.

I could not help, when I met with them and took them by the hand and looked into their countenances, but feel that I could and did love them. They are the people of God, just as the people are anywhere else on the face of the earth who receive the truth, and they can bear testimony of the truth, as I have heard them do, as the people can do in any of the stakes and wards of Zion.

Do not feel disappointed. The missionaries do not feel disappointed unless perchance they never received the spirit of their mission. You fathers and mothers who have sons serving in the forces, be proud of them. They are fine young men. Some of our servicemen are converts, who have been brought into the Church by the teachings, by precept and by example—principally by example by the members of the Church who are also serving with them in the forces.

I met a number of young men who said, "We came in the Church because of the lives of these young men and because they taught us the principles of the gospel."

They are doing a good work. There might be one or two that may be careless, but those young men with whom I had the privilege of meeting, talking to, would bear their testimony of the truth and were walking humbly.

And as I met with the officers and chaplains (and unfortunately, at this time, we have no chaplain of the Church there), but when I met with them, universally they said, "We like your young men. They are clean. They are dependable."

One of these chaplains, when I was talking with him, said, "I keep two of these young men of your faith with me all the time. If I lose one of them, if he is called away, I get another." While I was talking with him, a young man came in with a message, and when he was in there, he held out his hand and said, "I am Brother so-and-so. (I do not remember his name now.)" He received the instruction given him and departed. A little later another one came. He likewise was a member of the Church. This man, not a member of the Church, said, "I keep them with me all the time because they are dependable."

Be proud of your boys. Be proud of your young men in the mission field. That is a good field, and those people are entitled to hear the truth just as well as the people of Europe or of any other part of this world. These people who are living and laboring among them are happy. I saw none that was discontented.

The Spirit of the Lord is leading them. The doors are opening for them to preach the gospel.

Now just one more word that I would like to say. This comes a little close to me; nevertheless I want to say it. Sister Smith's singing everywhere we went was a great help. When she could not go to Korea, we took a record of "The King of Glory," and we were able to broadcast the recording from the military grounds so it could be heard all over the city; so her voice was heard there, although she was not privileged to accompany me.

It was a glorious visit. I think we accomplished some good.

Brother Heaton, a young man, full of energy and astonishingly full of knowledge, knows those people in the Far East and loves them, and he will be successful in his mission field.

The Lord bless you, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

That interesting report of the expansion of the Church in the Far East, a significant epoch in Church history, to which you have just listened, was given by President Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. We shall now hear Brother Sterling W. Sill, Assistant to the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Marion D. Hanks.

ELDER STERLING W. SILL

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MUCH HAS BEEN said at this conference about the life and mission of the Master. I pray that what I may say will not detract from that which has already been said.

After that long awful night of betrayal and trial, Jesus was brought before Pilate. Pilate believed that Jesus was innocent of any wrong and made a weak attempt to try and save his life by taking advantage of one of his privileges as Roman governor to release a prisoner to the Jews at the time of the Passover. Pilate had in his custody a noted insurrectionist and murderer by the name of Barabbas, and probably relying upon the sense of fairness of the Jews that certainly they would not consent to the release of this notorious criminal and punish an innocent man, Pilate said, "Whom shall I release unto you—Barabbas or Jesus which is called Christ?" (See Matt. 27:21.) And Pilate must have been startled to hear them say, "Barabbas."

He said, "Then what shall I do with Jesus?" And the Jews replied, "Let him be crucified." Pilate said, "Shall I crucify your king?" And they said, "We have no king but Caesar."

Then Pilate took water and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, "... I am innocent of the blood of this just man: see ye to it." And the Jews said, "... His blood be upon us and on our children. Then Barabbas was released and Jesus was delivered to be crucified." (See Matt. 27:24-26.)

We might safely assume that both Pilate and the Jews felt that they had permanently settled any question which may have arisen in connection with the life of Christ—Pilate by merely washing his hands, and the Jews by putting to death the very Son of God.

But there is a peculiar relationship which exists between the life of Jesus Christ and every other soul born into the world. In that great period of our pre-existence, Jesus was appointed and ordained to be the Savior of the world and the Redeemer of men, and there is no other name given by which man can be saved. What Pilate and the Jews did to Jesus did not alter that relationship in the slightest degree, either for them or for us. For Jesus also bore our sins, and we are therefore party to his suffering and his atonement.

In our lives we are forced to make many decisions. By our answers to life's questions, we determine our own destiny. James Russell Lowell wrote some significant lines entitled, "The Present Crisis." He says—

Once to every man and nation
Comes a moment to decide
In the strife of truth and falsehood
For the good or evil side.

Some great cause, God's new Messiah
Offering each the bloom or blight
Parts the goats upon the left hand
And the sheep upon the right.

And the choice goes on forever
'Twixt the darkness and the light.

Certainly the greatest question to be decided by any man during his lifetime is the one suggested by Pilate, "What shall I do with Jesus?" The Jews made their decision. They said, "His blood be upon us and on our children," and so it has been. And so it may be with us because the question is still before us, and each must answer for himself.

For Jesus is standing on trial still.
You may be false to him if you will.
Or you may serve him through good or ill.
What will you do with Jesus?

You may evade him as Pilate tried
Or you may serve him whate'er betide.
Vainly you'll struggle from him to hide
What will you do with Jesus?

What will you do with Jesus?
Neutral you cannot be,
And someday your soul may be asking—
What will he do with me?

One of the best methods for solving a problem is to weigh carefully each of the alternatives. In this case there seem to be three. The first is that we may follow the example of the Jews and reject him and thereby, as Paul says, we crucify unto ourselves the Son of God afresh. Such a course is unthinkable. But much of what the Jews did, they did in ignorance. Upon the cross Jesus said, "... Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." (Luke 23:34.) The Jews didn't really understand what they were doing when they put to death the Savior of the world. Pilate didn't know that this young peasant carpenter standing before him was in very deed the great Jehovah who had created the earth.

But we might ask ourselves this question. Why didn't they know? There is probably only one answer: They lacked the honest effort, earnest inquiry, and humble prayer necessary to find the truth. But in large measure, we make exactly the same mistakes. When we absent ourselves from sacrament meeting, we don't really understand what we are doing. When we fail to pay our tithing or when we are married "until death do us part," we know not what we do. It is our ignorance as well as our sins that stands between us and our salvation.

If the Jews suffered so great a penalty for their sins committed largely in ignorance, what about us? We have all of the information that the Jews had, but in addition we have the judgment of time shining upon the life of Christ. We have the testimony of the apostles bearing witness to his divinity and sealing their testimony with their blood.

But in addition, a great flood of new knowledge has come into the world. In the early spring of 1820, God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ reappeared upon the earth to re-establish among men a belief in God. Besides this, we have been given three great volumes of new scripture outlining and explaining in every detail the simple principles of the gospel. If we lose our way, it will be by our own choice and not because we can't know the truth, except, if like the Jews, we fail to be sufficiently thoughtful and diligent, thereby exposing ourselves to the risk of "ignorantly" rejecting our personal Savior and with him our chances for eternal exaltation.

The second alternative of this question, "What shall I do with Jesus?" is that we may try to be neutral, and believe neither one thing nor the other. That is impossible, for either God is, or God is not. There is no middle ground. It is all or nothing. We either accept him by design or we reject him by default. For when we fail to decide a question one way, we automatically decide it the other way. That is, when we fail to decide to get on the train, we automatically decide to stay off the train.

Yet there is a group of people who insist on trying to maintain this damaging neutrality. It isn't merely that they don't believe; their skepticism goes deeper. They don't give it a thought one way or the other. There is one thing more serious than merely to "not believe," and that is to "not care."

It has been said that there is one folly greater than that of the fool who says in his heart there is no God, and that is the folly of him who says he doesn't know whether there is a God or not. Thereby he is guilty of unbelief rather than disbelief, and unbelief is usually a confession that one has not made sufficient honest inquiry necessary to find the truth.

If a man should err in believing the gospel of Jesus Christ to be true, he could not possibly be the loser by the mistake. But how irreparable is his loss who should err in supposing the revelations of God to be false. There are many people who try to dispose of this question, "What shall I do with Jesus?" by saying that he was merely a great teacher. This is certainly a poor substitute for knowing the truth. It is also pretty dangerous, for as has been said:

Suppose there is a Christ, but that I should be Christless;
Suppose there is a cleansing, but that I should remain unclean;
Suppose there is a Heavenly Father's love, but that I should remain an alien;
Suppose there is a heaven, but that I should be cast down to hell.

It has been said that "Man's greatest unkindness to man is not to hate him but to be indifferent to him." "He who is indifferent to his friend is unkind to his friend. But he who is indifferent to his Savior is unmerciful unto himself."

Our third alternative to this question of "What shall I do with Jesus?" is that we may accept him. We may accept him eagerly and enthusiastically. We may fill our minds with his word, and consecrate our lives to his service. We have his own counsel on this question. In our own day he has said,

O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day. (D & C 4:2.)

Each of us has been complimented by being reserved to live upon the earth in this greatest of all dispensations. We live when a great flood tide of wonders and knowledge and accomplishment has been released in the world. Our forefathers lived on a flat, stationary earth and plowed their ground with wooden sticks. But we live on an earth of power steering and jet propulsion. Noah preached the gospel for many years and failed to bring conversion to a single person outside his own family. Even in the dispensation of Jesus, less than one hundred years had passed before the apostles had all been put to death and the world was well on its way into darkness of complete apostasy.

But we live in a time when "the field is white already to harvest." We have examples of stake missionaries who have brought conversion into the lives of five or ten or twenty human souls in a single year, and as Samuel Walter Foss cried, "Give me men to match my mountains," so the Church is crying for men to match the great opportunities of the present day.

In 1932 Walter Pitkin wrote a book entitled Life Begins at Forty. But life begins every morning. Life begins when we begin, and our real progress begins when we accept God's answer to that greatest question of our lives, "What shall we do with Jesus?"

May our Heavenly Father inspire us to get the right answer before it is too late, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION D. HANKS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

HUMBLY PRAY for direction and inspiration in these few moments. It seems to me that I am almost under compulsion to abandon that which I might have said, and in view of this warm and heartwarming sermon by President Joseph Fielding Smith and in view of the presence here of this magnificent group of young people, add my testimony and an expression of my conviction to that which has been said.

Memory is a beautiful and wonderful thing. As President Smith named this morning the places he had been and some of the events of his missionary adventures, my heart responded as many of yours must have to the enumeration of places familiar to many of us under circumstances very different from the mission which motivated him. I thought specifically of one island he did not visit but which might well be some day the subject of such a mission, where 5300 American boys gave their lives in order that the cause which they represented might be successful.

It was of one of those boys that I thought this morning, and as President Smith spoke, I tried to remember and write down a few words I once memorized which came from the pen of one of the American boys who died in the battle of Iwo Jima.

This twenty-year-old, (and I know nothing of him save that), was one of the 5300. In a little ten-cent notebook dated 18 February 1945, the day of his great adventure, he wrote his last will and testament—a short and incisive thing. He might have written about many different subjects. After all, he was only twenty. He was on an island he had never heard of, I suppose, before war took him there. I assume he might have had in his heart some resistance to what awaited him. He might have been thinking about home and loved ones; but what he wrote seems to me to have been inspired of God. These are the words as I remember them, and I think they are right.

"This is the time for new revelation. People don't think much about religion nowadays, but we need a voice from on high, brother, and I don't mean maybe. This thing has got out of human ability to run. I'm no religious fanatic, but we are in a situation where something better than human brains has got to give us advice."

This was the last will and testament of a twenty-year-old boy who died with the thought in his mind that the predicament mankind had worked themselves into was one which only divine help might solve. He cried for new revelation, for a voice from on high, for a voice of spiritual authority. I wondered when I first read it which of those whom I knew and loved and lost had answered his cry—whether it be Marsden or Elwin or Ray or Chick or David or one of many others—I wonder which one has told him, as surely one of them has, that the voice of spiritual authority has been and is being heard in our very day. The voice from on high has spoken to man, a voice which has proclaimed that God in truth does live, that Jesus is in truth his divinely Begotten Son who lived to teach us how to live, and died to save us; that there is a plan which God himself has made available to his beloved children, obedience to which will bring us the blessings which we might as his children naturally expect if we are obedient to his will, and which will ultimately exalt us in that condition of beauty and glory which will allow us eternally to work, to grow, to learn, to love, to live with him who is our Father.

Saturday, October 1

As I have traveled through this Church, I have been blessed on many occasions with experiences like those of President Smith, as have all of these other brethren. This morning the name of Biloxi, Mississippi, was read as a ward in the recently organized New Orleans Stake. In Biloxi, some few of you will know, there stands a magnificent chapel erected at the cost of about $75,000, and that chapel was almost one hundred percent built and paid for by dedicated Latter-day Saint servicemen. I had the blessing of dedicating the building, and afterwards talked with a humble young fellow. I asked him what he was doing and how he was enjoying the service, and he said, "I do not enjoy the service so much, but I am enjoying service in the Church." He told me that he was a stake missionary.

I said, "Have you had any success?" "Oh, some," he said. "We have baptized eight this year—my companion and I—and we have some other good possibilities."

As we moved to Pensacola, we found a young navy officer active as one of the district presidency, traveling with two of his wonderful young companions in the service from branch to branch, bearing witness of the truth, stimulating the saints, and doing the work that needs to be done. Almost everywhere we have gone—San Antonio, Los Angeles, Washington, D. C., and elsewhere—we have found the same dedication and the same basic loyalty to the Lord.

Now to you wonderful young people who are here behind me, and to all others, may I say that there are those who would seek to make a "deal" with you, in the vernacular of our day, who would invite you to trade your faith, your self-respect, your loyalty to the Lord, for some of the enticements of this day—for education or wealth, for social preference, for political prominence or business success, for acceptability at school, for improper indulgence, for any of the others of the enticements which allure.

May I say to you that there is nothing in this world worth having which you need to give up to be a good Latter-day Saint. If wealth or education, social preference or political prominence, power in your profession—if these are what you want, my testimony, and I get it traveling through the Church among the wonderful people of this faith, is that you may be anything you want to be worth being, and a believing, faithful Latter-day Saint.

There was a writer who said: "People who take off their religion to be educated or wealthy or socially accepted are like the man who took off his boots to walk in a briar-patch."

If ever you need the Spirit of God, if ever you need faith and loyalty to his way, it is while you are educated (and the Church encourages you to become so); it is while you have wealth (which may come to you if you seek it honestly and use it wisely); it is while you are politically prominent or socially accepted; it is while, in your school activities and achievements, you find occasions for leadership.

I think, as I conclude, of a wonderful young man—perhaps the only Latter-day Saint in a leading university in a great southern state—who was the president of the student body, editor of Law Review, one of the outstanding young men of the nation. His studies had perhaps been interfered with a little by having to go from dormitory to dormitory in answer to requests to talk about the Church and the gospel, but he had done it consistently, had lived his religion loyally, and had been an intelligent, and faithful representative of the Church.

I think of a few weeks ago in Logan when a fine young man bore testimony in our conference before returning to Columbia College, where he is serving as student body president of that great school. He said he had been offered a graduate scholarship when he was finished, and hoped it would still be available after he had served a mission. There are many, many similar cases throughout the Church. No Latter-day Saint young person needs to sacrifice anything important to be a real member of the Church. Remember that there are many wonderful people, old and young—like the boy on Iwo—who desperately seek what you have, or may have if you desire it and seek it and live for it.

I bear testimony that God lives, and that this is his work, and if I know anything in the world it is that obedience to his law brings happiness, and the opposite—disobedience—brings unhappiness, of which I testify in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Marion D. Hanks of the First Council of Seventy has just spoken to us. Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve, will now address us.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS, I am very happy for the privilege of standing before you for a moment, to express my gratitude for the fine things we have heard and seen at this general conference of the Church. This morning at 7:30 in the Assembly Hall we held a welfare meeting. We heard something about cattle, beef cattle, and dairy cattle, and how to manage farms, especially the welfare farms. This instruction was given by experts from the Utah State Agricultural College. When they had given their talks, President Clark made some observations. President Clark, you may know, is a farmer and a cattleman in his own right—if he can qualify for that distinction, by working two or three hours on Saturday afternoon on his farm. We were greatly edified.

It reminded me of the funeral service which was held up in the Bear Lake country for Brother Hyrum Nebeker, also a cattleman. Prior to his death he had selected the hymns he wanted sung at the service. Among them was the well-known hymn we sing so frequently, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet." He also requested that everyone in the gathering join in singing this hymn, not only the choir, but those also who sat on the front seats, and the entire congregation. Seldom does one hear a song sung with more feeling than was done on this occasion. Everyone sang, and all seemed to feel the spirit and the significance of this great hymn.

I thought of the statement made by someone who said, "Tell me the ballads a people sing, and I will tell you their character." I hope the Latter-day Saints will be judged by the songs they sing on occasions like this. This hymn, in particular, suggested guidance, prophetic guidance. Guidance is a beautiful word, it is a meaningful word. We all need to be guided and directed and inspired in our work and in our responsibilities.

I recall a poem I learned as a boy;

Hand in hand with angels through the world we go;
Brighter eyes are on us than we blind ones know;
Tenderer voices greet us than we deaf will own;
But never walking heav'nward can we walk alone.

Those who dislike guidance, it seems to me, lack in humility. Jesus believed in guidance. I read a verse from the Gospels:

... when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come. (John 16:13.)

Mark the words "he will guide you into all truth . . . and he will shew you things to come." Of all the leaders who have lived upon the earth, only Jesus, the Lord, could make a promise like that. These words are tremendously important and reassuring, especially to those who are striving for a better life.

Christ's plan of salvation came to light gradually through holy prophets. Back of them is Jesus Christ, the light of the world, and the greatest of all the prophets. His gospel is the beacon light. The voice of the prophets is the voice of God to generations past, present, and future. These prophets came as they were needed. They were chosen before they were born. Their messages were always vital, important, and timely. Their testimonies were strong and fervent. They called people to repentance. They rebuked sin in high places. Their mission was to purify and regenerate the human family and to turn the hearts of men to God, who is the Creator, the Ruler, and the Giver of life. These living oracles seldom argued. They announced and interpreted God's will and made no compromise whatever with worldly standards and patterns, however glowing and colorful they might appear.

You will realize the significance of Paul's question put to Agrippa and the others: "Believest thou the prophets?" Paul believed the prophets. He quoted their words to justify and substantiate his claims. I am convinced that the warnings and admonitions of the prophets, had they been duly regarded and respected, would have transformed the world, and evil forces operative in public and private life, now and in the past, would have been far less powerful.

We believe in prophets. We believe the only safe course for us is to follow the admonition of the prophets. Said Jesus:

Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city. (Matt. 23:34.)

And then his concluding words: "That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, . . ." (Ibid., v. 35.) The deniers of God's servants were to answer for their repudiation of the prophets. Had the Jews believed John the Baptist and heeded his admonitions, many people (more than did), would have believed on Jesus the Christ. But they rejected him and maligned him. He was put in prison, like his predecessors, and finally put to death, but they could not entirely destroy his influence nor his memory. The common people, the meek and the lowly, listened. They heard his words and accepted his divine calling and followed him. But the magistrates and the rulers, the high and the mighty, the professional religionists, were not among the multitude which followed him to the River Jordan, but Jesus came, and Jesus was baptized by this great prophet, the greatest of all the prophets, said Jesus, born of women. (See Luke 7:28.)

These prophets were not dreamers, they were not visionary men—they were practical men. They saw the present and the future needs of the people to whom they were sent.

President Brigham Young, for instance, was a great prophet and more than a prophet. He was called to a great responsibility. It was not unlike that which fell upon Moses, the law-giver of Israel, during the years of exodus from Egypt. Both of them were deeply concerned with the spiritual and temporal welfare of their people.

Looking back over the magnificent achievements of Brigham Young and those who followed, we can picture the tragic exodus of covered wagons and handcart companies. Every day was a challenge, and every night a hazard, full of danger and uncertainty. But the sturdy and unconquerable pioneers, under their prophet, never faltered; they pressed forward to their destination. On their arrival, they beheld a barren wasteland, covered with sagebrush and possessed by the savage Indians. What did this modern prophet do? He made friends with the Indians. He cultivated the soil, and he irrigated the fields.

Prophets came as they were needed. May we, you and I, heed the prophets who live today. May we be guided by their inspiring instruction, and may we undertake with them to build up God's kingdom upon the earth, and eventually be worthy of an exaltation in that kingdom, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. The congregation will now sing, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," conducted by Elvis B. Terry.

After the singing Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson will speak to us.

The congregation and Choir will now sing.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For A Prophet."

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric will now speak to us, and our concluding speaker will be Elder Harold B. Lee.

BISHOP THORPE B. ISAACSON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

PRESIDENT MCKAY, President Richards, President Clark, my beloved brethren and sisters, and friends: I feel very humble in standing before you this morning, and after a great deal of worrying and fasting and praying, I hope the Lord will bless me. I shall be grateful for an interest in your faith and prayers.

I would like to thank my wife now because I did not do it this morning, when she was kind enough to offer a very beautiful prayer in my behalf. I was too touched then to do it, but I would not feel right if I did not do it now.

I had prepared one or two thoughts, but they have been so beautifully treated already that I do not feel I could possibly add anything to them. I was going back again to an experience I had on the Hill of Calvary, mentioned by President Clark so beautifully yesterday, Brother Sill today, and Brother Sonne just now. I shall not say more on that. So I shall entirely rely on the Spirit of the Lord to guide me today, in what I might say.

It is good to see many in the audience whom we meet in stakes as we come to you each Sunday in stake conferences. Many times we come to you as total strangers, but after we have been with you for a couple of days, we feel as if we have known you forever. After we leave, even though we have held many meetings and are tired physically, we are uplifted in our spirits and our faith because of your great devotion to the gospel of Jesus Christ and to the responsibilities to which you have been called.

We are grateful for your thoughtfulness and for your kindness and courtesy to us. We are grateful to you for your encouragement. I cannot help expressing deep affection and appreciation for the stake presidents of this Church and for the ward bishoprics, for we see your great devotion. You so frequently put aside your own personal interests because of your responsibilities in the Church, and particularly among the young people of the Church.

I wish you could have all been at the meeting in the temple Thursday morning where the General Authorities were invited and privileged to meet with the First Presidency. When President McKay was speaking to us and sharing with us his experiences recently in Europe, I could not help thinking of a passage or statement that Brigham Young once made when he was referring to the humble man who converted him to the Church. He said something like this, "His spirit bore witness to my spirit, and I believed." That morning in the temple it was as if the Spirit of the Lord was speaking to the President of the Church and prophet of the Lord, and his Spirit bore witness to our spirits, and we believed.

I cannot help thinking you are partaking of that same Spirit in this conference, because it has carried over into the conference so beautifully, and we have all felt that Spirit. What is that Spirit? It is the Spirit of our Heavenly Father, and we are privileged to enjoy that Spirit through the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost, for which I am sure all members of the Church are very grateful.

Sometime ago it was my privilege to visit one of the army camps, a large post of the government where many of our Latter-day Saint boys are stationed. Many of them are stationed there for their entire time in the army. Because they are stationed there for such a long time, many of them are privileged to bring their wives and children to live at the post.

I attended their Sunday evening service, and when I entered that chapel hall, it was filled to capacity. It was a thrill to see all those Latter-day Saint boys dressed in their military uniforms, and in the main accompanied by their wonderful wives, and in many instances, their new babies.

I wish all the parents of those boys could have looked in on them that night and listened to some of them speak. The brotherhood that existed in that group is not often found in the world. Those men loved one another. They were living with each other and praying for each other. I saw many of the young men in that audience whose fathers I know. I saw some of the young married women with their babies whose parents I know. You would have been very proud of them. They told me that there was seldom a time when any of our Latter-day Saint boys ever missed this Sunday service. President Joseph Fielding Smith just now told us that our servicemen are doing a great work for their country and for their Church. Of this I am confident.

After that wonderful meeting where we were all spiritually uplifted, a young man came up to me with his wife, and I recognized her. I knew her parents well. He asked, "May I ride with you into a certain city where tomorrow morning I must go to the hospital? I have an appointment to be there by eight o'clock." We told him that he could ride with us. I watched him bid goodnight to his wife and baby before leaving for the hospital for surgery. He was so calm and so wonderful, and so was she.

When they bade each other good-night, I thought how unusual. What faith those two young people have in each other! What confidence they have in the Lord! But it did not take me long to find out what was behind it. As we were riding along, I asked, "Will your wife get to see you while you are in the hospital?" And he said, "Oh no. It is too far away, and she hasn't a car." "Is she here on the post alone?" "Yes. Her folks aren't here, and my folks aren't here, but we have each other." Then he said, "We have the Lord, so she'll get along all right, and I'll be just fine. I'll be home in a few days."

What faith! Then he said, "While we've been out here, we've had wonderful experiences that mean so much to us." Then he gave me this experience as near as I can repeat it.

They were going to have a new baby, and his wife was not at all well. She had not been well for months. The doctor was worried about her, and so was he. There they were alone, except for the wonderful buddies that were around them, but no parents on either side were there with them. They were far from home.

One day the doctor called this young man and his wife to his office, and said, "I think I ought to tell you that I am very worried about your wife, and I think I should tell you that even your wife's life is in danger as well as that of the baby."

Now, that would be quite a hard thing for a young couple to take. The doctor said, "Come back in three days. I am going to have another specialist here because I need his help. I am not a specialist in that line, but I know things are not right." He had made a lot of tests, examinations, and X-rays. So in three days he asked them to come back.

That young couple went home that night, and I believe as nearly every young couple would do in this Church, they fasted, and they prayed nearly all night, pleading with the Lord to bless her that she would be well and that they could have their little baby. Next day he went to his assignment. He came home the second night, and they followed that same procedure, praying into the night with little sleep. The third day he went to his assignment, and he came home again. They followed that same procedure, and the three days were up. They should meet with the two doctors the next day.

The following morning when the sun came up and his wife awoke, she said to her wonderful sweetheart, "I feel much better," and as he looked at her, he said, "I am sure you are better." Her eyes were bright, and there was a little color in her cheeks, but they went off to see the doctors. When they walked in, the first doctor said to her, "Well, you look so much better today," and she said, "I feel much better."

Then the new doctor and the first doctor went over the charts and the history of the case. The second doctor was just as alarmed after he studied the charts and the X-rays. Other X-rays were taken, and the two doctors took the X-rays and developed them and went into the other room, and they couldn't believe their eyes. X-rays do not lie. They are factual. They put these X-rays down by the side of each other, and the first doctor was astounded, and the second doctor said, "Are you sure these are the same X-rays you took before?" "Oh yes," he said, "they are the only ones I have. I am sure they are the same X-rays."

They went back out to the office and told this young man and his wife that they could go home, that there was nothing for them to worry about, that everything would be all right. The new second doctor went away, assuring the first doctor that he need not be concerned. This young couple was very happy and knew the Lord had answered their prayers.

This young man testified to me that, of course, those doctors, not being in the Church, could not understand the power of the priesthood. They could not understand our faith and the prayers and the fasting of these young people. "That night when we went home," the young man said, "we spent most of that night thanking the Lord for his blessings and for the miracle that had been performed, and in two or three weeks we had our new baby. You saw her tonight—a beautiful, healthy, lovely baby." Then he bore a strong testimony, testifying to the power of the priesthood; and his witness and his testimony was wonderful for a young man. I am sure that such testimonies are shared by thousands and hundreds of thousands of Latter-day Saints. What would that young man and his wife have done if they had not had that faith? What would they have done if they couldn't go to the Lord?

So, I would plead with all young married couples that you should be careful in everything you do so that nothing will prevent you from going to the Lord when you are faced with similar problems, and you will be faced with them. Perhaps not the exact one of this young couple, but many similar. You will need the blessings of the Lord just as that wonderful young couple needed them.

I would plead with all of us that we adjust our affairs and our lives and our living so that when the time comes that we need the blessings of the Lord, we can go to him and know that he will hear us and grant our petitions.

I bear testimony to you that I know that God lives. Yes, his Spirit has borne witness to my spirit, and I believe, and I know, and I know Jesus was the Son of God—our Savior and our Redeemer. We should love him for the mission and the sins that he took upon himself that we might live—probably God's greatest gift to man.

God bless you, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric has just addressed us. Elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

THE EXCELLENT remarks of Elder Sterling W. Sill this morning have recalled a story I heard repeated in a very impressive talk which was given recently where I was assigned to dedicate a new chapel. Our attention was called to the name on the front of the building—The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. This is the story that was to impress our responsibility to Him in whose name we were then in meeting.

It was in 1909 at the University of Edinburgh. Lord Balfour, then the Prime Minister of England, was delivering an address on the subject of moral values which unite nations. He spoke of the common knowledge and the common commercial resources which nations had to unite them, their social intercourse made possible through diplomatic relationships, the bonds of human friendships, and the improved methods of communication; and then closed his address amid the thunderous applause of those who had heard his, as judged by the world's standards, masterful address.

But the applause was interrupted by a Japanese student who was studying at the University. He stood up in the gallery and asked, "But Mr. Balfour, what about Jesus Christ?" There was a hushed silence as the presiding officer arose to conclude the meeting. They had heard a stern rebuke thus voiced by one of a pagan nation to the representative of one of the greatest so-called Christian nations on the face of the earth, for in his address Mr. Balfour had omitted the greatest and most fundamental of all essential bonds which would unite the nations of the earth.

The essentiality of that knowledge of the Savior and his divine mission was impressed by the Master on one occasion when he said to the Pharisees who had gathered around him, as they usually did to try to embarrass or to entrap him, "What think ye of Christ? . . ." And they answered, "The son of David"

(Matt. 22:42)—referring of course to his Israelitish lineage.

In all likelihood the Master was trying to call them back to what John, the forerunner of the Master, had taught when he had impressed the vital importance of this essential knowledge in his declaration.

He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him. (John 3:36.)

During his ministry there had been others not possessed of faith who had declared themselves about the Master. In his home country of Nazareth they had said in derision:

Is not this the carpenter's son? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? . . . And they were offended in him.

The Master sadly replied:

A prophet is not without honour save in his own country, and in his own house. (Matthew 13:55, 57.)

On another occasion they said of him in scorn:

The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. . . . (Ibid., 11:19.)

In Jerusalem the scribes which came down said,

He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils. (Mark 3:22.)

In contrast to these unsavory epithets, his faithful followers such as Peter, the chiefest of the apostles declared: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." (Matt 16:16)—and from his faithful Martha, "Yea Lord: I believe that thou art Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world." (John 11:27.) And from another of his disciples after he had seen and handled the Risen Lord, Thomas impressed his testimony with these simple words: "My Lord and my God!" (Ibid., 20:28.) The measure of difference between those two groups of individuals who answered the query, "What think ye of Christ?" (Matt. 22:42) was the quality of which the Master had spoken of in his great Sermon on the Mount: "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." (Ibid., 5:8.)

Our responsibility as members of the Church of Jesus Christ to declare the mission of the Savior was impressed upon us recently in a council meeting when President David O. McKay made this significant statement:

This is the Church of Jesus Christ, and it is our obligation to preach to the world that he is the Son of God, our Redeemer and our Savior—not just a great teacher, but in reality the Son of our Father in heaven, and the Redeemer of the world; that he has broken the bands of death and has brought resurrection, that through him, by obedience to the gospel, we will gain eternal exaltation in his kingdom. May the Lord give us power and increase our ability to represent him in the world.

In that memorable Wentworth Letter, historically important to the Church, where the Prophet Joseph Smith answered the query as to what the Church believed, was the statement: "We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in His Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost."

The symbolism of our belief and our declaration to the world is to be found everywhere. As I saw the pictures of the Swiss Temple, I read the words above the entrance and again recalled that on many of our other sacred structures are those significant words: "Holiness to the Lord." As you go out of this Tabernacle, look upon the west towers of the great Salt Lake Temple, and just underneath the battlements will you see the dipper pointing to the North Star—the symbolism, as explained by Truman O. Angell, the architect of the temple, in an article written in the Millennial Star for the British Saints, suggesting that through the priesthood of Almighty God the lost may find their way. As you go into the great Salt Lake Temple, you will see what the pioneers did to symbolize every move they were to make through that sacred building. Even on almost every doorknob there has been cast in the beauty of their artistry those same words, "Holiness to the Lord." By that symbol every door in the temples of our God, indeed every step we take in life, is opened to those who go forward in "Holiness to the Lord!"

The dreariest prospect that can be imagined to those who have not only these symbols to constantly remind them, but also the testimony of that humble boy who told of the coming of the Father and the Son in very person to converse with him, who bore testimony that other worthies came and restored their powers, and their keys of the priesthood,—the dreariest prospects of those of this Church who have those testimonies and that knowledge given them, is that to be found in the Lord's castigation of those who have been given a divine calling by a divine command and had disobeyed when he said: "They who are not chosen have sinned a very grievous sin in that they are walking in the darkness at noon-day." (D & C 95:6.) Then he added, "If ye keep not my commandments, the love of the Father shall not continue with you, therefore ye shall walk in darkness." (Ibid., 95:12.)

Under the caption of an article, "What Makes Men Strong?" recently, J. Edgar Hoover, the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, made this significant statement:

When a man leans on his own understanding, when he lives by his own strength, when he boasts of probing the mysteries of the atom, the depths of the sea, or the secrets of outer space, he forgets God and claims he is his own master. The result is untold suffering. Even though one's position is maintained, even though material wealth increases, a success quickly turns to failure when God has been forgotten. There is no peace of mind, no personal satisfaction, no personal experience of inward joy. To "trust in the Lord with all thine heart" is a mark of strength, and it is the only path to happiness, success, and true fulfillment.

I contrast the fearful Peter who, on the night of the betrayal, denied that he had known the Savior, with that Peter who on another occasion, after he had witnessed the appearances of the

Saturday, October 1

Second Day

Master, in jail, being readied for another inquisition by his unjust captors. He was not surprised when an angel touched him and said, "Arise up quickly," and the shackles fell from him, and when he went to the door he found it open. He went to the outer court, and it was open; then he went to the home of his friends, and they were surprised because from the time of his imprisonment they had been praying that the Lord by his matchless powers would undo the mischief that was now trying to nullify the work of this great Church. He was not afraid. Why? Because Peter knew the power of the risen Lord. (See Acts 12.)

I am thinking now of two contrasting incidents. A dear friend received one of those fateful messages: "We regret to inform you that your boy has been killed in action." I went to his home, and there I saw the shattered family, possessed of all the things that money could buy—wealth, position, the things that the world would call honorable, but there they were with their hopes and dreams shattered around them, grasping for something that they had not lived to obtain and from that time on, seemingly did not obtain. The comfort which they could have known was not there.

I contrasted that with a scene I witnessed up in the LDS Hospital just about six months ago now, when one of our dear faithful mission presidents was there slowly dying. He was in extreme pain, but in his heart there was a joy because he knew that through suffering oftentimes men learn obedience, and the right to kinship with him who suffered beyond all that any of us can ever suffer. He, too, knew the power of the risen Lord.

Today we should ask ourselves the question, in answer to what the Master asked of those in his day, "What think ye of Christ?" We ought to ask as we would say it today, "What think we of Christ?" and then make it a little more personal and ask, "What think I of Christ?" Do I think of him as the Redeemer of my soul? Do I think of him with no doubt in my mind as the one who appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith? Do I believe that he established this Church upon the earth? Do I accept him as the Savior of this world? Am I true to my covenants, which in the waters of baptism, if I understood, meant that I would stand as a witness of him at all times, and in all things, and in all places, wherever I would be, even until death?"

Many times we have heard and sung that hymn,

That I might have seen his kind look when he said,

"Let the little ones come unto me."

I should like to have been with him then.

Some have said they would have liked to live in the days of the Prophet Joseph so that they could have been his defenders. Heber C. Kimball wrote this:

Let me say that many of you will see the time when you will have all the trouble, trial, and persecution you can stand, and plenty of opportunities to show that you were true to God and his work. This Church will have many close places through which it will have to pass before the work of God is crowned with victory. To meet the difficulties that are coming, it will be necessary for you to have a knowledge of the truth of this work for yourselves. The difficulties of this work will be of such a character that a man or woman who does not possess this personal knowledge will fall. Remember these saying, for many of you will live to see them fulfilled. The time is coming when no man or woman will be able to endure on borrowed light. Each will have to be guided by the light within himself. If you do not have it, you will not stand.

After some of the persecutions and the evidence of the power of evil over our first missionaries in London, these missionaries returned to the Prophet to seek an answer as to why these experiences with evil spirits had come to them. Had they done something wrong that the evil had thus tried to overthrow them? And the Prophet replied, "I rejoiced when I heard of your experiences because I have passed through similar experiences, and I want to say this to you: the nearer a person approaches the Lord, a greater power will be manifested by the adversary to prevent the accomplishment of his purposes."

That is what the Master meant when he said:

Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake.

Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you. (Matthew 5:11-12.)

I have heard some of the testimonies of men like Brother Hugh B. Brown and Brother Adam S. Bennion, and Brother Richard L. Evans, who, when they were called to their high places have been subjected to the trials of the power of evil. There is no question in my mind but that they were near unto the Lord, and the devil knew it and was trying to confuse them and if possible destroy them.

You and I stand in this day when we are basking in the sunshine of great plaudits of the people all over the world. We rejoice that the persecution which used to be is not now, and yet I am sobered by the warning that the Master gave when he warned:

Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets. (Luke 6:26.)

When I think of that warning, I am remembering the words which sobered the people of England after one of their great jubilee celebrations, when Kipling wrote:

The tumult and the shouting dies;
The Captains and the Kings depart:
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.

May I echo and paraphrase those words of Kipling and say that while today we glory in that which our President has reported to us as the good feeling of the peoples of the world—may I say to all of us, each of us individually, let us not forget that the measure of our acceptance in the kingdom of our God will be our answer to the question which we must make honestly to ourselves: "What think I of Jesus Christ? What kind of a testimony do I have of the divinity of his mission?"

God grant that we may not lose that testimony. I bear you my testimony that I know that he is the Savior of this world, and I bear that testimony humbly and in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve has just addressed us. The Mutual Improvement Association Choruses from the Salt Lake Valley stakes will now sing, "Behold, God the Lord Passed By," conducted by Elder Elvis B. Terry. The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Antone K. Romney, president of the Provo Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

We are favored now to hear this pleasing group of singers, our young men and young women, sing the closing song.

The M.I.A. Chorus from the Salt Lake Valley Stakes sang the selection, "Behold, God the Lord Passed By."

President David O. McKay:

Will President Critchlow, president of the South Ogden Stake, come to the rostrum immediately at the close of this meeting.

President Antone K. Romney will now offer the benediction.

Elder Antone K. Romney, President of the Provo Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

Conference reconvened at 2 o'clock p.m.

President David O. McKay presided and commenced the meeting promptly at the time appointed.

The M.I.A. Chorus from the Salt Lake

Saturday, October 1

Second Day

Valley Stakes was present and furnished the choral music for the meeting, with Ruth Hardy Funk conducting and Roy M. Darley at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

This cable which I hold in my hand was sent today from Buenos Aires, South America, and illustrates how close our far away members are to us here at headquarters. It is from President Valentine, who says, "The Argentine Saints and missionaries are all safe. Joining you in spirit at Conference."

Again the great Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City is filled to capacity. Every seat is taken, so far as we can observe, and there are people standing in the doorways, at this the fourth session of the 126th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Overflow meetings are being held in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall and services are being televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5, and broadcast over Radio Station KSL, and by arrangement over eleven radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Oregon, Arizona, and California. And this is particularly interesting: special television cable installation will be shown in four chapels in Pocatello, Idaho, and by special arrangement over three television stations in Idaho. The names of these stations have already been announced to the radio audience.

The singing for this afternoon's session will be by the Mutual Improvement Association Chorus from the Salt Lake Valley stakes, with Sister Ruth Hardy Funk conducting, and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

We shall begin by the Mutual Improvement Association Chorus singing, "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy," conducted by Sister Funk.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder David E. Heywood, Sr., President of the Phoenix Stake.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I WAS SURELY PLEASED, brothers and sisters, when the First Presidency invited these wonderful young people to sing at this conference, and I would like you young people to know how grateful I am for your willingness to be here and for the excellence of your performance.

I am very proud of the MIA and the work the MIA is doing, and I am very proud of you that you sing so beautifully to our Savior, whom I know you love. I am glad that now, this year, together with all the rest of the young people of the Church, every week you recite our MIA theme in which you declare that you are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. I know you love it. I hope that always you will love it and that you will be faithful and true in every respect. God bless you for your work.

I do love the young people of the Church, and I love their faith. As I visit with them from time to time, I know that the Spirit of God rests upon them, and that the spirit of conversion is in them, and that most of them are serving the Lord and keeping his commandments. So I feel very, very good about the rising generation and about the future of this great Church.

Occasionally, however, there are some of our young people who go off on a tangent and do not keep the faith. One day I had a young man come in to visit with me. He had lost his faith. He came to me not because he thought I could do him any good, but because his mother had asked him to come to one of the brethren and see if some different picture might be given to him whereby his faith might be restored. As he came into the office and sat down and opened the subject, he told me he had lost his faith, and he told me in what class at school he had lost it and who the teacher was who had been responsible for it.

As he told me about his difficulty, he said that he could not believe in God any more because who could believe in a Creator or suppose that there was some being who could create an earth like this. He did not believe in the Savior nor that the Savior ever wrought out an atonement that would do us any good. How could the death of a man on a cross two thousand years ago benefit a person now in this modern, enlightened time? And who could believe in a resurrection? It was all just incredible.

Then my mind went back to the time Paul stood before Agrippa and began there to defend his faith and his faith in the resurrection, and he asked Agrippa, you will remember, why he thought it was incredible that God could raise the dead.

And so we talked together, this young man and I. I asked him if there was anything in this modern world that he considered to be incredible. He could accept most things that are going on now.

I showed him a picture in a magazine of a little platform about four feet in diameter, with a railing around it, and a man standing in the middle.

That platform stood in the air without any visible means of support.

I said, "Do you believe it is possible that the picture you see there really is a picture of something that happened and that a man could stand on a little platform, six or twelve feet in the air—just stand there—and that by turning a little handle he could cause this platform to move up or down?"

I said, "It looks incredible to me, but there is a photograph of it. The United States Navy has it and is using it. Does it seem incredible to you? Does it really seem possible that a little platform could stand in the air like that?"

Then I asked him if he had read some of the things that are being spoken of these days about a trip to the moon. No longer is it idle talk. Men are actually talking about flying to the moon.

They are going to prepare what they call an island in the sky as a springboard, and that island is going to be stationary. They plan to fly their airship to that island, get out on it, walk around, and then take off again and go on to the moon.

Does that seem incredible? And yet the men of science today say that it is within the realm of possibility. They are really figuring it out. Incredible?

"No," he said, "it isn't incredible. I believe that a man could fly to such an island as that and then go on to the moon."

I said, "You are no different from the scientists of the world who are believing the same thing and working in that direction. But," I said, "is it any more incredible to believe that a man could leave this earth and go out into space than to believe that a man could come from space and visit this world? Which is more difficult to believe, that you or I could fly to the moon or that Moroni could come to the Prophet Joseph Smith?"

Then he said, "But then there is that gold plate story that I cannot take."

I said, "What about the gold plate story?"

He said, "Well, this idea that there was a book of gold plates with ancient inscriptions, and that Joseph Smith found it buried in the ground."

I said, "Would you believe it if it

Saturday, October 1

Second Day

came from an archaeologist? If an archaeologist should find plates of ancient vintage with inscriptions upon them, and those plates were metallic, would you accept it?"

He said, "Well, I could believe it because archaeologists are men of science."

I said, "These men of science have proven that there are such things as plates of gold. They themselves have dug up metallic plates with ancient inscriptions on them, records of the past, and they may be seen in museums of this day. Is that incredible? Is it any more difficult to believe that an archaeologist could find ancient records of lead or silver or copper or gold, with inscriptions, records of the past, than to believe that the Nephites made records of the past and that they were brought forth in our day? Which is the more difficult to believe?"

Then he said, "But, I do not believe in prayer."

"Why don't you believe in prayer?"

"I don't believe that I could kneel down in my bedroom and whisper a few words and have God way up in heaven, if there is a God, hear what I would whisper those many, many miles away."

Then I told him about my wife and me being in Buenos Aires last Christmas. As we sat with the missionaries in the mission home that evening, the telephone rang, and we said, "Hello." On the other end of that telephone wire and across space where there were no wires, and then again picked up by other wires, came the voices of our daughter and son-in-law wishing us "Merry Christmas," saying it would not be Christmas unless they could speak to us.

Incredible? There we were in Buenos Aires speaking in a normal tone of voice. They were in Salt Lake City. Our voices would go to the end of the wire, and then they would travel where there would be just space, and beyond the space over another wire. Is that incredible? If man can do that, do you not suppose God could hear your prayer?

Then I brought up another thing. "In the Book of Mormon, which you say you do not believe, it says that the voice of Christ was heard all over the land by the people, all at once, simultaneously. I have heard people like you say they could not believe that."

"No, I could not believe it," he said.

Incredible? Which is more difficult to believe, that God could speak in heaven and all the people of America hear it, or that the President of the United States could speak in the White House and all the people in America hear it? Which is more difficult to believe? Are these things incredible?

Then he brought up the Bible. "The Bible is full of stories that nobody could believe."

I said, "For instance?"

"Well, I don't think of any at the moment."

I suggested the story of Moses and the bulrushes. "Yes, the story of Moses and the bulrushes," he quickly said.

"Do you not know that the archaeologists have discovered facts which prove that Moses was found in the bulrushes by a daughter of Pharaoh, and that they can even tell you the name of daughter of Pharaoh, that they know now from ancient records which they have dug up that that story is true, and that Moses was reared in the household of Pharaoh, and that he became a leader of the Israelites and led them back to Palestine? If the archaeologists have proved it, is it any longer incredible to you?"

"Well, I would believe them, but I would not believe the Bible."

"What about the story of Abraham? Do you believe there ever was an Abraham?"

"No, I do not."

"But the archaeologists have also found out that there was a person called Abraham, a great astronomer of ancient times, who went down into Egypt and taught the Egyptians astronomy. That has been discovered. Is the story of the Bible then incredible?"

Then I said, "I would like to tell you something that is incredible to me. I can believe all these things, but I would like to tell you something that is incredible."

And he said, "What is that?"

I said, "It is incredible to me to believe that the earth could be made by chance, without a Creator."

Then I took from my bookcase a little book called, Man Does Not Stand Alone, by Cressy Morrison. Cressy Morrison is past-president of the New York Academy of Science, past-president of the American Institute of New York, member of the Executive Board of the National Research Council, a Fellow of the American Museum of Natural History, a life member of the Royal Institution of Great Britain. He wrote this little book to prove from the standpoint of an up-to-date scientist that it would have been impossible for the earth to be made by chance. I read this:

Suppose you take ten pennies and mark them from one to ten. Put them in your pocket and give them a good shake. Now try to draw them out in sequence, from one to ten, putting each coin back in your pocket after each draw. Your chance of drawing number one, is one to ten; your chance of drawing one and two in succession would be one in a hundred; your chance of drawing one, two, and three in succession would be one in a thousand. Your chance of drawing one, two, three, and four in succession would be one in ten thousand, and so on until your chance of drawing from number one to number ten in succession would reach the unbelievable figure of one chance in ten billion.

Then Morrison goes on to say:

The object in dealing with so simple a problem is to show how enormously figures multiply against chance. So many essential conditions are necessary for life to exist on our earth, that it is mathematically impossible that all of them could exist in proper relationship by chance, on any one earth at any one time. Therefore, there must be in nature some form of intelligent direction. If this be true, then there must be a purpose.

Then he reviewed the intricacy of creation, the intricacy of our own lives, of our bodies, the bodies of other living things, even of little plants. He talked about evolution and said that Darwin's theory was concocted before science had learned about the genes. "The genes," he says, "keep all forms of life within their own spheres. Life produces creations," he said, "of varied designs in the image of its predecessors and gives them the power to repeat themselves for untold generations."

Then he asked the question whether it is really incredible to believe what the Bible says about everything having been formed originally to bring forth after its own kind:

Then he writes,

No oak tree ever bore chestnuts. No whale ever gave birth to a fish, and waving fields of wheat in every grain are wheat, and corn is corn. Law governs the atomic arrangement in the genes which absolutely determine every genus of life from beginning to extinction.

Then he makes this startling statement:

The first chapter of Genesis contains the real story of creation, and its essence has not been changed by knowledge acquired since it was written. The differences have arisen over details, which are not worth controversy.

He says that even the chronological arrangement in the story of the creation as given in Genesis fits into the modern scientific knowledge, and then he asks the question, "Can science pick a flaw in this briefest story ever told, the world's history in a few lines of print?" With regard to the story of creation, he again asks whether we should consider it incredible.

Finally, as he closes his book, he says:

The existence of a Supreme Being is demonstrated by infinite adjustments without which life itself would be impossible. Man's presence on earth and the magnificent demonstrations of his intellect are a part of a program being carried out by the Supreme Intelligence. Let us then hold fast to our belief in a Supreme Intelligence, the love of God and the brotherhood of man, lifting ourselves closer to him by doing his will.

I was certainly happy, recently to read a graduation address delivered at the commencement exercises of one of our large universities, by Dr. Joseph W. Barker, president and chairman of the Research Corporation of America and formerly dean of the engineering school of Columbia University.

He explained in his address that the scientists of the nineteenth century had been misled by certain of their observations and as a result came to conclusions which definitely were atheistic, but now he says:

Saturday, October 1

Second Day

Even the most pragmatic materialist in the face of present-day scientific knowledge, is led to the inevitable conclusion that the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmaments sheweth his handiwork.

As the children of Israel foreswore the worship of the golden calf and returned to the faith of Jehovah, so have we foresworn the crass mechanistic materialism and returned to that faith in God, of which the Psalmist of old sang: "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." (Psalm 24:1.)

To paraphrase the words of Paul: Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that there should be a God? Why should it be a thing incredible with you, that he should speak to men and show himself to them? Why should it be a thing incredible with you, that he should record the history of his people on plates of gold? Why should it be a thing incredible with you that a little boy of fourteen years should go into a grove of trees near his home, pray to God in all humility and receive an answer?

I testify to you, and I testify to all men, that God has made known to me that he lives, and I know it as well as I know that I live. He has given me testimony that Jesus of Nazareth was his literal Son in the flesh, and that he is our Savior, and our Redeemer.

And he has given to me testimony that Joseph Smith truly knelt in prayer and in answer received the glorious visitation in which he talked face to face with the Father and the Son.

And he has given me personal testimony that the Book of Mormon is true. I know it as well as the three witnesses or the eight witnesses who held the plates in their hands. I know it. God has made it known to me, and I give you my testimony. It is not incredible.

And I, together with the young people of the Church, "am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

May we be faithful and true to our trust, true to the restored gospel, and not be incredulous, is my humble prayer, in Jesus' name. Amen.

Patriarch to the Church

Y BROTHERS AND SISTERS: It is a thrilling experience to be in these conferences. Nevertheless, I humbly seek an interest in your faith and prayers in my behalf.

I have heard President Clark a number of times refer to his theme song, as he calls it, that of unity, and with his permission I would like to join his chorus. We should all join his chorus, not alone in words, but in action. Paul taught the same doctrine when he wrote to the Ephesians:

I therefore . . . beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called,

With all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love;

Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; One Lord, one faith, one baptism,

One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all, (Eph. 4:1-6.)

When I talk about unity in the gospel, I am often reminded of an experience that I had while on a mission in Germany. When this German Choir sang for us yesterday in the conference meetings, I was reminded again of those experiences, especially when I was assigned to work in Celle in the Hanover District in Germany. Once a month we went to the little town of Uelzen, which was a self-sustaining branch. We went there to get their reports and to help them as we could. Since my companion was assigned to the branch at the same time I was, this first visit to Uelzen was a new experience for both of us.

We took our seats in the first meeting we attended in the front of the hall. The branch president announced that the meeting would be started by the choir singing such and such a song. I looked about and found no choir up in front, but before I could ask any questions or discover an answer to the problem in my mind as to where the choir was coming from, my companion and I found ourselves the only ones sitting in the audience. The entire congregation, except for my companion and me, had gone up to the front and sang as a choir. It is no wonder we have Saints who can come here and produce a chorus such as we had yesterday.

I found from the reports that they not only all sang together, but they also worked together. I found that there was 100 percent membership of the branch paying 100 percent tithing, and that was not just the month that I went there on that one visit, but that was the report I got all the time I was there. Attendance in their meetings was the same. They worked together in everything they did. I discovered, also, that there were two women in the branch at that time whose husbands had gone to America, and that the branch had agreed together, before these two men left, that they would all work together; they would keep the commandments of the Lord to the best of their ability; they would do all that was required of them without excuse; nothing would stop them from fulfilling the responsibilities given to them. Those who remained in the branch would see to it that the wives of these two men were taken care of, that they would not be in need.

The two men who left for America agreed that they would do likewise in living the commandments of the Lord and that they would find jobs and work hard and save their money and send for their wives as soon as possible. It was not long until I was transferred from that section of Germany, and then soon after, I was released to come home.

Some twenty years later, after I became Patriarch to the Church, I had an appointment to give a blessing to a young girl. When she arrived, her mother was with her. I found that the mother was one of those two sisters whose husbands had left Uelzen when I was over there. I had a long talk with this sister and her daughter. The daughter, of course, had grown up from a small child, and her mother told me this story: that one by one, or two at a time, as occasion came, different members of the branch would have the opportunity of leaving and coming to America, until finally, before World War II broke out, there was not one member of the Church left in that branch in Uelzen. They had all come to America safely before the war broke out.

Then she told me also that in the end of the war, when the American soldiers invaded that section of Germany, for some reason unknown to her, the German soldiers set up a resistance in Uelzen which resulted in a four-day battle. The bombings and general destruction were such that there was not a house left in the section where most of the Saints had lived, yet there was not a member of the Church left in Uelzen—a result and reward of unity, working together to keep the commandments of the Lord.

I could tell another story of another branch in Germany where they worked more as individuals. None of them left Germany, and as a result of the war the entire city was destroyed. I received a letter from one of the members there who told me that even some of the members lost their lives, their friends, and some of the members of their families lost their lives in that war and the destruction in that city. They were good Saints, but they had not learned the lesson of working together as the Saints in Uelzen had learned.

This is a challenge to us, brothers and sisters, that we might do as they did in Uelzen—not just to move to another section, but that we might live the commandments of the Lord as they did. They did it for a special purpose, and the Lord blessed them in their efforts. We have a responsibility today to unite together in keeping the commandments of the Lord. We need to be united in keeping his commandments more now than ever before because the eyes of the world are upon us now more than ever before.

With this tour of the Tabernacle Choir in Europe, some of us might think, "Well, that was just the Tabernacle Choir. That was something they did. I do not have to take part in that." There is not one of us who is a member of the Church who does not take part in it, and we cannot afford to let the choir down. We have to live the commandments of the Lord to bolster up what they have done in Europe, for now truly, as we sang yesterday in our conference meeting:

"High on the mountaintop
A banner is unfurled;

Ye nations now look up;
It waves to all the world."

To keep that banner flying, we must stand unitedly valiant in the faith, and I pray that the Lord will bless us that we might be united; that we will be unitedly valiant in keeping the commandments of the Lord, and in sustaining our testimonies of this gospel, for this is the strength and the power of the gospel, and this I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church, has just spoken to us. Elder Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy will be our next speaker.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Y DEAR brethren and sisters: I humbly pray that I shall be guided by the Spirit of the Lord in the brief remarks that I make this afternoon.

I hold here in my hand what I consider to be three of the most valuable treasures in the world. From a monetary standpoint, they are beyond price. If all of the people in the world would make complete application of what these three treasures contain, utilizing them to the fullest, I believe their contents would do more good for the human family than do all the armies in the world, all the kings that sit on thrones, all the governments that rule, or any other things that we might attain in this world. I am holding in my hand the Latter-day Saints' triple combination of holy scriptures—the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price. They contain the word of God as revealed in the latter days from heaven through the Prophet Joseph Smith, for the salvation and exaltation of all the members of the human family who will receive their divine teachings and render obedience.

Members of the Church of Jesus Christ accept one more book as scripture—the Holy Bible—and hence they regard it as authoritative and binding on their lives. I shall not speak of that scripture today but confine my remarks to the scriptures given to the world by the power of the Lord through his Prophet Joseph Smith.

The first of these three scriptures of the Latter-day Saints, as it appears in the triple combination, is the Book of Mormon. This volume contains the gospel of Jesus Christ as the ancient Americans received and understood it.

The most vital purpose that the writers had in mind in preparing the Book of Mormon was that it should serve as a new witness for Christ, especially a new witness for Christ to the Jews and gentiles in the latter days.<sup>1</sup> It was written to verify the messiahship of the Only Begotten as proclaimed in the Old and New Testaments.

Towards the close of his life, Nephi, the first writer on the Nephite records, handed the plates to his brother Jacob and instructed Jacob to record carefully

... preaching which was sacred, or revelation which was great, or prophesying, ... and touch upon them as much as it were possible, for Christ's sake, ...<sup>2</sup>

And so the Nephite records were written and preserved to come forth in the latter days to bear witness that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, the Mediator between the heavens and the earth, the Only Begotten of the Eternal Father in the flesh, and the Redeemer of the human family. A careful reading of the Book of Mormon convinces one that not only Jacob but also all the prophets who succeeded him carefully followed Nephi's injunction. Throughout the entire book witness is born almost continuously to the divine mission of the Lamb of God, the Anointed One of Israel.

In fact, Moroni, the last prophet of the Nephite race, in his preface to the Book of Mormon, pointed out that the record had been written primarily for the purpose of ... the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations—...

I think that both the Jaredite and Nephite prophets did an excellent work in giving us much evidence of the divinity and mission of Jesus Christ; thus making the Book of Mormon indeed a new witness.

The Book of Mormon contains a number of teachings which help to explain, amplify, and clarify doctrine found in the Bible; for example, according to the Sermon on the Mount as recorded in the Gospel of Matthew, while Jesus was talking to the entire multitude of people he instructed:

Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on.<sup>2</sup>

Brilliant scholars—and I think many of them faithful men, perhaps believing that Christ was the greatest of all teachers, proclaiming at all times eternal truths—saw in the Master's foregoing statement what appeared to be an economic fallacy. They observed that if people in general throughout the world took no heed of what they should eat or wear or drink, they would soon be hungry, thirsty, and unclothed; and so those scholars wrote numerous explanations in their efforts to interpret what the Master may have meant.

But the Book of Mormon in one brief statement gives, I believe, more clarification to that problem than is found in all the explanations given by the scholars. According to that record, Jesus appeared to the Nephites following his resurrection and gave a sermon similar to the one known in the New Testament as the Sermon on the Mount. Jesus was talking to the multitude, and then the Nephite record states:

And now it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words he looked upon the twelve whom he had chosen, and said unto them: . . . Therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink: nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on.<sup>3</sup>

Thus by turning from the multitude and giving his instruction to only twelve men, Jesus reduced the problem of those who would be provided for by the Lord to only twelve servants of God. Certainly the laborers in the Lord's vineyard are worthy of their hire.

The Book of Mormon contains some of the most marvelous doctrinal teachings found in any scripture or in any other writings in the world. The ancient American prophets explained the gospel doctrines as clearly and as beautifully as any prophets have ever explained the gospel. I rejoice in the superb vision beheld by Nephi in which he viewed the history of the world down to the present time. I marvel as I read the teachings of King Benjamin. Perhaps no other teacher except the Master has given a more beautiful, humble sermon. I thrill every time I contemplate the marvelous teachings of Alma and Amulek on death, resurrection, immortality, judgment day, and the atonement of Jesus Christ. I take delight in meditating on Mormon's strong denunciation of the doctrine and practice of infant baptism, realizing that nowhere is this doctrine more forcefully condemned. And of course the greatest of all the teachings found in the Book of Mormon are those found in the Third Nephi. Herein is recorded the marvelous and beautiful story of the appearances of the resurrected Lord to the inhabitants of ancient America, proclaiming his victory over death and offering eternal life unto all those who would accept and obey his gospel. The book delineates in an astounding manner the Master teaching the inhabitants of this land the same gospel plan of salvation which he had taught while in mortality among the Jews. For example, read chapter twenty-seven of Third Nephi. Herein Christ gave a definition of the gospel of Jesus Christ which, I think, is unsurpassed anywhere in religious literature.

There are numerous individual statements on various subjects in the Book of Mormon which I choose to call diamond-like statements, and which I think are unsurpassed in other scriptures and in world literature; for example, the oft-repeated, sincere, simple, but beautiful expression of faith given by Nephi is superb. To quote:

I will go and do the things the Lord hath commandeth, for I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commandeth them.<sup>61</sup>

I believe that possibly the greatest statement recorded on the purpose of man or purpose of life was given in two short lines by father Lehi wherein he said: "Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy."<sup>62</sup> It is my conviction that the joy of which Lehi spoke is a joy that would come today and remain tomorrow, next week, next year, a hundred years, a thousand years, yes—joy eternally. A thorough study of the Book of Mormon and its companion scriptures which I hold in my hand assures us that the only way to attain that joy is to render obedience to all of God's commandments continuously. The more completely our lives conform to the teachings of the Master, the greater shall be our joy.

The Doctrine and Covenants, the second volume of these latter-day scriptures which I hold in my hand, is filled with revelation from heaven, given primarily through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith for the salvation of all the members of the human family who will receive and obey. These revelations were also given for the building of the kingdom of God or the Church of Jesus Christ here upon the earth in the latter days preparatory for the coming of the Savior to usher in the millennial reign.

The Doctrine and Covenants, in my opinion, like the Book of Mormon, contains many of the greatest teachings found in any book in the world; for example, I know of no revelation given through the holy prophets in any age of world's history regarding post-mortal life and the final status of the human family which surpasses section seventy-six of the Doctrine and Covenants, known as the vision, or the three degrees of glory. This stupendous revelation was given to the Prophet Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon. They were permitted to look into the celestial degree of glory, behold conditions there, and record what they saw while "yet in the Spirit."<sup>7</sup> Then they were shown in vision the terrestrial glory and likewise the telestial glory. A short vision of perdition was also shown unto them. The conditions requisite for entrance into any of these worlds were made known unto them.

In addition to the great revelation on the three degrees of glory, the Doctrine and Covenants contains many more revelations regarding post-mortal life. For example, section eighty-eight expands our knowledge of the three degrees of glory. Also, there is a marvelous statement found in section 131. To quote:

In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees;

And in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage];

And if he does not, he cannot obtain it.

He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase.<sup>8</sup>

One of the greatest revelations in any scripture is the one on celestial marriage, found in section 132 of the Doctrine and Covenants. This marvelous revelation deals with the crowning prin-

ciple of the gospel of Jesus Christ, setting forth the condition on which one may gain eternal life or exaltation in the presence of God. This revelation informs us that man cannot be exalted without woman, nor the woman without man. It makes clear the doctrine that those who prove faithful in all things which the Lord hath commanded, go to the house of the Lord and enter into the covenant of marriage according to God's plan, and continue faithful all the days of their lives, shall rise in the resurrection and

... shall pass by the angels, and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things, as hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever.

Then shall they be gods, . . . *

Thus section 132 gives us an understanding of how to obtain the highest blessing that our Eternal Father has in store for those who love him and keep his commandments. Furthermore, the revelations which I have referred to briefly give us more definite information on the post-mortal life of man and the ultimate goals to be attained than can be found in any other scriptures in the world.

The Doctrine and Covenants, like the Book of Mormon, also contains diamond-like statements which are superb; for example, the one on law is remarkable. To quote:

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—

And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated.<sup>9</sup>

Another diamond-like statement is: "The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth."<sup>11</sup>

In addition to the great revelations referred to, the Doctrine and Covenants contains the wonderful instructions known as the Word of Wisdom, several revelations on missionary work, instruction on priesthood, and numerous other pertinent revelations which I cannot name in the short time allotted to me.

The third great treasure which I hold in my hand is the Pearl of Great Price, a pearl indeed. It is composed of two revelations given to Moses and re-revealed to Joseph Smith; the book of Abraham, written by the great patriarch and translated by the Prophet Joseph; the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew; some of the early visions beheld by the Prophet; some of his teachings; and the Articles of Faith. They are compacted in approximately sixty pages, but every page is dynamic and powerful. It is a wonderful book.

The Pearl of Great Price also contains revelations on certain subjects superior to any other scriptures or writings on those subjects found in the world; for example, Abraham's vision of pre-mortal life in which he learned of the eternal nature of things; of the grand council in heaven; and of the plan of salvation as presented there constitutes one of the greatest of God's revelations to his holy prophets. And the knowledge obtained by Moses in his vision of Lucifer and the part he played at the grand council, added to Abraham's vision, gives us the most complete understanding found in any literature regarding man's pre-mortal life and God's purposes for the good of man.

The Pearl of Great Price also helps to clarify some of the difficult passages in the other scriptures; for example, when Jesus Christ was living in mortality, the New Testament writers report that time and time again he referred to himself as the Son of Man. Many modern scholars in their commentaries have endeavored to explain what the Master may have meant by this appellation. These scholars have almost universally maintained that Jesus in referring to himself as the Son of Man meant that he was a mortal man. They maintain that Christ was making no claims of his divinity in referring to himself as Son of Man, but that he was merely pointing out his mortality. The Pearl of Great Price, however, clarifies this point beautifully. Speaking of God the Eternal Father, this record tells us that ... in the language of Adam, Man of Holiness is his name, and the name of his

Saturday, October 1

Second Day

Only Begotten is the Son of Man, even Jesus Christ, a righteous Judge, who shall come in the meridian of time.<sup>12</sup>

Thus we see that Jesus of Nazareth was not pointing out his mortal manhood but that he was declaring his divinity, his Godhood, his Messiahship, his powers as a Savior, his position as the Only Begotten of the Father, each time that he called himself the Son of Man. He was referring to himself as the "Son of the Man of Holiness," even the Only Begotten Son of the Eternal Father.

The Pearl of Great Price also contains some diamond-like statements, as do the other latter-day scriptures. As an example, I shall quote: "For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."<sup>13</sup>

Never in my life have I read in any scripture or in any other writing a statement which defines the work of God (meaning the Father and the Son) more completely, more thoroughly, and more accurately, in one short statement, than does that one. Jesus Christ came into the world, being sent here by the Father to die, to be resurrected, and to break the bands of death. He did rise from the grave, and he did put into operation, so to speak, a universal law of resurrection so that every man, woman, and child who ever lives upon this earth will rise from the grave and thereby receive immortality. The wicked as well as the righteous shall be resurrected and, through the grace of Christ and by the authorization of the Father, receive immortality. Thus God's work is to give immortality to the human family.

Shortly after Adam and Eve were cast from the Garden of Eden, Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world, began his work to give man eternal life by revealing the gospel plan of salvation to Father Adam. In the Meridian of Time Christ came to the world to show us how to live. The revelation of the gospel has continued to come from heaven throughout the various gospel dispensations and climaxed in our dispensation, coming to the world through the Prophet Joseph Smith in the Dispensation of the Fullness of Times. All the sons and daughters of God who live fully in accordance with this gospel plan will receive eternal life, thereby helping to complete the work and the glory of God.

In conclusion, I desire to speak briefly to the members of Church of Jesus Christ. If we as members will give heed to the teachings of the Savior, rendering obedience to all of his commandments, if we will walk along the path which these latter-day scriptures point out, all of the blessings promised in these scriptures will be ours. Some day we shall come back into the presence of the Father and the Son and receive eternal life.

My brothers and sisters, I have merely given a brief analysis of these three great treasures. Let me admonish that we all study the scriptures—that we study them day and night, and that we keep their teachings in our minds continually. The Savior said: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."<sup>14</sup>

The holy scriptures have been my closest companion throughout my life. I love them and read them continually. I think I have gone through the Book of Mormon forty-five times. Every time I read it I find new thoughts. I believe with all my heart, as I said in the beginning of my talk, that these three latter-day scriptures, together with the Bible, constitute some of the greatest treasures that we possess. If we will permit them to do so, they will serve as our guides to bring us back unto God. May our Heavenly Father bless us that we may fully utilize effectively in our lives these great treasures, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP CARL W. BUEHNER

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

Y DEAR brethren and sisters: I think if I were perfectly honest with you at this moment, I would tell you that I appreciate shaking before you the next few minutes.

This has been a marvelous conference. I expected it to be so, knowing of some of the great events that have happened in the Church during this past year. I am sure it has been one of the greatest years in the history of the Church. When I think of temple work and temple building alone—one temple dedicated, one ready for dedication, ground broken for a third, a fourth one ready for construction immediately, and land purchased for a fifth, all in one year—it is a great day in the history of the Church.

We have heard marvelous reports of what has happened in other parts of the Church, the creation of new missions, and the growth of the Church. I was very impressed yesterday morning when President McKay announced how many new members had come into the Church in the past year, I suppose more than in any other one year in the history of the Church. I have been interested in how some of these new converts have joined the Church and the reasons for their joining the Church. I thought today I would like to say just a few words about some of them.

I remember a mother standing up in a conference in the southern part of Utah, giving credit for her membership in the Church to a four-year-old daughter. She said, "My husband and I and our three children moved into this community a few months ago, and shortly after we became established, we decided that our children should have some religious affiliation. I do not know why I did not think the parents should, but

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Carl W. Buehner of the Presiding Bishopric will now speak to us. He will be followed by Elder Spencer W. Kimball.

at least we thought the children ought to have some. So we suggested to the children that they go to Church with other children living in the community. A few weeks later my little daughter, four years old, came home to me after Sunday School one morning, and said, "Mother, how is it that everyone else's mother goes to Sunday School with them, but you don't go to Sunday School with me?" And the mother said, "You might as well have stabbed me in the back with a dagger, it cut that deep. I decided I wasn't going to have my little daughter accuse me of being the only mother not attending Sunday School with her daughter, so I began going." Then she said, "I met some of the most wonderful people that I have ever learned to know in my life, and I heard things in Sunday School that were new and impressive to me, and it wasn't very long after that, that I became a member of this Church."

I have heard some who have had some unusual experiences in becoming members of the Church through the building program. I was down in a stake in California a while ago. We had a little time to visit, and the stake president took me to a new branch that was under construction. While we were riding to the new building, he said, "You know, this has been a very unusual project. The Church has furnished the material, and the branch has done all of the work. They have a man here who is a non-member of the Church who has contributed free all of the plumbing labor for this building, and a senior member of the Aaronic Priesthood who has done all of the electrical work in the building."

As we approached the building, I noticed the roof was on, and the outside was stuccoed. We went around to the front. There we saw a plaster mixer running, and a woman shoveling sand and hard-wall into the mixer. That seemed a little unusual to me. We walked into the building, and I was made acquainted with the branch president. I said to him, "Say, I am a little worried about a woman outside, shoveling sand and hard-wall into a mixer." He said, "You better be careful what you say; that is my wife. She is a part of my firm. She is the best hod carrier we have here in Yucaipa." Just at that time she came into the front door with a large wheelbarrow full of plaster and loaded up her husband's mortar board until he could not talk to us any longer. He had to get it on the wall. I feel certain that the man who did the plumbing in that building has plumbed himself right into the Church. I am quite sure he has.

Saturday, October 1

I have heard of others who have painted their way into the Church. Not long ago I heard of a man who had some good Mormon neighbors who were building a chapel. He was a painter. He was invited to assist in painting the chapel, and he not only made a fine contribution painting, but he painted himself right into the Church.

I heard of a man down in Las Vegas, just a month or so ago, that plastered himself into the Church. So you see, you can become interested in the Church in many different ways.

I think we are losing some opportunities if we do not invite our neighbors who are not members of the Church to help us in the erection of our wonderful buildings. The plasterer was thrilled as he told me of his profession. He was invited to come over and help. He met the finest men he has known working on that building. Through this contact, he became a member of the Church.

The most recent I have heard is about a minister of a church, who, I think, is going to preach himself in. The chorus we heard this morning is bound to sing people into the Church. Through our living the gospel, we can melt people into the Church. But here is a man who is going to preach himself in and may bring with him a number of his own congregation. I would like to read a little from a talk he delivered. It is a good Mormon sermon delivered by the Reverend Frank S. Morley of the Grace Presbyterian Church of Calgary, Alberta, Canada. His subject was, "What we can learn from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." This is what he said:

"About all I knew of the Mormons until comparatively recently was what I had read in Zane Grey. I remembered an adverse picture built around one of Zane Grey's novels that I had read when I was a boy, that I had seen as a boy. That sort of impression remained with me unhappily until comparatively recently when I came to know a good many of that Church more intimately, and I began to find out a bit more about that Church. Especially did I find it out when two young men came to call on me not long after I had been in Calgary. They came from afar down in the United States. They came just to talk over their faith with me. I thought that was very wonderful of these two young men. It took some courage—at least I would have thought it took some courage to come up and face a rather formidable Presbyterian minister, and they walked in and talked—just young fellows who had just started to shave, I think—and began to talk about their faith. I asked them how they were managing to make a living because they said they paid their own expenses, and one boy told me had had just written home and told his father to sell a cow he owned and to send up the money. They dedicate two years to such work and pay their own expenses. After that, another couple of young men came up to see me and also talked about their faith and answered some more of my questions.

"At the [Utah] centennial celebration in 1947, the Mormon Church said they had sent out 51,612 missionaries in that one hundred years—going out for two-year terms and paying their own expenses! They had in 1949, 8,695 at work in thirty-eight countries. But since then they are sending out something like four thousand annually, so I guess they have more missionaries at work in the world now. An amazing missionary work for a Church that is comparatively small and comparatively new.

"Now what are the things that I like about this Church? First, their clear-cut statement of faith. For example, their first statement is that they believe in God, in Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Spirit. It had been said to me that Mormons do not believe in Jesus Christ! Such superstitions and misunderstandings we have regarding them need clearing up. They believe in things that we would find a little peculiar, perhaps, like eternal progression, revelation taking place today—prophetic revelation—and eternal marriage. They don't believe that death makes any divorce. But is this faith bad?

"The second thing I like about them is that their religion enters into their life immediately. Idleness, laziness, living off the government—these things to them are evil. They believe that one should work and should not be supported by the government.

"Third, is that it is a family-centered religion. This family-centered religion begins with family prayers in the morning and family prayers at night, and no food is eaten until it is blessed. The entire family goes to Church, led by the father and the mother. There is a home evening each week. Isn't that a wonderful thing? One evening in the week everybody is home in the Mormon family, and they again have family life.

"In order to hold office in the Mormon Church, you have to follow the Book of Wisdom strictly—no tea, no coffee, no liquor, and no tobacco (which will immediately rule out a good many of us). You have to be morally clean, you have to pay a tithe, and you have to be an active worker in the Church. Now I don't know whether it's because of this way of life to which their religion is related so intimately or not, but they are perhaps the healthiest people in the world. During the war, in Utah you found more men acceptable for the services than any other state in the United States.

"The death rate in the United States is 10 per 1000, but among the Mormons it is under 6 per 1000. The births per 1000 in the United States are 24 but among the Mormons 38. In the leading 22 civilized nations of the world, the average number of children born out of wedlock are 74 per 1000. In the United States 40 per 1000 are born out of wedlock, but in Utah only 10, and in Idaho (which is next in proportion being a Mormon state) 11. An amazing contrast! They have a very low divorce rate also.

"Another thing I like in the Church is its fellowship, especially among young people. They keep their young people around the Church. And another thing, and it may result from this fellowship, they believe in early marriage. That's a good idea. As a matter of fact, they prepare their young people for marriage. It would be a fine thing if our young people were prepared more for marriage. The protestant church has a most inadequate preparation of young people for marriage.

"Another thing I like about their Church is their devotion. Take the stake president for example. A stake is a certain area that goes a long way outside of Calgary—takes in a vast area. The stake president is unpaid. The man that holds that position is a most prominent citizen—one of our busiest—and yet that stake president gives this sort of time to his Church: He gives one night a month for faculty meeting of the stake officers. He gives one night a week for a stake presidency meeting. He gives two Sundays a month to visit the wards. He gives one full afternoon one Saturday a month. He attends two general conferences a year at Salt Lake City, and they last for three days each. He has four stake conferences a year where he gives one and one-half days each, and one day a month he gives to the temple. Now just think of that sort of time! Just think of it! I can't; it appalls me. [And here I would like to say, I am glad he does not know how much more time a stake president or a bishop puts in for the Church or he might faint.] That amazing sort of time! We have nothing like it! In our church there's nothing at all resembling that sort of sacrifice of time, and I know my church from coast to coast.

"I think also of their generosity not only in the matter of time, but with their tithes. They pay one-tenth. On the first Sunday of each month they have a fast offering. They go without two meals on that Sunday and give the money to the poor. President Hoover said that if all churches were to practise help to the poor as the Mormon Church does, there would not have to be any state support whatever. They take care of their members, and that's another thing I like about their Church. Their wards are divided into what they call 'blocks,' which merely means a section of the city, and in that section there will be from 3 to 8 families who are Mormons, and they will be visited by two teachers. Every month they will be visited by two teachers. [And I wish that were right, too.] They may be missed this month for some reason, they may be in California or away when called upon, but they will be visited next month. Every family in the Mormon Church is visited by these teachers from 6 to 12 times every year. Last month they aimed at 100 percent visitation, and they failed. They didn't get 100 percent. They only got 95 percent. [And if the rest of you do that well, then you will hear no more complaints from the ward teaching committee.] Some folk were away when they were called on. Normally their program is about 80 percent efficient in their calling. These teachers do three things. They carry, first, a message for the month. Secondly, they go to help, if any is needed, and then they encourage activity in Church life.

"What message does this hold for us? First of all, this Church is composed of laymen. There is no one in the Calgary Stake who is paid at all. Isn't that astounding? It's a layman's church. Just think of the work these laymen do. Our protestant church is built upon laymen. Our Presbyterian Church is built upon laymen. Unless we can revive the laymen of the Presbyterian Church, I don't believe it has any great future. All of the work except some inconsequential things are turned back upon the minister of the Church. Unless we can get the laymen of our church to teach, I tell you our church will be a dwindling church.

"The teaching we get from this Mormon Church is this—that religion is not to be taken easily. A religion that imposes no obligation is no religion."

He said many other wonderful things. I have the complete sermon over in my office, if some of you would like to get the rest. I cannot help feeling that this man is on his way to preaching himself into our Church. And if he talks to the same audience another time or two, he is going to bring some of them with him.

I am interested in the new converts to the Church. I am grateful to see them coming from all walks of life and through all the different channels we have in the Church. I would like to say to those listening to me today who are not members of the Church: Investigate the Church; listen to the missionaries; work your way into the Church on a building project; catch the spirit through the singing of these choruses or through any other avenue that will impress you with the most important thing that can come into your life—a testimony of the gospel. And then for some of you that are not as active as you should be, I would like to say to you: Become more active, enjoy the great blessings that our Father in heaven has in store for the faithful of this great Church and kingdom of his, established for the last time upon the earth.

I would like to close by adding my testimony that I know that God lives, and that Jesus Christ is his Son, the Savior of the world, and that the gospel has been restored in this Dispensation of the Fulness of Times through his servant, the Prophet Joseph Smith.

One other thought I would like to leave is this: "It is recommended that we take an interest in the future . . . that's where we'll spend the rest of our life."

This may be a good thought to close on. May the Lord bless each and every one of us, I pray, humbly, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Carl W. Buehner of the Presiding Bishopric has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Council of the Twelve, who, six months ago, was appointed to visit the European Missions.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BROTHERS AND SISTERS: Never before has the word home meant so much to me as it did this week when I came with others into New York harbor, saw Old Glory and the Statue of Liberty, and as I flew west and saw the dry plains, and the high mountains of the Uintahs, and the frost-colored Wasatch Mountains, and then landed at the airport here in Salt Lake City and to be met by my family and my brethren.

When we landed in Hannover, Germany, many weeks ago, Sister Gregory said to me, as we drove away from the airport, "Now, Brother Kimball, you have been all over Europe. What did you see that was the most interesting?" I do not know what she had in her mind, but I am sure there would be many who would be thinking of statues and monuments, cathedrals and museums, rivers and glaciers. It did not take me long to give her the answer: "The most interesting thing I saw was the people."

In 1937, Sister Kimball and I went to Europe as tourists. We took with us a camera and much film. We saw all of the strange, funny things in Europe. We went through many of the museums, and I think most of the cathedrals. We saw the monuments and much that was of interest. We saw bicycles by the millions, we saw women working in the fields, and we laughed as we wrote in our journals about the odd, unusual things.

In 1955 we went to Europe without a camera—the only persons in Europe, I think, who did not have a camera. We saw the bicycles as means to an end, to take people to their work and to bring people to Church services. We saw women not only working in the fields, digging potatoes and planting crops, but we saw them also in their homes and in the Church work. We saw into their hearts; we heard their testimonies; we felt their love.

I was grateful for this privilege that came to us, to meet the people and to see what the gospel does for them when it enters their lives. We realized before that there were Norwegians and Finns and Germans and French, but when the gospel comes, they all melt into one composite figure.

We bring to you the greetings of your missionaries who are in the European countries, a thousand of them. We heard a thousand testimonies, sweet, resonant, glorious testimonies from hearts filled with faith and sacrifice. I looked into their hearts, and I found them good. They love you folk at home more than they have ever told you. One young man said, "Oh, I hope my sick father will live until I return so that I can tell him what I really think of him—how much I appreciate him."

I learned from these testimonies, of hundreds of people who have become active in the Church through their missionary sons and daughters, some who have joined the Church, even fathers and mothers. One example: A mother dissuaded her eldest son from going into the mission field. She and his father were not members of the Church. They said, "You are wasting your time. Go to college instead; do something that is worth while. Do not go on a mission." They used all of their persuasive powers, but finally, when they realized that he was positively going, they said, "All right, go ahead." Two weeks before the boy sailed from New York, his mother approached him one morning and said, "Son, today I am being baptized."

Another boy said, "My mother works fourteen hours every day to sustain me on my mission." Another boy said, "I am on my mission because of the blessings of the Lord. My highschool graduate brother could not go to college if I went on my mission, but my mother said, 'You are going on your mission.' And as I was about ready to leave, we had word that my younger brother had received a scholarship to the university, and good neighbors brought in a hundred dollar bill to put into my hand, and I am still in the mission field and nearly ready to go home."

Saturday, October 1

I shall never forget a certain testimony meeting. A young man who was still quite emotional after the upset of the week said to us: "I just got a cablegram last week telling of the death of my father." He continued: "I telephoned across a continent and across an ocean, and I heard my mother's voice on the wire, the sweet voice of my newly widowed mother." He said, "I am the youngest of her eight children, and I said to her, 'Mom, how are you?' and she said, 'I am all right, son; I want you to stay and fill your mission. The Lord will take care of us.'"

That kind of faith in parents, that kind of faith in sons and daughters, brings rich dividends.

I bring you greetings from your servicemen, men in the military. Your boys, some of whom have their families with them, love the gospel with all their souls and show that love by their actions. We met eight hundred of them down in the Bavarian Alps at Berchtesgaden, underneath Hitler's famous Eagle's Nest which stands high on the Alpine mountain above. The hotels were evacuated and turned over to this great concourse of men and their families.

I remember just as the four-day program was ending how the servicemen with their families were moving out of the hotel. There had been no smoke, no rowdiness, but as they moved out, there came in a woman's club, women with their cigarets, fouling the air in the hotel lobbies which had been so clean and sweet for four days, something those hotels, perhaps, had never seen before.

I remember well the banquet which we held down on Chiemsee Lake, in another building built by Hitler and his associates, but which now is used by the United States Army and which they turned over to our boys for the retreat program. I remember this long hall, surely as long as this tabernacle, with 650 people sitting around the tables—mostly our own people, but a few other chaplains and special guests. There were 650 glasses of milk sitting on those tables, and not one glass or cup of anything else. I think that Europe has never seen anything like that before.

I remember these servicemen as I saw them assisting elderly women, Austrians and French and Germans, up the two or three or four flights of stairs to the branch houses.

I think of these young men and their financing chapels which they would never inhabit. Down in Heidelberg they were raising the money to build a chapel which would be used by the local Saints and which they themselves would never occupy. Again at Salzburg, Austria, thousands of dollars were raised by them to match that which was so generously given by the Church, and another beautiful structure is being erected there. Tall, clean handsome, stalwart young men, in England, France, Germany, Austria, even in Austria where they are now watching with great interest the packing of the suitcases and trunks by the eastern neighbors.

I bring you greetings from the members, 36,000 of them over there, about half of whom we saw and to whom we bore witness, and many of whose testimonies we heard. We saw them in all these many countries. In Norway from Oslo north, through all the principal cities. At Trondheim our hearts beat a little faster as we realized that that was Brother Widtsøe's home, and we flew over the little island where he was born, and we knew how happy he would be to see the chapel which is now being erected in his home town. Here in Norway we found happy people, handsome and healthy, too proud to be petty. We flew low over the fjords in seaplanes. We could see all the little fishing villages and the beauty of the fjords and the mountains.

We came to Boda, up in the north part, way up in the Arctic Circle, and there we saw a sign which said, "twenty-two hours to Los Angeles" over the North Pole. In fact, we went so far north that we could almost smell the sulphur in the Southern California smog.

In Narvik the lights went out at 10:30 every night, according to city ordinance. After our meetings we sat eating some refreshments furnished by kind friends, and the lights went out, but we hardly knew it. We went right on eating and finished our evening and then went home, and at two o'clock that morning, as we prepared to go into Sweden, I read the newspaper outdoors and then again in the room, without any lights. We were far up in the north country.

We crossed over the Swedish border and the fjords and the thick ice, and the deep snow. We saw the Laplanders and the reindeer; we saw nearly everybody but Santa Claus there in the north country.

We found the Swedes were solid, reliable, wonderful people, and we traveled three weeks down through Sweden, to all the principal cities, dedicated eight chapels in that area and came to the beautiful green carpet of the level country of the south where they have more windmills, they say, than are found in Holland.

Finland was a place which brought us a great joy, and we found youth gathered together there, Finnish youth, strong and resolute. Finland has been the football of neighbor nations through the centuries—Finland, little Finland, the honest little country that pays its debts, Finland that has just paid its war assessment, not debt, and has just completed paying the levy which was assessed by its eastern neighbors. They never call them by their names; they always call them the neighbors. Little Finland is on a granite peninsula which the glaciers cleaned of its soil and left hard and difficult, but these people, solid and determined, are like the granite on which they build their houses, and they carry on. We found the people, and especially the members of the Church there, 400 and some odd in number, growing and faithful, devoted missionaries among them.

Denmark has its level country, so level in fact that you sometimes wonder if you are seeing a great ocean liner crossing the land. It does not seem that there is water beyond. They are a happy, independent people.

We went to Britain, over to Britain where four societies are rolled all into one—four societies that have been likened by one writer to a horse, a bull, a mule, and a deer: the Scotsmen with their thrift and their conscientious loveableness; the Welsh people with their shrewd, intense, patriotic devotions; the Irish, with their whimsical, mystical, delightful personalities; and then the English with their determination—the people who sang as they were being bombed almost to the last inch, "There will always be an England."

We went to the Netherlands and found strong people there. They have been fighting against the ocean and other elements all their eternities. They are wholesome, warmhearted people who take their families with them everywhere they go, even on their bicycles. Two bicycles will take a family of four or five or six to Church, to the beach, riding. They go as families.

Belgium is in both the French and the Netherlands missions. Here we find people much like the French, to whom I had difficulty at first to get close, but they grow on one, and I found sweet, lovable people, old women who loved the gospel as any of our mothers love the gospel, and youth who are willing to sacrifice and give themselves to it.

We have found some Spanish members in France, Italian members in Switzerland. We have Indonesian brothers and sisters in Holland and Yugoslavs in Austria, members of the Church, faithful members. Greeks, we found, and even Russians in East Germany belonging to the Church. One of our East German lady missionaries was begging for the privilege of going on a mission among the Russians over in East Germany or in Russia.

We went into the Saar, to Saarbruchen, and saw the devastation there. One cannot forget the war; its ruins are everywhere present, though it has been ten years. I cannot imagine what Brother Benson saw a decade ago, when there is still so much destruction. I crossed the Sarr at early dawn. I walked with the workers as they went with their lunch baskets over to their employment, and I came to a section of the city, the old section, which has hardly had a broken brick disturbed since the bomb dust settled, and all of the ugly terrible things that were there ten years ago still remain ghosts of the past.

The first morning in Berlin we came to the Charlottensburg Chapel for our meeting with the missionaries. We had already become somewhat used to the sight of armless men and legless men on the streets. We saw sightless men and crutch-supported men and battle-scarred men, but we were wholly unprepared for the experience that was to meet us on the path before the chapel when there came running to us a human form like a derelict at sea. His hair was disheveled, his eyes glaring, his face unshaved, his clothes in tatters. He came shuffling to us almost as much like animal as man. He wrapped his arms around our feet; he kissed our hands; he hugged our arms, all the time uttering a plaintive cry and finally spreading his fingers over his eyes to simulate prison bars he cried out in anguish, "Six years in prison. Today, released from enemy prison." We wept inside as we saw this reduced human, this being who like many tens of thousands of others had suffered similar fates.

Saturday, October 1

Second Day

Other heartaches came in various parts of the city: old women pacing long-worn station platforms meeting trains and busses, their placards reading, "Have you seen my boy?" Sometimes his picture was on the placard, and pictures and descriptions were in newspapers of lost sons and husbands and fathers.

The husband of one of our own lovely sisters disappeared ten years ago. A twenty-five year prison term was meted this political prisoner, but for five long years the family never knew whether he lived or died. After five years he was located in a prison with twenty more years to serve. Now his wife may visit him under guard a half hour each three months; he may write twenty lines once a month, letters which are censored.

I arose very early one morning in Berlin and walked out to see the ruins on every hand—across the street, around the block, everywhere they were. I plunged into a sad, reminiscent reverie and fell into the mood to write it down and returned to the typewriter.

May I quote a few lines from my journal:

Friday, August 26, 1955:

Ten years now since the world war tragedy!

Here were fences around the former grand estates
Wire fences,
Rusty fences,
Wind-blown rotting fences,
Proud, haughty fences leveled in humiliation.

Metal gates hanging unkept; creaking hinges.

Naked walls, irregular walls, pock-marked walls, and weeds growing from their toothlike stabbing jaggedness;

Green ivy trying hard to cover the nakedness of walls—gaping walls—absent walls but with scores of broken bricks still indicating where—

Chipped walls,
Grass atop the jagged walls holding brave little flowers struggling for existence.

There were windows, too many windows, cold, open windows, open to storm and sky

Boarded-up windows,
Bricked-up windows,
Glassless windows.

There were jagged chimneys piercing skys, Iron bedsteads hanging from chimneys, Plumbing pipes reaching into space like dragons' claws.

Here were trees—
Limbless trees except for new growth,
Tall trees leaning, branches all one side, Amputated limbs and trunks, but not with saw.

Jagged arms pointing at—at whom are they pointing?

Vines climbing naked trunks to cover broken limbs and torn and battered trees.

Small trees, ragged shrubs growing from the rubble where once were pianos, rugs and pictures;

Trees growing untended
Vines climbing and spreading to cover ugliness.

Nature trying to sweeten sourness.
Grotesque figures standing out against the sky, pointing into space like accusing hands and fingers.

Empty pools,
Broken swimming pools, a reminder of leisure and luxury of forgotten rich.

Twisted steel,
Arches without buildings,
Doorways without walls
Porches and doorways, nothing else, porches and doorways.

Sagging floors,
Ceilings of splintered wood, shattered plaster hanging like cobwebs.

Excavations like graves,

Excavations which are graves—
Excavations where rodents play and insects find their homes.

Proud estates, quarter blocks, ghost yards, spectre houses, all so still.
Silence, silence, deathly silence
No playful shouts, no children laugh.
Silent walls, silent houses, silent blocks, silent death.
Bricks are here—
Broken bricks,
Pulverized bricks,
Piled up bricks, covering bones of humans never found.

Rubble, rubble, rubble,
Foundations up-ended,
Rotting wood,
Twisted steel,
Destruction, devastation, desolation,
Broken fountains,
Shattered statues,
Creaking shutters
Rusty mail boxes,
Rustiness!
Ugliness!
Jaggedness!
Screaming jaggedness!

Unmolested squirrels scampering,
Tiny birds twittering
To bring back life to deadness.

Walls, chimneys, trees, grotesque writhing apparitions!
Persons? Things? Dragons? Disfigured, deformed things
Slumped in misery and shame.

We went across the corridor into Berlin. We came to feel much as they seemed to feel, I think. The slamming of a door startles one. A new voice one has not heard disturbs one for the moment. There is the corridor with its numerous inspections by Americans and Russians. I went to catch the train as we came out, and as I got out of the car at the depot, in the dark, I heard a strange voice which startled me. It said, "Mr. Kimball. Let me see your passport and travel permits with the Russian translations." I found it was only one of the United States Army boys, but coming out of the darkness it was quite a shock.

We held a meeting all day with the district presidents, about a hundred of them from the Russian Zone, from Koenigsberg down to Dresden and Leipzig. From all over the area they had come in for this meeting, and I stood three hours without interruption explaining to them the doctrines, the program, the policy, the plan of the Church. They cannot get much help from the mission because the mission authorities cannot pass through the iron curtain. They can come over to the American sector once in a while with some jeopardy to themselves.

Another day we had thirty-four missionaries from beyond the curtain, wonderful missionaries, in an all-day session of testimony and instruction. There were twelve young women and twenty-two young men, just like your own sons, not quite so expensively groomed, few cameras, little money to spend. Many of them average about $3.40 a month.

That is what sustains a missionary with the depreciated currency of East Germany. Thirty-four dollars would take care of ten missionaries a month; a hundred dollars would nearly take care of the whole mission for a month or would sustain one missionary through a mission. They do not have many luxuries, very few indeed, but their testimonies are warm and convincing. I could have spent weeks with them, they inspired me so!

We met many families that have been disrupted. One sweet member's husband had been the district president and had disappeared ten years ago and has never been heard from since. The little ten-year-old son who played about his father's knees at the time he disappeared, has been the branch president over in a place in West Germany to which they had been evacuated, and now he is on a full-time mission. It was my privilege the other day to see that mother and that son together in the Swiss Temple through the blessings of a kind soul in America who made it possible for this woman to go to Switzerland. I saw the sweet mother and the stalwart son embrace and kiss as they met in the holy temple in Bern, and they went through the temple together for their endowments and are waiting now, of course, until they find their husband-father or know that he is dead so that the rest of the temple work may be attended to.

The privilege of my attending the temple dedication was a glorious one: to be with President McKay; to feel the inspiration of that occasion; to feel, as he has expressed, the nearness of those who may generally be thought to be far away; to see the glistening eyes of the Saints coming from all these countries; to hear their whispered gratuities; to feel their newly found peace. Someone said yesterday, there never should have been a Babel. There having been a Babel, it is in reverse now. The confusion of Babel is being overcome. The Finns and the Dutch and the British, the Germans and the French and the Hollanders, the Scandinavians, Italians, Austrians all meeting under one roof! All of them heard the voice of the prophet of the Lord. Everyone of them heard his message in his own tongue. Everyone of them heard the ordinances of the gospel, the ordinances of the temple, in his own tongue. The confusion of Babel is in reverse.

The hatreds so prevalent in the past, are melting—French, Britishers, and Hollanders, and Germans, all together with love for each other. I am sure the hatred is not all gone in the nation, but I feel it is greatly reduced among the Saints, and they love each other, and their is sacrifice, and there is devotion, and there is faith, a great faith among those good people.

So I come home from Europe, after six months of glorious experiences with the people, with the fine leadership, with the excellent missionaries, the faithful servicemen. I come home with a deeper appreciation for the gospel and the Church and its people.

Nineteen hundred and fifty-five is an important year. If the press of Europe knew what had actually happened in 1955, every paper would have had screaming headlines and full-page, front-page articles, about the happenings of the year. But we know that when the Father and the Son appeared in 1820, there were no headlines, and perhaps no newspaper heralded the coming of the Melchizedek Priesthood to the world in 1829 or the organization of the Church in 1830 or the dedication of the temple in Kirtland in 1836. In 1955, the priesthood quorums came to all the missions of the Church, including the European missions; the temple came to Europe; and the Church came to Europe as it has never come before; and now, as we have told the Saints in Europe in hundreds of meetings in many different locations, if the Saints in Europe will remain in their lands and will build the Church and the kingdom in Europe and train and hold their children and bring them into the holy temples in Europe for marriage, the kingdom can grow and prosper, and God will bless them, and that I know.

I bear you my testimony, as I express my gratitude upon returning home. I bear you my witness that the gospel is true, it is glorious, it is good, it is wholesome, it is divine, and I say this earnestly but humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Will you please take note of the following:

He who has just concluded speaking is Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Council of the Twelve who has just completed a six months' mission visiting the European Missions of the Church.

The following announcement is of importance as regarding the Sunday morning broadcast. The broadcast of the Tabernacle Choir, to be heard in this building tomorrow morning, was recorded in Zurich, Switzerland. This broadcast will be heard in the Tabernacle and on the air from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. The doors of the Tabernacle will be opened at 9:15 tomorrow morning. Those who enter the building after 9:30 a.m. are asked to do so quietly, and without conversation, so that visitors assembled here may hear the recorded broadcast undisturbed.

As we have listened to your inspirational singing, you dear young folks, I have been reminded of the poet's tribute to youth:

How beautiful is youth! how bright it gleams

With its illusions, aspirations, dreams!
Book of Beginnings, Story without End,
Each maid a heroine, and every man a friend!

I wish to add to that, how inspirationally you have sung this day, and awakened righteous pride in our hearts for your willing service rendered; and the third thought—years rush by us like the wind. You are enjoying youth today. You have rendered service which all the congregation here assembled and listening in, have enjoyed. It will be only a few years when you will be carrying the responsibilities of the Church. God bless you that you may so live that you will be worthy of the inspiration and guidance of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, who stands at the head of our Church, and who loves every one of you and would have you join him in representing the whole human family, eventually, to his Father, our Father, and God. Thank you and your leaders, and God bless you.

This great Chorus will now sing, "Psalm 150," conducted by Sister Ruth Hardy Funk. The closing prayer will be offered by Elder John L. Murdock, President of the Santa Rosa Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 7 o'clock this evening, when the General Meeting of the Priesthood of the Church will be held in the Salt Lake Tabernacle.

Only those holding the Priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the Priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. This Priesthood Session will not be broadcast, excepting in the overflow meetings that have already been appointed, in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and by direct wire over a public address system to members of the Priesthood assembled, in addition to Barratt Hall and the Assembly Hall, in fifty-seven other Church buildings in Idaho, Utah, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming, Nevada, and California. It will probably be the largest assembly of Priesthood ever held in the Church.

The session at 10 o'clock Sunday morning will be broadcast over the stations already named.

The Choir will now sing "Psalm 150." Benediction will be offered by Elder John L. Murdock, and this conference will be adjourned until this evening.

---

The M.I.A. Chorus sang an anthem, "Psalm 150," after which the closing prayer was offered by Elder John L. Murdock, President of the Santa Rosa Stake.

Conference adjourned until 7:00 p.m.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held in the Tabernacle at 7:00 p.m., Saturday, October 1, 1955.

The Tabernacle, auditorium and galleries, was filled to capacity. The Assembly Hall just south of the Tabernacle, and the Barratt Hall were also filled with people. Provision had been made for the overflow crowds to meet in these buildings and see and hear the services as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle. In addition, the services were broadcast by direct wire over a public address system to members of the Priesthood who had assembled in 50 other Church buildings in Utah, Idaho, Wyoming, Nevada, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, and California.

The singing for this meeting was furnished by the Bonneville Stake Priesthood Chorus, under the direction of David A. Shand. Roy M. Darley was at the organ console.

President David O. McKay presided and conducted the services of this meeting.

President David O. McKay:

My dear fellow workers in the Cause of the Redeemer: I wish that each of you might stand where I am now standing and behold this inspirational sight. It cannot be duplicated, I think, anywhere else in the world. And there are others crowding other halls, as we are crowding this Tabernacle, all one in thought, in purpose, and I hope, in brotherhood.

You will be interested to know that these services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall, in Barratt Hall, and in addition, by direct wire over a public address system to members of the Priesthood assembled in 57 other Church buildings in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming, Nevada, and California.

The singing during this session will be furnished by the Bonneville Stake Priesthood Chorus, with Elder David A. Shand as Director, and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ. This chorus will now sing, "The Lord's Prayer." After the singing Elder David B. Haight, president of the Palo Alto Stake, will offer the opening prayer.

As an opening number the Bonneville Stake Priesthood Chorus sang "The Lord's Prayer," after which the invocation was offered by Elder David B. Haight, President of the Palo Alto Stake.

President David O. McKay:

In case some of our brethren listening in are a little late, he who offered the invocation is Elder David B. Haight, president of the Palo Alto Stake.

The Bonneville Stake Priesthood Chorus will sing, "Zion Hears the Watchman Singing," directed by Elder David A. Shand.

The Chorus then sang, "Zion Hears the Watchman Singing."

President David O. McKay:

I have often said that love is the divinest attribute of the human soul, and I believe that. I think that sympathy is next to it. There are others who say that reverence is the highest virtue of the human soul. I believe that Carlyle places reverence as the highest attribute.

The First Presidency, in anticipating this vast audience, and the importance of this great Priesthood meeting, thought that it would be a good place to center our minds upon Reverence, and the need of applying it or expressing it in our houses of worship.

Consequently, we assigned the subject, "How to Obtain Better Order and More Reverence in Our Houses of Worship," to two of your associates, presidents of stakes. We shall now hear from President Thomas W. Muir, president of the Emigration Stake, on that subject.

ELDER THOMAS W. MUIR

President of the Emigration Stake

MY BELOVED BRETHREN of the Priesthood, I can assure you that it is an awesome task to stand before you this evening, in the presence of the Lord's anointed, and of you my brethren, and attempt to discuss the subject of obtaining and maintaining reverence in the Church. Were it not for the sympathy and the love of my presiding brethren, and for the prayers which I feel are in your hearts for me, I should shrink from this great responsibility.

When I consider the number of brethren who are gathered here this evening, and those who will listen to the proceedings of this session of this Conference, I am grateful to my Father in Heaven that, through the medium of the great inventions that have been brought to us for our benefit, through the inspiration of our Father in Heaven, the messages of this great Conference may be heard by our brethren and sisters throughout the length and breadth of the Church.

Someone has said that "reverence is the mark of a divine testimony and of sincere worship." I should like to agree, my brethren, with that definition, for without a divine testimony burning in our hearts that God lives and that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the World, we should find it difficult to worship them in spirit and in truth.

That is what we have met for in this great Conference of the Church. We have been invited to meet here where we may hear the messages of the Lord's anointed and where we, under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord, may resolve to correct and better our lives, that we may more fully live in keeping with the commandments and the desires of our Father in Heaven.

I believe this matter of reverence is a personal matter with each one of us and as we come to love our Heavenly Father more dearly, and as we bring into our lives the realization of the great mission of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, we become more reverent in our thoughts concerning them and in the actions of our lives.

I believe among other things that the matter of reverence resolves itself into responsibilities which you and I have. First I shall name an acceptance of our responsibility to worship and to adore God our Father and his Son, Jesus Christ. I am sure that no people upon the face of the earth have a better understanding of the attributes and nature of God our Father, and our Lord, Jesus Christ, than have we.

We who have a testimony of the Gospel believe that in that Sacred Grove, on that beautiful spring morning, the Father and Son actually appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and this is the basis of every testimony and belief which we have, and were it not that we believe implicitly and without doubt in this testimony of the First Vision, we should not be led to believe any of the other principles of the Gospel of Jesus Christ which have been revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

Because of this testimony which we have, and this feeling which is within our hearts, our minds, and our souls, we are led to the conclusion that our great responsibility is to honor and reverence God our Father, and his Son, Jesus Christ.

Then I think another conclusion we must come to is that an acceptance of this belief brings to us the great responsibility that no blasphemy shall pass our lips, that our lives shall be wholly in keeping with that which we know to be the truth, that we shall not be found telling rude or lewd stories, but that our language in all that we say must be in accordance with that which we believe.

Then I think we have the great responsibility to honor and revere and reverence those who have been chosen, set apart, and ordained as the divine servants of our Father in Heaven, and they should know that we of the Priesthood have in our hearts a desire to sustain and support them in the great responsibilities that are theirs.

Then I believe that we have the great responsibility of honoring the Sabbath Day and keeping it holy. Coupled with that is the obligation to visit the House of the Lord on the Sabbath Day and then conduct ourselves within the sacred edifices which have been dedicated to the worship of Almighty God to the end that we may have the Holy Spirit of our Father and His Son, Jesus Christ, to be with us.

Now, what is our problem, my brethren of the Priesthood? I believe that you all know that as Latter-day Saints we are a friendly people. We usually attend Sacrament Service with our neighbors, those with whom we are well acquainted, and throughout the Church it has become a habit with us to meet with them and talk to them, prior to the convening of our Sacrament Services and sometimes during those Sacrament Services, to the annoyance of some and to an exhibition of a lack of reverence on our part.

I know that most of you have had within your hearing criticism levelled at you by investigators and others who are not members of the Church, that we are not a reverent people. I believe that we shall have to accept this indictment of our friends. I believe that the time has now come within the Church that we should weigh this important matter within our minds and see if our Sacrament Services, and the other services which we hold in the name of our Father in Heaven, cannot come more closely to that which we desire.

Now, I know the power and influence of the Priesthood of this Church is great and that each one of us, individually, accepting the responsibility to teach and persuade others to live in a spirit of reverence would accomplish wonders within our Church. I believe that each of us who hold the Priesthood has a responsibility to bring to the attention of our families the condition which exists.

I believe the brethren of the Church who are the patriarchs of their own homes have the greatest influence, or at least should have, with their families of any who might talk to them. I believe that we, as fathers in Israel, have the responsibility of calling our children and our wives into counsel with us and there we should explain to them the great necessity of our conforming our lives to this great principle of reverence.

Saturday, October 1

I would like to say that I believe that those who are in charge of the Aaronic Priesthood of the Church, as advisors, as bishops of wards, should explain this great principle of reverence to our young men. I believe that the auxiliary organizations of the Church, through their officers and teachers, should explain that which is required and that which is desired, that our services may be more beautiful and in keeping with that which our Prophet desires.

I would like to say something, too, about the physical conditions in our Houses of Worship. I believe that when we invite the Spirit of our Heavenly Father to meet with us there, that his house should be immaculate. When our Father told us that we should keep our bodies clean, I believe that he also meant that we should keep our Houses of Worship in the same way. You are all aware that at our Sacrament Services the central and most important feature is the administration and passing of the Sacrament to the membership of the Church. I should like to see the day when every Sacrament table in the Church would be graced with the finest and most immaculate linen that is possible to place upon that table. I believe that there are those within our wards who would be happy to receive that assignment.

I believe there are many things that would especially contribute to the solemnity of our Sacrament Services, and one of those is this: That we be more punctual in our attendance at those meetings. My brethren, I have attended meetings where there were so many who entered the chapel late, and the disturbance so great, that I felt the Spirit of the Lord had been offended. Someone has said that "Punctuality is a stern virtue and a graceful courtesy." I say when we are invited to meet in the House of the Lord with the Spirit of our Father in Heaven, that we should be there on time and that we should not destroy the spirit, the solemnity, nor the beauty of the meeting by our arriving late.

I believe that we might enlist the services of the Ward Teachers and our Relief Society Teachers of the Church as they visit in the homes of the Saints to carry this message of reverence into their homes. If our brethren who are called to this great responsibility of Ward Teaching have the influence they should have in the homes of the Saints, they could carry this message and be a great instrument in changing the lives of many of our people in their conduct in our meetings.

I am sure that you are all aware of the interest President David O. McKay has had in this matter. I am sure that most of you have read his message in the October issue of The Improvement Era. If you have not done so, will you go home and read that message, that you may know his desires in this important matter.

Then I am happy that the Primary Association of the Church has instituted a project of teaching reverence to the children of the Primary Association and each month of this year they have brought a message of reverence to the young people who attend this organization.

Since the invitation by President McKay to speak to you tonight I have been thinking of two lines of one of our beautiful hymns which I believe express this spirit of reverence which should be in the hearts and minds of each one of us:

Jesus, the very thought of thee
With sweetness fills my breast.

My brethren of the Priesthood, this is the very spirit of reverence. In conclusion I should like to bear witness to you, my brethren, of my testimony, of the truth of this great work in which we are engaged. I believe with all my heart that our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, and our Heavenly Father, appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith in that Sacred Grove. I believe that every commandment and every revelation that has been given to us to accomplish the fullness of the Gospel is indeed the Word of the Lord unto his servants.

Now, may our Father's choicest blessings be with us, and as we go back into our homes in the stakes and the missions, in the wards and the branches of the Church, may we seek more reverently to serve our Father in Heaven.

This I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER WILLIAM J. CRITCHLOW, JR.

President of the South Ogden Stake

MY DEAR BRETHREN, I have hardly had time to collect my wits, let alone my thoughts and notes, since President McKay called me this afternoon, to talk on the subject, "How to Improve the Reverence and Order in the Chapels of our Stakes." I believe that obedience is one of the first principles of the Gospel and that reverence is the very soul of Christianity. I revere our President, and I pray that I may have the courage to always follow his counsel, to sustain him and the General Authorities of the Church, and to follow their counsel. Such obedience, it seems to me, is the real essence of reverence.

A month or so ago, President and Sister McKay attended a Pioneer League ball game at Ogden, and my heart filled with pride when the activity on the field stopped and the three thousand people present arose to their feet when the President and his dear wife entered the stadium. Honor and respect, my brethren, are elements of reverence.

The Priesthood offices which we hold deserve our own personal respect and honor and the respect in which we hold them, I am sure, is a measure of our reverence.

Our Priesthood is undoubtedly God's greatest gift to his children. Three reasons prompt that statement. First, we who hold the Priesthood are officers in his Kingdom; we are in training; and greater responsibilities lie ahead. Only one and one-half million out of two billion children—our Father's children—now gracing the earth, are presently enrolled in his Kingdom and

President David O. McKay:

Our next speaker will be President William J. Critchlow, president of the South Ogden Stake. He will speak on this same subject. I will say that he was engaged in organizing the group assembled tonight in the Ogden Tabernacle. He has driven 35 miles to respond to this invitation.

since it is destined to cover the earth, the weight of our responsibilities is not only apparent but staggering. May the training we are now experiencing fit us for our tasks.

Secondly, offices in the Priesthood are accompanied by a power that is beyond our present ability to appreciate. It may be likened to electrical energy. Vocationally I have been selling electricity for years, yet I've never seen it and I don't know what it is, but I do know some of the things it can accomplish and I'm sure additional uses will be discovered. The power of the Priesthood is similar to electrical power in that it, too, cannot be seen. And again, we do not know what it is, yet we are aware of many miraculous things resulting from its use. We have seen the sick healed; we know the dead have been raised; and we have been told that by the power of the Priesthood worlds without number were created. As officers in God's Kingdom, we have access to this power, and as we progress in our training we shall become aware of many other applications of this marvelous power.

Lastly, if we are faithful to our Priesthood and magnify our callings, we may be sanctified, so we are told, by the spirit unto the renewing of our bodies, and all that our Father has may be ours.

Now brethren, can you think of a greater gift? May I repeat, our Priesthood deserves honor and demands our greatest respect. These constitute the essence of reverence.

My objective is not to philosophize on this subject of reverence. I have been asked to tell you what a stake president

Saturday, October 1

Second Day

can do to promote and increase reverence in his stake. In my stake we have asked our stake Primary Board to introduce and spearhead an activity which they accepted at the last General Primary Conference. They have prepared a little dramatic skit involving the reverence theme which will interest any age group. It was presented to our stake executives in our monthly stake leadership meeting where Sunday School, M.I.A., Primary and other stake officers were in attendance. It was also presented in our monthly Priesthood Leadership Meeting where bishoprics, presidencies of elders, seventies and high priest quorums were in attendance. We have requested that it be presented in Ward Leadership Meetings and to groups of parents, invited by our bishops for the express purpose of discussing the problem of reverence. I commend it to you stake presidents with a suggestion that you have your stake Primary Boards, to whom the skit has been made available by the General Board, present it to leaders in your respective stakes. Witnessing the skit will create more interest and be more helpful than anything I might say tonight on the reverence subject.

The conduct as well as attitudes of leaders in the stakes and wards too frequently promote irreverence. We teach by example as well as precept, and the first step in solving the reverence problem, or any other problem for that matter, is a frank recognition that the problem actually exists.

The earliest training in discipline belongs in the home, but since parents generally neglect teaching the Gospel in their homes, it is reasonable to suspect that training in reverence is similarly neglected. The problem accordingly has fallen into the laps of Church leaders and teachers and we are obliged to make up for this parental neglect in order to enjoy reverence in our meetings or gatherings.

Recently I observed a bishopric in action. Five minutes before Sacrament Meeting was scheduled to begin, I sat alone on the stand; the bishopric were greeting people at the door. When it was time to begin the meeting, they came to the stand, conferred among themselves, then signaled the organist to stop playing and then the meeting began, tardily. Notwithstanding the lovely preliminary music, there was disorder. Conversation was rampant, until the bishop arose to start the service.

It seems to me that order or reverence might well begin with the leaders. Bishoprics should be counseled to be reverently in their place during the quieting music. How can they expect others to refrain from talking when they are conferring among themselves? In the Primary skit, to which I have made reference, teachers were observed coming to meeting late, as well as unprepared. They were shown in a huddle determining who would conduct, who would lead the singing, what song to sing, who would teach a class and who was to pray.

Preparation, my brethren, is a key to reverence. Promptness in beginning meetings begets respect, and discipline is born of respect.

One of my bishops, a while ago, visited a Primary meeting. He arrived before the teachers and he found children dancing on a grand piano; others climbing out of chapel windows. He angrily forbade his Primary to hold subsequent meetings in the lovely chapel. Later he did relent upon promise of the president to have at least one officer of the Primary there early to supervise the children as they arrived. We want our children to enjoy the environment of our lovely chapels. Beautiful surroundings—lovely class rooms—promote reverence.

A new Primary president once came to me and said, "Our janitor at the chapel refuses to let children enter the building until the exact starting time of our meetings because the children run wild and deface the furnishings. He is rough; has an iron hook in place of a missing hand and has scared children away from Primary." What had really happened was obvious. Primary officers and teachers were arriving later than the children. There was no supervision and I discovered that children had actually been kept out in rain and snow until teachers arrived. This problem again was easily remedied by the simple assignment of one teacher to be on hand when children arrived with further instructions to stay on guard while other teachers were enjoying an early prayer meeting.

When did you bishops last attend a Primary meeting, or an M.I.A. meeting? Some of you saw the film here last evening. You witnessed the interest the Aaronic Priesthood advisors had in the boys, how they labored with them, talked to them, and visited in their homes. When all of our leaders exhibit the same love and interest in the membership of their groups, discipline or reverence will no longer be a problem.

Executives in all of our organizations can well afford to hold preliminary prayer meetings, in which arrangements for teachers and all other business of the meeting to follow can be checked. Teachers should never absent themselves from classes without providing substitute teachers and they should always remember that they are teaching children rather than lessons.

Recently I visited an elders quorum meeting. The teacher passed the lesson manual around, inviting members to read sections of the lesson. I detected a spirit of irreverence. Obviously the class resented the procedure; some were reluctant to read, preferring, I am sure, to be taught by the teacher. He, obviously, was unprepared. Unpreparedness on the part of a teacher may well be a contributing factor to a state of irreverence.

Now a word about younger children in sacrament meetings. Bishops, you have the responsibility of tactfully advising parents not to let their children run up and down aisles. This practice distracts attention and also disturbs speakers. Members have been frank enough to tell me that they dislike to go to meetings. "Too many noisy children," one said. Many of our chapels now have cry rooms. Parents with noisy children should be tactfully counseled to use them.

Some of us may presently be occupying new chapels. There is no better time to initiate a program of reverence. The building is new, beautiful, and one has a natural desire to respect it as a House of the Lord. Years ago, I attended a sacrament meeting in a new chapel in Brigham City. My host said to me, as we were about to enter,

"Please don't whisper during the service, otherwise one of the appointed monitors, seated in the rear, may observe and will surely come down and tap you on the shoulder. Let's not be humiliated." You may be assured I did not whisper.

Now brethren, let us, too, be firm in this matter of reverence. Our approach should be firm, sincere, and of course tactful. Irreverence may actually be keeping some of our members from our meetings.

Our stake Primary Board made a survey at the request of the General Board, to find out what children liked or disliked about Primary. One of the questions asked was, "How could my teacher make Primary better?" Many of the children answered, "Keep order in the class." Another question was, "What do you like least about Primary?" One child's answer summed up the many, "Disorder—especially when the teacher doesn't come." The survey clearly indicated that children want to be disciplined. The kind of teachers they like are good ones, strict ones, those who can give a good lesson, those who can keep the class quiet, the kind ones, etc. Surveys of this kind can be revealing. To questions that may involve embarrassment, adults are inclined to be evasive; children will speak truthfully, as well as eagerly. We discovered that in another children's survey several years ago. We asked, "How many of you have family prayers in your homes?" The truthful answers were startling, to say the least. We learned some things about the habits of a few of our leaders.

In conclusion, let me inject one other very good reason for the most profound reverence possible in our sacred gatherings, namely, to avoid offense to our unseen visitors. There have been times when I have been conducting stake conferences that I thought I felt the presence of unseen visitors. We always request the help of our Heavenly Father in our opening prayers. Why then is it unreasonable to fancy the presence of that requested help? Isn't it reasonable also to expect that authorities on the unseen side of our Father's Kingdom are interested in what we may be doing?

General Authorities come to our stake conferences to help and check on us; stake authorities go into the wards to help and check; and I fancy that some of our Father's other authorities, likewise come occasionally, to inspire and to check. And for their sakes, we ought to be profoundly reverent.

Stake presidents and bishops cannot escape the responsibility of promoting reverence in our respective stakes and wards. Responsibility may be delegated but in the delegation presidents and bishops lose none of it, yet those so delegated receive it all. It's like "eating our cake and having it." That, however, is the peculiar nature of responsibility.

I found an excellent reverence application in this story told by a Primary teacher. "Rupert stood by the side of the road watching an unusual number of people hurry past. At length he recognized a friend. 'Where are all of you going in such a hurry?' he asked. The friend paused, 'Haven't you heard?' he said. 'I've heard nothing,' Rupert answered. 'Well,' continued his friend, 'the King has lost his royal emerald! Yesterday he attended a wedding of the nobility and wore the emerald on the slender golden chain around his neck. In some way the emerald became loosened from the chain. Everyone is searching, for the King has offered a reward of ten pieces of gold to the one who finds it. Come, we must hurry.' 'But I cannot go without asking grandmother,' faltered Rupert. 'Then I cannot wait. I want to find the emerald,' replied his friend. Rupert hurried back to the cabin at the edge of the woods to seek his grandmother's permission. 'If I could find it we could leave this hut with its dampness and buy a piece of land up on the hillside,' he pleaded with grandmother. But his grandmother shook her head. 'What would the sheep do,' she asked. 'Already they are restless in the pen, waiting to be taken to the pasture and please do not forget to take them to water when the sun shines high in the heavens.' Sorrowfully, Rupert took the sheep to the pasture and at noon he led them to the brook in the woods. There he sat on a large stone by the stream. 'If I could only have had a chance to look for the King's emerald!' he thought. Turning his head to gaze down at the sandy bottom of the brook, suddenly he stared into the water. What was it? It could not be! He leaped into the water, and his gripping fingers held something that was green with a slender bit of gold chain. 'The King's emerald!' he shouted. It must have been flung from the chain when the King was crossing the bridge, on the highway, and the water washed it here. With shining eyes Rupert ran to his grandmother's hut to tell her of his great find. 'Bless you, my boy,' she said, 'but you never would have found it if you had not been doing your duty, herding the sheep.' And Rupert knew that this was the truth."

Brethren, we too, will never find the reverence we seek unless we do our duty. May our Heavenly Father help us to do our duty in this respect, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Bonneville Stake Priesthood Chorus will now lead the congregation in singing, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go, Dear Lord," with Elder David A. Shand conducting.

I suggest the Chorus sing the verse and we will all join in the chorus, and those listening in, please join in with us. All arise.

---

The congregation and chorus then sang the hymn, "I'll Go Where You Want Me To Go."

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., will now address us.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BRETHREN: We do not know now how many there are attending this great Priesthood meeting, twenty thousand, twenty-five, thirty thousand. I do not know how many, but there are enough of us to be the leaven that would leaven the lump if each of us will come here tomorrow morning, if each of us who are listening in, will go to our respective places of worship, tomorrow, if each of us will show the reverence about which we have heard tonight, if each of us will not visit, will not talk, will not discuss business, it will not be many Sundays until I think, brethren, we shall have the reverence that has been talked about.

I wonder if we cannot try it, tomorrow, just to see what will happen.

I have listened to this music, tonight, President McKay, and I have listened to it on the other days of this Conference, we have had a new singing organization each day, we will have another tomorrow, when I think that these will be drawn primarily from this particular area, and when I think that out of this area, perhaps has been drawn for the Tabernacle Choir, which is largely absent, the whole choir that went to Europe, and then when I think of all the Church organizations, all over this western country, equally proficient, I am prepared to declare that this people of ours, have a culture in music that is more excellent, more universal, than any other group of people in the world. I firmly believe that. And our culture is not only in music. Our culture is in literature. Our culture is manifested in our public speaking. Our culture is manifested in the training which our young people have and which they demonstrate, as it is reported to us, to the astonishment of the leaders of the Army and of the Navy. We have a culture in art. This people of ours is a highly cultured people. We have a few rough edges to grind down, but our courtesy, our kindness, our affection one for the other, passes far beyond that which is found among other peoples.

One reason, I think, for that is, among many other reasons, that the Gospel teaches us to be respectful one of another. You know, in this Church of ours, as I have often said before, every man who is worthy has a chance to direct and a chance to serve, and when the man directs he will have in mind the time when he served and when he serves, he will recall when he directed. It builds for a mutual consideration, a mutual affection, a mutual regard, a mutual fellowship, a mutual brotherhood.

I thought I might say a word tonight on two fundamentals. Who are we? Well, we are Joneses and Smiths and Clarks and all the rest. Yes, but after all, who are they? And my mind always runs back to the beginning, for this earth and for us, and the Grand Council, when the Father came down among the intelligences that were organized, and held this great Council. I think we were all there. We are the sons of our Heavenly Father, tabernacled in the flesh through his divine plan, but that does not rob us of our divine origin. It emphasizes that origin because, save for the plan which our Heavenly Father put into effect, we had not been here, we had not taken on bodies, we would still remain, so far as I can see, in the state in which we were before the Grand Council and its plan, and that would have left us without the destiny which God marked out for us. We are the real children of our Heavenly Father.

And what are we? We bear the Priesthood. What is the Priesthood? Through it we exercise certain authorities and powers of Godhood, itself. He has not given us all of the powers, and we are not living up to the requirements sometimes, some of us, that entitle us to exercise the powers which he has given, —we would be a mightier people if we did.

I have always been impressed with the fact that Adam received his priesthood in the Creation, so said the

Saturday, October 1

Second Day

Prophet, before the world was. The Prophet also said that any man who had the responsibility of administering to the inhabitants of this earth likewise was ordained in the Council of Heaven; and he further said, "I suppose that I was ordained to this very office in that Council."

What are we? We are the agents of God, himself, through the Holy Order of the Priesthood of the Son of God. I wonder if we think of that. I wonder if that is on our minds when we deal with one another, when we deal with our families, with our neighbors, and with our friends. We hold these powers with which out of his abundance God has endowed us, that we might be able to carry on the mission with which we were charged when we came here.

Brethren, may the Lord bless me and bless you, give you and me abundantly of his spirit, that will enable us, first, to recognize what we are, the representatives of God on earth, endowed with certain of his powers. Never forget that. And next, help us so to live that we may enjoy those powers and exercise them, and then we shall rear our families as they should be reared. We will heal them when they are sick. We will be protected from harm and accident and disease. We will have more happiness than any of us can now imagine, all subject to the will of the Lord.

May God give us all of the blessings that we need to help us to magnify our Priesthood, which is the power and the authority to exercise some of the powers that God, himself, possesses, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We shall now hear from President Stephen L Richards.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

FEW YEARS ago I stood on the banks of the Susquehanna River at or near the place where Joseph and Oliver received under the hands of John the Baptist the Aaronic Priesthood. I learned that it is not known just where the Melchizedek Priesthood was bestowed, but it is assumed that it is in that vicinity. I had time for contemplation in the visit to this historic place, and I knew, as I contemplated the remarkable gift that the Lord had brought in this Dispensation, that the accounts of Joseph and Oliver were true; and I felt as sure of that divine experience as if it had taken place before me. I had not had occasion to doubt it before, and certainly I have entertained no doubt about it since; and it has been my pleasure and satisfaction throughout the years to declare the authenticity and the divine origin of the Priesthood of God which has come through his servants in his latter-day work.

I do not know how to give proper estimate of that great power. I know that man by nature is the most noble of all the Lord's creations. I know that he is endowed with intelligence, with reason, with a conscience, and many of the virtues that we think so highly of, and I have great admiration for men who develop their native talents and latent endowments to a point where they possess great intelligence and great learning, and equip themselves for great service to our Father's children.

But I have reached the conclusion in my own mind that no man, however great his intellectual attainments, however vast and far-reaching his service may be, arrives at the full measure of his sonship and the manhood the Lord intended him to have, without the investiture of the Holy Priesthood, and with that appreciation, my brethren, I have given thanks to the Lord all my life for this marvelous blessing which has come to me—a blessing that some of my progenitors had, and a blessing which more than any other heritage I want my sons and my grandsons and my great-grandsons to enjoy.

There may be many of our young men, and some older ones, who are in this vast listening congregation tonight—some who have not been with us before and some who have not felt the warmth of the fellowship that we are permitted to enjoy. I hope I am not presumptuous when I welcome them into the bonds of fraternity and the brotherhood of the Holy Priesthood. And I know of few things that you can do to more perfectly bring to these newcomers a deep appreciation of this great and wonderful blessing than to take them to your hearts and your counsels in the quorums of the Holy Priesthood. The Lord has provided these quorums. He has specified them. He has given the very numbers which constitute them, and we know that he intends that they should be true fraternities among our brethren. Every one of us needs the help of a friend. We all need sympathetic understanding. We need encouragement. Sometimes we need correction. Within the quorums of the Priesthood there lie the facilities and the opportunities for a brotherhood that shall help all within it.

I would like to see the quorums of the Priesthood assume a larger and more important place in the teaching of the Gospel, in the nurturing of our young men and boys, and in their preparation for the great work of the latter days. I believe that they are organizations which the Lord himself designed to bless all of our brethren.

Now of course many things might be said about the opportunities that these quorums afford. Will you, my brethren, give to these groups to which you belong, these sacred societies, your allegiance, your love and devotion, and your help. The Lord needs his Priesthood to carry forward his work. I do not know that any of us can envision what the coming of the Savior will be like, but I have always felt that when he does come he will require the aid of his servants in perfecting the Kingdom, and that he will call upon his Priesthood in preference to any others to consummate his glorious work. I would like to be ready to serve acceptably to him when that day comes, and I know you would also, so I ask the Lord to bless us that we may so devote ourselves to the great Cause to which we have the honor to belong, to so uphold the standards of righteousness, to so proclaim the Gospel of our Lord, and to so live as to be worthy to be called and chosen now and when he comes, and that is my prayer for all of us, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

WE HAVE RECEIVED a message reading as follows: "Gathered in San Fernando Stake nearly completed stake center are 251 boys, 456 men, or a total attendance of 707."—James D. Pratt, First Counselor, Stake Presidency.

Later in the Conference perhaps we can give you a total report.

Much has been said, brethren, during the Conference about the favorable reports made in the public press, compliments paid by government and state officials, to the leaders of the Choir in Europe, to the excellency of the Choir, paying compliments to the Church, etc., and every word spoken has been merited. Some might feel that such praise will be dangerous. Let me tell you that nothing has been said about the efforts of the Adversary coordinately with these words of praise.

When permission was granted by state and local officials to erect the Swiss Temple near Bern, notice was given that such permission had been granted, and the request made that if anybody had any objection, let him so express himself. High poles were erected on the site, showing the height of the main building.

Well, there was opposition led by a minister. A certain time elapsed—for other objections. Finally the authoritative council met and decided that the application to erect a temple be granted.

This minister met again and said, "I protest it." "Oh yes," said the chairman, or leader of that group, "but you did not put your objections in writing."

Saturday, October 1

Second Day

"Well," said the minister, "I did not know that was necessary."

"You are too late now. Permission is granted."

He resorted to the press, and the most scurrilous articles appeared, revamping all the old falsehoods, accusing the people of everything. But they paid little attention to it. I was surprised to learn recently that the temple stands just across the street from the town in which that man preaches.

Down in South America in Argentina, favorable reports were given regarding the Church and its activities. One paper, and I will not mention the church it represents, came out with scurrilous articles. On the following day the public press announced that President Peron had received officials of the Church. The next issue of the scurrilous sheets modified its attack, and later ceased entirely.

Right here at home the Adversary is at work. Some of you have received accusations that the Church has apostatized, and that Cultists doctrine should be accepted.

Well, the best way to treat these lies and scandalous reports is so to live that our actions will prove their falsity, and that is what we are trying to do. There are "fleas," and we shall have to treat them as such, I suppose. We shall always have people attacking us. As long as the Adversary to truth is free to exercise dominion in this world, we are going to have attacks, and the only way to meet those attacks is to live the Gospel.

Now, I mention this—and I could say a great deal more—to put you brethren on your guard. It is learned that in some cases excommunicants are moving into wards where they are not known, and are being or have been used in teaching classes. Bishops and branch presidents should not use anyone in their various organizations until the bishops and branch presidents have received their membership records, or at least know of their worthiness. The importance of that is evident. We do not want people who are prompted by the spirit of the Adversary, the spirit of an apostate, to be poisoning the minds of our youth. The latter are too precious, and they are in our keeping.

There is true philosophy in that old saying of David Harrum: "A certain amount of fleas is good for a dog. It keeps him from worrying that he is a dog." Well, the Adversary will see to it that we have plenty of these fleas as they exercise their pestilential acts in trying to undo the good that the Church is doing. I shall be glad and thankful when our friends who speak well of us, papers who publish the truth, will be more numerous than they are today, and it is our duty so to live that the people will have to speak well as they had to speak well of the excellency of our Choir and the concerts given in Europe.

Thank you brethren who have spoken to us on the great principle of Reverence.

A few weeks ago, with some companions, I had the pleasure, through the kindness of A. Hamer Reiser, of visiting Stoke Poges where Thomas Gray wrote that great poem, "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard." Of course I had in mind renewing the interesting passages in that poem and visiting for the first time the spot where he is buried. He died about 1871, as I remember. As we rode out there we recalled:

"The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Awaits alike th' inevitable hour:—
The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Then that familiar quotation:

"Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear:
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

Those two sublime stanzas follow his tribute to the humble of Stoke Poges. Those who lie underneath the old elms, still standing, "some mute inglorious Milton here may rest," you remember.

I saw something else in that old Churchyard that is appropriate tonight. By the way, we should never know anything about that if it had not been for

Thomas Gray. We should never know anything much about Stratford-on-Avon had it not been for Shakespeare; nothing about Ayr had it not been for Bobby Burns. These great men have immortalized those humble places. Let us not look with disrespect upon these great leaders in the literary world. They make life worth living and give us the best in the world.

Note this about the theme tonight. As we entered the old Stoke Poges Church built in 1086 by the Normans, my attention was called to a plaque on the door upon which was written the following: "Our courteous Lord wills that we should be as homely with him as heart may think or soul desire, but let us beware that we take not this homeliness so recklessly as to leave reverence and courtesy." I do not know when it was written, but I leave it with you tonight as coming from somebody 200 years ago.

Reverence embraces regard, deference, honor, and esteem. Without some degree of it there would be no courtesy, no gentility, no consideration of other's feelings or of other's rights. It is the fundamental virtue in religion. Reverence is one of the signs of strength, irreverence one of the surest indications of weakness. No man will rise high who jeers at sacred things. The fine loyalties of life must be revered, or they will be foresworn in the day of trial.

We walked recently through those old halls of Westminster Abbey. Everybody spoke in whispers. In one place—I have never before visited it—we were asked to take off our shoes. It was more to save the old floor, though, than to pay deference or reverence to the room.

When Brother Cannon and I went round the world we visited some of the temples of Buddha and Shinto. We had to take our shoes off before we entered. We are not going to worship houses, and we certainly do not wish to violate the command of God to worship images, but we do want to be courteous, deferential, reverent, when we enter the presence of our Lord, to whom all should give reverence. If you were invited to go before a Governor-general, before one of Royalty, you would prepare in dress and in attitude so as to appear properly in his presence. Well, our houses are dedicated by the Priesthood, and our chapels are consecrated for the worship of the Lord, and we give them over to him. It is not just a mere act, and I promise you, my brethren, that the Lord will be there and we shall feel his Presence, if we approach him properly. That is a fact because he lives, and this is his Church, and you are his servants by divine right. I know the world thinks we are unreasonable, fantastic in our ideas when we tell them that there is no other authorized Church, but that is true. The Priesthood came direct from our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, who is the great High Priest, and he authorized Peter, James and John, on whom he bestowed that Priesthood, to bestow it upon the Prophet Joseph Smith; and John the Baptist, who held the Aaronic Priesthood to bestow the Aaronic Priesthood upon Joseph Smith. Joseph Smith did not take it; it came direct, and you brethren, everyone present, can trace your ordination, probably within five steps, right back to the Savior himself.

When we go into the chapel, let us go in there realizing that we are in the presence of our Heavenly Father, and we sit and commune reverently from within. Happiness is from within. It must be, as one of the brethren said, an individual matter. What right have I to go into a chapel and speak in loud tones and disturb somebody who is communing, probably praying in his heart?

Oh my brethren, presidents of stakes, bishoprics of wards, God bless you in your leadership, in your responsibility to guide, to bless, to comfort. Many of our people need comfort. Lead them to come to you in confession. Guide them to go to the Lord, and seek inspiration so to live that they may rise above the low and the mean and live in the spiritual.

This has been a glorious Conference. It is a glorious Conference, and tonight is an epoch-making event in the history of the Church. God bless every man assembled tonight who has come with his heart and soul filled with the desire to come closer to our Heavenly Father, filled with the desire to get a stronger testimony that our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, stands at the head of the Church. There is no question about it.

God bless the man who sneaked in here to find something to publish to weaken the faith of those who might be weak. May he repent and be led to know the truth.

I bless you, my brethren, with the power that the Lord has given us to bless, that from this hour we go forth with renewed determination to discharge our duties more faithfully, more successfully under the inspiration of God than ever before, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

I have just been handed the information that there is a total of 22,004 in assembly, and 12 more places to hear from.

To you brethren of Bonneville Stake we express our sincere gratitude for your having practiced to render the service you have rendered so inspirationally tonight—Brother Shand, the presidency of the stake, and all of you. We are proud of you, and as President Clark has said there is no other body in the world with so many singers who like music as you.

What a feast we have had today and yesterday, from the German Choir and those young people today, and now just one stake tonight, with the string instrument accompaniment. In behalf of the 22,000, (and 12 more places to hear from), we thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

The Chorus, under the direction of Brother Shand, will now sing "Hosanna Anthem," and Elder George Z. Aposthian, president of the Wilford Stake, will offer the benediction.

Just a moment please about tomorrow morning. There will be a broadcast, but the Choir will not be in their seats, of course. You may hear it in the Tabernacle and on the air from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. This record was made in Zurich, Switzerland. Those of you who enter the building after 9:30 are asked to do so quietly, and without conversation, so that visitors assembled here may hear the recorded broadcast undisturbed.

The Chorus sang the "Hosanna Anthem."

The benediction was pronounced by President George Z. Aposthian, of the Wilford Stake.

THIRD DAY MORNING MEETING

The Sunday morning session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 10 o'clock.

However, prior to the commencement of the Conference session the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast was presented as follows:

TABERNACLE CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

The following broadcast, written and announced by Richard L. Evans, was recorded in the Grosser Tonhalle-Saal in Zurich, Switzerland, on September 14, 1955, and was presented from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. Sunday, October 2, 1955, through the courtesy and facilities of KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System's network, throughout the United States. The broadcast was as follows:

(The organ played "As the Dew from Heaven Distilling," and on signal the Choir and organ broke into the hymn, "Gently Raise The Sacred Strain," singing the words to the end of the second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you with music and the spoken word as the Tabernacle Choir continues its European concert tour.

The CBS Radio Network and its affiliated stations bring you today's presentation, transcribed, from the Grosser Tonhalle-Saal in Zurich, Switzerland, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Frank Asper, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

First today is a stirring hymn with the music of William Croft and the words of Isaac Watts: "O God Our Help In Ages Past, our hope for years to come. Our shelter from the stormy blast and our eternal home."

(The Choir sang: "O God Our Help, in Ages Past."—Arr. by Mueller.)

Announcer: With Frank Asper at the Grosser Tonhalle-Saal Organ in Zurich, Switzerland, we move into a stately religious march movement by Karg-Elert: "Now Thank We All our God."

(Organ selection: "Now Thank We All our God."—Karg-Elert.)

Announcer: The Choir continues with a song of the peace and quiet of a hallowed place, a song by Evan Stephens; "Holiness becometh the house of the Lord, house of prayer, house of song, house of the holy word . . . Hushed be the footfall and gentle the voice . . . with quiet, contentment, and peace . . . holiness becometh the house of the Lord."

(The Choir sang: "Holiness Becometh the House of the Lord."—Stephens.)

Announcer: From the Grosser Tonhalle-Saal Organ in Zurich, Switzerland we hear another quietly thoughtful mood and melody as Frank Asper presents a song without words by Joseph Bonnet.

(Organ selection: "Romance sans Paroles."—Bonnet.)

Announcer: In the pressures and impatience and thoughtlessness of life, our relationships with others are often likely to be less considerate than they should be—and all of us it seems, are almost sure to have our feelings hurt from time to time—and often, unthinkingly, are likely to hurt the feelings of others also. Sometimes the consequences of hurt feelings, of personal offense, have been appallingly serious, far out of proportion to the first cause, as men have stubbornly misunderstood one another and families and others implacably have fought and feuded (like Shakespeare's Capulets and Montagues), and the lives of the innocent have been blighted (like Romeo and Juliet), and irreparable damage has been done—because someone has had his pride injured, because someone has had his feelings hurt. It is true that people are often thoughtless, often inconsiderate, blunt, undiplomatic, sometimes cruel, and often deal with others the wrong way. But men being as they are, imperfect as they are, so long as we live with one another, we are sometimes going to have our feelings hurt, even when others don't know they have hurt us. There likely isn't one of us who hasn't been hurt (and likely there isn't one of us who hasn't hurt others, whether we know it or not). But if too easily we assume a martyr's role, if we nurture and magnify our hurts, if we withdraw ourselves from fellowship, from activity, and sulk and brood and let our injuries fester, we do serious damage to ourselves, our families, our friends, and to the causes we might have served. As in the healing process following some kinds of surgery, so hurts of the heart, hurt pride, and injured feelings can sooner be healed if we don't nurse them too long, if we are sooner up, and out, and active. Life goes on whether we go with it or not, and sitting aside in hurt silence when there are things to be done is one unfortunate way of letting life waste away. We do ourselves great damage by languishing too long in injured inactivity. We commend once more these words recalled from an unidentified author: "In the very depths of your soul, dig a grave; let it be as some forgotten spot to which no path leads; and there in the eternal silence bury the wrongs which you have suffered. Your heart will feel as if a load had fallen from it, and a divine peace will come to abide with you."*

*Revised

(Organ selection: "I Need Thee Every Hour."—Lowry.)

Announcer: With Dr. Asper at the Grosser Tonhalle-Saal Organ we have heard a hymn tune by Robert Lowry, which is titled from the words of Annie S. Hawkes: "I need Thee every hour, most gracious Lord; no tender voice like thine can peace afford . . . I Need Thee Every Hour."

Sunday, October 2

Third Day

And now, the Tabernacle Choir sings from this impressive Swiss setting a song by Percy Fletcher, a song of the quiet of closing day with the consoling, strengthening words of Samuel Longfellow: "Again, as evening's shadow falls, we gather in these hallow'd walls: And evening hymn and evening pray'r—Rise mingling with the hallow'd air. May struggling hearts, that seek release, Here find the rest of God's own peace, and strengthen'd here by hymn and pray'r, Lay down the burden and the care. O God of Light, to Thee we bow; Within all shadows standest Thou, Give deeper calm than night can bring; Give sweeter songs than lips can sing."

(The Choir sang: "Again as Evening's Shadow Falls."—Fletcher.)

(The Choir sang: "Abide With Me."—Monk.)

Announcer: Abide with me, fast falls the eventide, the darkness deepens, Lord with me abide. When other helpers fail and comforts flee, help of the helpless, O abide with me.

Once more we leave you until another seven days of life have swiftly come and gone again. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes another presentation, continuing the 27th year of this traditional broadcast, brought to you by CBS Radio and its affiliated stations, transcribed, from the Grosser Tonhalle-Saal in Zurich, Switzerland, and produced by Radio Station KSL.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the Tabernacle Choir with its three hundred seventy-five voices. Frank Asper was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

In another seven days, at this same hour, music and the spoken word will be heard once more as the Tabernacle Choir concludes its European concert tour.

SUNDAY MORNING GENERAL CONFERENCE SESSION

At the conclusion of the Choir and Organ Broadcast the regular session of the Conference convened with President David O. McKay, who was presiding and conducting the services, making the following introductory remarks:

President David O. McKay:

The thousands assembled in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City this morning have just listened to the weekly broadcast of the Choir, but this time by transmission from Zurich, Switzerland—a good illustration of how we may utilize modern inventions and discoveries for the preaching of the Gospel.

There are thousands assembled not only in the Tabernacle and on the Tabernacle Grounds, but in the Assembly Hall, Barratt Hall, and in other buildings throughout the west. Last evening we had a large Priesthood Meeting, one of the largest ever held in the history of the Church, if not the largest. There are 12 meeting places yet to hear from, and the total attendance as given from those who reported was over 22,000. They met in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Washington and Wyoming. As an illustration of the success, here is one message from California which came last evening:

"Gathered in San Fernando Stake at nearly completed stake center are 251 boys and 456 men, or a total attendance of 707." That came from the first counselor in the stake presidency, and another message from California, at Oakland: "Over 300 Priesthood members Berkeley and Oakland Stakes deeply grateful for opportunity enjoying Priesthood conference with you. Reception over closed circuit wonderful." That is from the high council.

From Compton: "Enjoying the Conference. Reception very fine. 182 members of the Priesthood attending."—Los Angeles Stake High Council. Another from the high council in Colma, California: "120 Priesthood members hearing Conference in San Francisco Stake House." We are grateful for the inspiration of last evening's meeting.

The speakers were President Thomas W. Muir, president of the Emigration Stake; President William J. Critchlow, president of South Ogden Stake, both of whom treated the subject, "How to Attain and Maintain Better Order and More Reverence in Houses of Worship." They were followed by each of the members of the First Presidency—President Clark, President Richards and President McKay.

The Bonneville Stake Priesthood Chorus, under the direction of Elder David A. Shand, furnished the music, and it was most inspirational. They were accompanied by a string orchestra, which added to the impressiveness of their excellent singing.

These services and the services this afternoon will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall as usual, and also over 16 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Nevada, Colorado, California, Arizona, and Texas.

We have a telegram here from one of the brethren in California saying that they would like to have the people in California understand or learn of the passing of Brother Louis A. Thomas, who has served as a Church architect in Southern California for the past 30 years. It does not say when his funeral will be, but you who are listening in California may obtain the information necessary. We express our sympathy to the family.

The names of all the stations over which these services will be broadcast and telecast have already been announced to the radio and television audiences. Some of you heard it.

We again express deep appreciation to these various radio and television stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts. In behalf of the members of the Church, who are very appreciative, we thank you.

We extend greetings this morning to leaders in educational circles, and in our nation, and in the state. These men and women are influential, and we appreciate sympathetic cooperation and help in time of need. Senator

Watkins we know is here; Congressman H. Aldous Dixon; Congressman William A. Dawson; Mayor Earl J. Glade; Dr. Ernest L. Wilkinson of the Brigham Young University; Dr. Chase of the Utah State Agricultural College. I do not see Dr. Olpin. Yes, he is here. There are plenty of hands to say you are. Also present are Superintendent Lynn Bennion; Brother Lamont Toronto, and others. To all, listening in from all the stakes, and those assembled here, we extend a hearty welcome. You will be blessed, I am sure, as we have been in previous sessions.

We desire to express appreciation for these lovely flowers from Hawaii, and from the Wilford Stake.

The Choir singing for this morning's session, as you note, is composed of Combined Singing Mothers Choruses from 21 stakes in the Bannock and East Idaho Regions, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, and Brother Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin these services by the Combined Singing Mothers Choruses singing: "How Happy All They That Love the Lord." The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Edwin Alan Pettit, president of the Bakersfield Stake.

The Combined Singing Mothers Choruses sang "How Happy All They That Love the Lord."

Elder Edwin Alan Pettit, President of the Bakersfield Stake, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was offered by Elder Edwin Alan Pettit, president of Bakersfield Stake.

The Combined Singing Mothers Choruses will now sing, "Lord, Hear Our Prayer," conducted by Florence Jepperson Madsen.

Following the Choir singing, we shall hear from President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency.

The Combined Singing Mothers Choruses sang "Lord, Hear Our Prayer."

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

MY DEAR brethren and sisters: I thank the Lord for the inspiration of this great conference, coming to us from lovely singing, part of which we have just listened to, and from the lofty, inspirational messages of our brethren. I humbly pray that I may contribute a little to the appreciation of the great work in which we are engaged and to its advancement in the world. I think the missionary work of the restored Church of our Lord has received major emphasis at this conference. The extended and outstanding labors of our beloved President; the dedication of a European temple with the prospect of others to follow; the history-making tour of the choir over the seas to foreign lands; the organization of new missions on the other side of the world, and the extended visits of existing missions by our brethren of the Twelve, have all served to arrest and focus our attention on missionary work to an extent probably never exceeded in the history of the Church, except perhaps in its early beginning when such a vast proportion of the means and energies of the people were devoted to the carrying of the gospel to foreign lands.

What an encouragement, and what rejoicing this has brought to all those who love the Lord's work of the latter days! On every hand are heard expressions indicative of the gratification and joy of the people in these accomplishments. They voice their love for and admiration of the President, their jubilation over the successful trip of the choir, and their expectation of great results to follow.

I have thought, my brethren and sisters, that it might be appropriate here today to propound this question: How may all this just pride, admiration, rejoicing and enthusiasm be translated into effective service and devotion for the continued expansion of our Father's kingdom here in the earth?

Perhaps a general answer to this question might suffice—to live righteously and serve faithfully—but I think a breakdown of that answer might be of some value to us.

The first specific item which I shall mention is the need for more people to serve in these missionary callings.

Fortunately, after deliberations and negotiations covering a long period of time, we have some clarification and consequent liberalization in the calling of our young men to serve as foreign missionaries. A foreign missionary is one who serves outside the stake where he lives. It has long been the practice of the Church to utilize young men for this service. I wish here to express my own gratitude and that of the officers and membership of the Church for the young men who have so dutifully, willingly, and faithfully responded to their missionary calls. What a glorious and admirable segment of our society are these young men of the Church! They are the pride of the communities from which they come.

Young men are well adapted to missionary service. They have the physical strength and stamina; they have the mental alertness; they have the adaptability and the buoyance of youth, and when properly conditioned for the service, they have the spiritual receptiveness to bring them a firmness of conviction and testimony that becomes contagious to those whom they serve.

The innate goodness of these young men shines from their very countenances, as they visit the homes of the people.

It has been my observation that although young, these missionaries quickly attain a maturity in thought, judgment, and wisdom that is without parallel for those of their age. As ministers of religion they are frequently confronted with important problems and situations of vital nature to those concerned. They handle organizational matters; they deal with delicate domestic problems; they give fatherly counsel to young and old alike; and they bless with a sagacity and power far beyond the maturity of their years. You know what it is, my brethren and sisters, which enables them so successfully to perform these labors of wisdom and love.

Some understandings have recently been reached which enable us to call to the missionary service more of our young men. We need them. We can use them to great advantage. We hope bishops, presidents of stakes, and presidents of missions, will diligently search out those who are eligible for this distinguished service. The young men do not call themselves. No one does in this Church. All are responsive to the appointment of the Holy Priesthood which presides over all. So I appeal to the presiding officers to make a diligent search and make recommendations, and I appeal to all who receive calls to respond with glad hearts to embrace the glorious opportunities of missionary service.

Missionary service is strenuous. Its success depends on energy and intelligent devotion to its ideals and procedures. Good health is a requisite for mission eligibility, at least in the foreign missionary service. Our missionaries travel in pairs. No one goes alone. One sick or disabled man detains another from his work and often retards the performance of important responsibilities. So, while we cannot insure against unforeseeable sickness and accident in the mission field, we must take every precaution to assure physical fitness and good health before departure on these assignments.

If any of our people suffer disappointment because of our requirements for good health as a requisite to the foreign missionary calling, we hope they may take a measure of comfort in the realization that the missionary work to be accomplished is immeasurable, and that it is just as important to bring the gospel to their next door neighbors as to one of our Father's children ten thousand miles away.

I cannot pass by without mention of some phases of the preparation for our missionaries. We have had a little difficulty in recent years in convincing some public officials that our young men possess the qualifications to be classified as ministers of religion. Legally now the point is pretty well cleared.

We extend our appreciation for the good offices of this state's representatives in Congress and their friends in bringing about a Congressional Historical Record in the Legislation extending the Draft Act, which clearly recognizes in the interpretation of the statute the exemptibility of our missionaries as ministers of religion. We do not regard this favorable interpretation as being a discriminatory concession to us in any respect or degree. It helps us because it is a just clarification which may not have been clear to some officials.

Now, not because there is urgent need of it, but because I think it may serve other purposes, I wish to bring forward a few items which justify this conclusion that our young men missionaries are ministers of religion. I grant you that they do not always look as other ministers look. They may be disappointing to some in formality and grace of expression. Many of them may not have attained the scholastic standing reached by most of the profession. What is the missionary's training for the ministry?

First, he is usually reared in a home presided over by a man of the priesthood, who, in certain aspects at least, may be looked on as a man of the ministry. The functions of the ministry are carried forward in large measure in the future missionary's home. Prayer, blessings, scriptural and religious learning are features of his early environment. He is accorded the opportunity of participation. He prays, he sings, he reads, he studies, and in adolescent years, joins in sacred religious ordinances.

Second, in the religious educational program of the Church, he becomes identified with the organizations of the Church. His mother may bring him to Sunday School as a baby; he toddles into the infant classes; and from then on he is taught, and he learns the literature of the Church and the ways of the Lord.

Third, he is integrated into a spiritual society. His recreation, which not infrequently brings the contacts which enable him to choose his life's partner, is supervised and directed under religious auspices, whose constant endeavor it is to clarify and define the ultimate goals of life. In the atmosphere of such spirituality, his spirit nature is nurtured and developed. His liberal participation in all such institutions and exercises is calculated for the development of that spirituality. What I may ask, is more essential to a ministerial calling?

Fourth, there then comes to the adolescent youth training and experience without counterpart in any other institutions of which I am aware. He enters the quorums of the priesthood. At the age of twelve he is first ordained and inducted into a group of approximately his own age.

He is taught the history of the priesthood, and he is made to understand that the power conferred upon him, even though a mere youth, derives from the authentic power given by the Lord Jesus Christ through his servants to those selected to receive the priesthood in this dispensation of time, and from whom it has come in direct and authentic succession to this boy. He has respect for this calling, and he seeks to discharge his duties as a youthful holder of the priesthood of the Lord. Is that training for a minister in the gospel of Christ? Is there anything taught in the seminaries of ecclesiastical learning more important as a groundwork for ministerial service than actual participation in the functions and offices of the priesthood?

Well, this young man continues through the various gradations of the priesthood, always being given and assuming larger participation in the functions of the Church and the blessing of the people.

Fifth, much of the education of the young man, not only in the Sunday School, the other auxiliary organizations, and the priesthood quorum, but also in his academic training, is directed toward acquisition of theological learning and capacity to live and expound the principles of the gospel. Church schools, institutes, and seminaries are available to him in this preparation.

If he avails himself of all these privileges, I say he is prepared for missionary service and for ordination and setting apart to go forth as an ambassador and minister of the Lord Jesus Christ in teaching his gospel to the people and performing ministerial services among them. I hope that never again in our own country or in other countries will the ministerial status of our missionaries be seriously questioned.

We can use young women of eligible age, health, and spiritual qualifications in the missionary service. They have performed an outstanding work in foreign and local missions. Their pleasing manner, their intelligent and persuasive elucidation of the principles of the gospel have won for them sympathetic listeners where others have failed. Their services are sought by all the missions because of their competence and the lovely atmosphere and spirit they bring, but they must have good health, for the labors are strenuous.

We have need for married couples in the missions—men and women of maturity and experience whose families have been reared, who can go into missions and not only proselyte but also teach to branches of the mission the great principles of self-government, to give guidance under the direction of the mission president to the efforts of new members who have not been schooled in the procedures of the Church.

Perhaps I have said too much with reference to the details of some of our missionary procedure. If I have, please ascribe it to my intense interest in the success of our great system.

May I now make a few comments on some matters which, in my judgment, have a bearing on our whole missionary endeavor. I have spoken to you about these matters before, but I deem them worthy of further attention to fortify our resolution to capitalize on the notable missionary experiences which I first mentioned.

These comments and observations I bring forward under the general caption of courage and frankness in gospel exposition. I think perhaps I may have received my idea and urge to mention this matter from the series of addresses presented by our brethren during recent months on the Sunday evening program of the Church broadcast over the radio. I do hope that many of you have listened to these programs, and I hope sincerely that many of our friends not in the Church have listened, also. The messages were meant for them.

I think these messages are furnishing a pattern that all of us may well adopt in our attempt to share the gospel with our neighbors and with the world. The addresses were dissertations on gospel principles, literally reciting scriptural support for the doctrines we espouse and teach. The feature of the discourses, however, which arrested my attention was the speaker's approach to the listening audience.

After or during each exposition of a principle of the restored gospel, the speaker confronted his listeners with one or more personal questions, of which the following are examples. (I attempt to give only the idea, not the language.) All of the questions were presented with the utmost courtesy, and in a spirit of friendliness, but in frankness.

After the lecture on the personality of God, follows the question: Are you, my friend, converted to the worship of a personal God, the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Eternal Parent, and the Organizer and Ruler of the universe? Is he a real Father in heaven to you, as you offer your prayers and supplications to him? Or are you inclined to accept in lieu of such a concept that God is merely a principle of power in the universe without personality? Do you believe that such a nebulous concept of the Almighty will be adequate to govern in the affairs of men and bring reverential obedience to divine law and brotherhood among the sons of God?

And then after an explanation of baptism, these frank questions: Are you, my Christian friend, convinced in your own heart that the baptism you have received is the baptism prescribed by the Savior of the world as essential for the salvation of man and entrance into the Father's kingdom? Have you complete confidence that the authority performing baptism for you emanates directly from the Savior, who is the Author of salvation? Would you not, if you seek for truth, feel far more contented to receive baptism in the manner in which our Lord himself received it, performed by divine authority traceable directly to reliable sources verified by recent history, not subject to the debate and confusion arising out of questionable interpretations and practices of antique times with historical records inadequate for present competent proof?

After the subject of the Holy Ghost has been explained in the light of the scriptures and modern revelation, these questions, very frank, perhaps bold, addressed to the friend who listens: Have you received the Holy Ghost? If you answer yes, how did you receive it? Do you believe, after what you have heard, that it can be conferred upon anyone except under the laying on of hands by him who holds the priesthood of God? Would you like to have the Holy Ghost as a guide and companion in life as promised by the Savior?

Finally, as to modern revelation, so important and essential in the establishment of the restored Church: Have you, my friend, one single piece of competent evidence to negate the actuality of the experiences of Joseph Smith, which through his record and solemn testimony he has left to the Church and all men? Do you deny the power of the Lord to reveal himself to his children and to give to them his word and will? Do you acknowledge the necessity, in the varying and discordant interpretations of the Lord's ministry and the subsequent history of his Church, for a word from him, which you must admit is the answer to disputation and controversy? Do you not find it in your heart, if you love God, to seek to know the truth about him and his work? Is there any adequate answer except in revelation?

I dwell upon this personal approach by personal questions because I think it is calculated to bring a personal blessing to him who is questioned. I do not want the investigator to be offended. I do not want his right of privacy and thinking and affiliation to be invaded. I do not want to do anything of this nature without his consent, but if he does consent to listen, I believe the greatest good to him comes in a frank statement of the way the principles we teach affect his personal life.

Now, you may say, we are always frank. Are we? How many men and women are there among us who find it much easier to present things about the Church and the gospel in more or less generalized statements? It is not difficult to uphold and contend for the virtues of Christian life in a Christian community. Many like to do it; I am glad they do. The more all people acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world, the more hope we shall have for the prevalence of his doctrine and principles in the affairs of men.

I have observed that there is frequently adopted a principle of negotiation between conflicting groups and interests which runs something after this order: emphasize the areas of agreement and minimize those of difference. It may be that that is acceptable as a diplomatic policy, and it may have some virtue in religious discussion, but I am not able to see how we can make great progress in teaching the true gospel to our fellow men without forcefully bringing to their attention in frankness, but good spirit, the differences which in reality represent the essence of revealed truth.

This is the sesquicentennial year of the birth of Joseph Smith. We should like to pay great honor and respect to him as the chosen servant and prophet of the Lord. How, may I ask, can we hope to do this in a way more acceptable to him than by the world-wide dissemination of the distinctive interpretations and features of the gospel which have come to us through his inspired teachings?

May I mention a final item in our missionary effort. It is what I choose to designate as background for the missionary. Communication in the world today is relatively easy. Many travel. There is widespread knowledge, particularly where there is no censorship in the dissemination of news, of communities, and social systems. Our missionaries go to the world representing not only great principles of truth, but also a divinely appointed society, established under the revelations coming from our Father in heaven. The principles of life which they teach are exemplified in that society, and their vitality and effectiveness are measured and appraised very largely by the living and behavior of that society.

We often say we have a converted ministry who go forth with complete conviction and testimony. These missionaries need a converted constituency whose conviction is attested by their living. They must be able to point with pride to us as we point with pride to them. It is almost impossible to calculate the retardation and injury to the great cause which comes from those whose performance is not consistent with their professions. In the stakes and wards of Zion the Lord has caused to be set up divisions of his kingdom. God grant that the Latter-day Saint in these divisions may have the courage, the vision, the devotion, and the strength of character to make these divisions of the kingdom effective and impressive background for the proclamation of his gospel by his missionaries.

We live in a good day, my brethren and sisters, a day of encouragement and hope and boundless opportunities. Above all else we are blessed with truth, truth about God, truth about man, his salvation and destiny. We have a burning desire to share that truth with all the children of our Father. To that end we send our missionaries to them at great cost and sacrifice.

We invite all men to listen with open minds and hearts, and fortified by divine authority and the prophecies of the holy scriptures and lifetime experiences of good men, we solemnly make the promise to them that if they will hearken and receive, their lives will be enriched. Whether wealthy or poor, they will be infinitely happier, and they will thank the Lord to the end of their days for the missionaries who brought them the truth.

I invoke the blessings of the Lord on his Church and kingdom in the earth, and upon all men, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency of the Church has just spoken to us. We shall now hear from Elder George Q. Morris of the Council of the Twelve, who will be followed by Elder S. Dilworth Young.

ELDER GEORGE Q. MORRIS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY DEAR brethren and sisters: I thank the Lord for fellowship and association with you in this glorious conference opened by an inspiring message from the President of this great Church, and I think his spirit has penetrated our hearts and permeated all the sessions of this conference, as the Lord blessed him with his spirit and power.

I have felt that this conference is marking a new epoch in the advancement of this the kingdom of God. I am sure there have been other conferences where splendid reports have come from various parts of the world, but there surely has been no other conference in the history of this Church where such events have been reported as have been reported in this conference—events which have thrilled our hearts, and there is no question in my mind but, with the temple dedication and choir tour in Europe, the advancement of the Church has been greatly accelerated, and we find ourselves in the midst of an advancement of this great cause spreading over the earth in a new way, under new conditions.

Just about a hundred years ago this people were a driven, mobbed, outraged people, banished from one of the states of the Union, in the hope of those who banished them—after killing their two leaders, Joseph and Hyrum, prophets of God—that they would perish in the western wilderness. We did not perish. Now a hundred years or so later our President and our choir, with members of the Quorum of the Twelve, are made welcomed and honored visitors in the nations of the world, being accorded welcomes that were heartfelt and generous, such as are perhaps given to royalty and other people of distinction—and the Lord will bless those peoples.

Why has this occurred? Because this is the kingdom of God. Daniel saw this day, and we should realize, and I hope our children realize, that we are taking part in events which prophets saw and described centuries ago that the Lord knew would take place; and in my judgment all that is going on in the world today, with our world wars and our great movements that seem to be shaking the earth—is being utilized for the consummation of his holy purposes as he has always done. So we are seeing the fulfilment of this prophecy of Daniel:

And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. (Daniel 2:44.)

How could we identify this kingdom? Well, there are many ways. Mark the advance of civilization, from the ancient, Asiatic powers, with whom God had dealings through his prophets, advancing westward over Asia, advancing westward through Europe, always westward, and then it was stopped for centuries. Thousands of miles of ocean formed an impediment to this advancement. Then in due time the Lord bridged that great gap, inspiring Columbus to discover this land, this the greatest of all continents and the choicest of all lands, which God had reserved for the setting up of his kingdom; on which he established this free government, giving this nation power over the mother country in the Revolutionary War. During these years in Europe before America was discovered, kingdoms were established all over the land and continued for centuries.

It was in the time of these kings that this kingdom of God was to be established. It is interesting to note that in great movements, and the establishment of kingdoms and dominions, two things are very essential: transportation and communication. Without those, developments of that kind are not possible. The Lord has taken care of that, and now as his kingdom advances in power, we hear the spoken word around the world, and we are on the way, I think, even to be able to see around the world through television; and we are having planes built that will take us from here to our temple in Bern and to our other operations in Europe between sunrise and sunset. The Lord has provided the necessary means at the right time.

Another identification: The Lord, through his prophets, and the Savior while he was with the Nephites, said that there would be a sign given when the Father would undertake to establish his kingdom for the last time among the nations.

He said to them when the record of this people comes to your descendants then you may know that the work of the Father is being begun among the nations of the earth.

Well, that Book of Mormon came to their descendants, and they have had it for a hundred years. The Lord also said that the time would come for the gathering of Israel—Israel to this nation, the land of Joseph, and the Jews to their land in Palestine. For a hundred years, the gospel has been preached. You or your fathers and mothers have been gathered from all the nations of the earth because you and they are of the blood of Israel. They heard the message of the gospel, and we have been gathered here to this nation. Significantly enough, the movement westward continued when this great land was opened, even in this land, when we were driven from the east we moved further west, until we have come to the last stand in the westward movement, in the tops of these Rocky Mountains. There is no place further west to go and no further need of it, for God has now established his kingdom in the tops of these mountains, and Israel is gathering to it.

The Jews, because of conditions growing out of World War I, are going back to Palestine, crowding back so rapidly that they can hardly be cared for. They do not understand why, but we do. They are building up their cities, planting their vineyards, developing industry, and they are beginning to believe in Jesus Christ as foretold. I was in touch with an association in New York City while I was there that was a mission to the Jews, to preach Christianity to the Jewish people, and singularly enough it was an organization of Jews who had been converted to Christianity —such as they were able to comprehend and believe.

I went into their establishment, not knowing just who they were, to inquire about something, and then I saw the New Testament and other evidences that led me to ask them, "Are you Christians?"

They said, "Yes, we are Christians." "Do you mean to tell me that you Jews believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ?"

"Yes, we do."

"You believe then that Jesus Christ was the Messiah, he whom your fathers crucified?"

"Yes, we do."

They had suffered hardship and trial and difficulty facing the enmity of their own people. I was present in one of their meetings where they sent away a young woman missionary, as we send our missionaries, in a way. And where do you suppose she was being sent? She was being sent to Jerusalem where their fathers crucified the Lord Jesus Christ, to bring them the message that this same Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world.

The Lord said when these things were happening we would know that he was at work among the nations, that he had set his hand to carry on his work. The Prophet Joseph Smith, just three years before the powers of evil finally so gathered around him that they took his life, made this prophecy. It is in the famous Wentworth letter of 1842, Mr. Wentworth having asked him to supply information and something of the doctrines that might be published concerning the history of our people. After he had outlined the history and persecution of the people, before setting forth our beliefs in what we now call our Articles of Faith, he prophesied:

Our missionaries are going forth to different nations, and in Germany, Palestine, New Holland, Australia, the East Indies, and other places; the Standard of Truth has been erected; no unhallowed hand can stop the work from progressing; persecutions may rage, mobs may combine, armies may assemble, calumny may defame, but the truth of God will go forth, boldly, nobly, and independent, till it has penetrated every continent, visited every clime, swept every country, and sounded in every ear, till the purposes of God shall be accomplished and the Great Jehovah shall say, the work is done. (D.H.C. IV:540.)

I bear my humble witness that that prophecy is of God and that this is the kingdom of God that Daniel saw the Lord set up, never to be given to other people; that angels have visited the earth and restored the Holy Priesthood, without which the kingdom of God has never been in the earth, and never can be in the earth; and God is carrying on this work; and the miraculous things referred to by Elder Petersen yesterday are part and parcel of the kingdom of God. Unless we can accept the supernatural, which means the power of God, we cannot accept salvation in the kingdom of God, and we do not believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. We do not believe that the gospel is the power of God, if when the power of God is manifest to bring it to us, we reject it and deny it.

This is the Church and kingdom of God. I bear my humble witness to it. His power is here for the salvation of the world. Would to God they would believe and join with us in advancing this kingdom over the earth, for there is no power under heaven, or ever will be, except the gospel of Jesus Christ and the kingdom of God, that will bring universal peace and happiness to the children of men, and that process is now in operation. May God further it and bless it. I bear witness to the divine calling of the Prophet Joseph Smith—a glorious Prophet, who has paid the price that prophets have paid in this world that enshrines the dead prophets and destroys the living ones.

May God bless us and preserve us so that we will live the gospel and preach it. People may not believe it—I wish they would—but it is our business to declare it with all its marvelous works and wonders. The definition in the dictionary for “miraculous” is “marvelous, wonderful,” and that is exactly how the Lord describes the work that he is to bring forth in the latter days, a “strange work,” “a marvelous work and a wonder,” because his power will be made manifest.

May God bless us and help us to be true to every principle and doctrine and teaching of this Church, to live them, and to preach them to the world, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened is Elder George Q. Morris of the Council of the Twelve. We shall now hear from Elder S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

LAST EVENING President Richards referred with some feeling to the children and to the grandchildren and to the great-grandchildren, who if the Church is to carry forward, must somehow catch the great message from their parents and go forward when the torch is tossed to them. I should like to spend my few moments in talking to them, if I might have the Spirit of the Lord.

I should like to speak to Lori and to Park, to Charlotte and to Annette, to Jack, to Brook, to Becky, and to Kirk, to Joan, to Norma, and to Ann, to Suzette, and to Carol Gay, and to Don, to Dale, and to LeGrand, and to Henry and to David—I could go on and on and on naming the children, some of whom are listening this morning, and many of whom are in Sunday School.

Some of them, when given opportunity, would arise to their feet and say something like this: “I believe the gospel. I believe that Joseph Smith was a Prophet.” And then they qualify it by saying, “I do not know yet that it is true, but I believe it.” I desire to say something to them concerning this qualifying statement, and I should like to say it in simple language so they can understand.

The power to bear testimony, the ability and the feeling of being able to say that one knows that Jesus is the Christ and that the restoration of the gospel has come through the hands of Joseph Smith, comes entirely by the power of the Holy Ghost. That power does not come through any education or through any special preparation on the part of the recipient in earthly things, but rather it whispers into the heart of the one who wants to know, and once whispered and once understood, that person may stand and say as surely as I or anyone else may stand and say it, that he knows that Jesus is the Christ. For the Spirit bears the witness, and it comes to everyone that in truth desires it.

I think that is the great message of Joseph Smith himself. He was only fourteen years of age, and he walked into his mother's home one morning and said, "Mother, I have learned for myself that Presbyterianism is not true." Well, each of our children is not going to receive a vision such as Joseph Smith received, but each can have the whispering, and each can know just as surely, no matter what his age. He does not have to grow to be an adult to have this knowledge.

I can remember when I was a small child at the Lowell School up on D Street and Second Avenue. Four of us boys were gathered in the corner by the school fence, two of us were Latter-day Saints, and two of us were not. The two who were not were baiting the two Latter-day Saints. One of them (it was not I, although I might have had the courage to do it) turned on these other boys and said, "Well, we have the truth, and you haven't, and that is all there is to it." And that is all there was to it, too. He did not know why he knew it, but he did know it. He was going to learn why later. All children will learn to understand that whispering someday, and only by that whispering can you children, wherever you be, know that Jesus is the Christ. You may pile up evidence and knowledge, but only by that spirit will you know it.

Now the spirit does not always whisper. Sometimes it leaves one, and then one is left to his own resources. Then enters free agency. I should like to say to my children, my grandchildren and yours, that you can be determined to know about this thing by your own desire. You do not have to take someone's else word about it. Say to yourselves, "I know that this is so. I believe it, and I am going to abide by it." As you get that determination and say it, somehow the spirit will re-enter into you and fortify you in it.

There will be times when the spirit will not come to you. Here are some evidences which eventually will grow into your hearts until they will sustain you when the spirit is not present. There is the evidence which you will gain from the Book of Mormon. When you read that book, it will be an evidence to you. Coupled with it will be evidences found in the ancient Old Testament of how the Lord dealt with his ancient people. You will discover that it is very similar to the way he dealt with those in the Book of Mormon. The pattern of the New Testament will be an evidence to you, for like that pattern the Church today is established. There you will read it and take comfort from it.

You, when you get old enough to understand them, will be able to gain great comfort from the books of Moses and of Abraham, the revelations of the Lord to great, inspired men. These will give you renewed assurance. Archaeological discovery, that is, the digging in ancient mounds to find evidences of what kind of people lived there, will further your belief, because slowly but surely, as these evidences come forth, they bear their silent, dusty witness of the truth of the gospel.

One of the most noble witnesses and one of the most assuring and convincing witnesses is the lives of your own parents. Watch them live, watch how the gospel touches their hearts and makes them gentle and kind. That is the surest evidence that it is a power beyond any earthly conception—its effect upon the lives of your own folk and those you see around you who are trying to work righteousness.

Another evidence, as you get older, will be the evidence you will see in the effort of the Church to help its own through the welfare program. Such altruistic things can come only from those who want to practise and believe the truth. This great evidence will also bear its witness to you as you get older and take part in it; as you go to the cannery or as you go to weed the beet fields and help harvest the peas. Those evidences will come to you because of your work and your actions in that program.

Then, of course, you are going to have a great deal of pleasure and fun, but you are going to see the evidence of the auxiliary programs of the Church. How they touch your lives, starting with childhood and taking you through to adulthood, giving you ideals and knowledge of how to handle yourselves and your companions, how to be happy and joyful, and how to enjoy that portion of the gospel, for the gospel is a happy thing. And the Mutual Improvement Associations and the Sunday School and the Primary will contribute evidences within your ability to understand if you will but heed.

And finally, not finally but somewhere along the line, each young man will be given the priesthood. And then he will have a chance to practise the power which will eventually take him into the presence of our Heavenly Father. You will not know much about it at first, for it will be evidenced by such simple acts as the passing of the bread when the sacrament is administered in honor of our Lord and Savior. Later on you will be able to baptize, and, too, you will be able to lay on hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, and after that you will be able to administer to your own sick. And still you will not know what that power is. Finally you will feel it, and you will learn, when you become old, that eventually it will take you into the presence of your Father in heaven.

Determination does it, my young friends. Be determined that you are going to get these evidences into your hearts, and then pray to the Lord that he will give you the Spirit of the Holy Ghost.

One more thing—you will have evidence of the whispering of the Spirit. You will hear testimony borne by others that there sits on this stand one who is not only the President of the Church but who is the Prophet of the Living God. That evidence can be borne into your hearts no matter how young you are, that the Lord has seen to it that his power has been carried forward from the days of Joseph Smith.

Let me give you an example of what can happen to you. Brigham Young stood up one day in the early history of this Church and told the assembled people that the Lord, through the Prophet Joseph Smith, had put upon his shoulders and those of the Twelve, the kingdom; that they were to bear it on, and it was not to be done by Sidney Rigdon and others who were making claim, but that the Prophet had given to him and his fellows in the Twelve the power of God to carry on this work. There sat in that audience, my young friends, those who were full of faith, and the Lord manifested to them through a miracle that what President Young said was true, for he appeared unto them to be the very Prophet Joseph himself, and his voice sounded like the Prophet. They knew by that sign that he spoke truth.

But there also sat in that audience those who did not, and who did not want to believe, and who were critical. They saw and heard nothing, and they did not believe, and they apostatized. Of those who believed, you in this audience are their descendants. Those who did not believe, where are they?

It is the right and privilege of everyone, grown-up, half-grown, or tiny, to know by the Spirit that the President of this Church today, President David O. McKay, is a prophet of the Living God, that his Counselors are prophets, that the members of the Quorum of the Twelve and the Patriarch are prophets. All of the rest of us should sustain them in their holy offices so that they can direct the work, and we can forward it under their direction.

That testimony every man, woman, and child may know, not by any knowledge that comes from books, but by the whispering of the Spirit of the Holy Ghost.

I would that I were as simple as a little child, so that I might have as simple a testimony as has a child, but I do know that these things of which I have spoken are true, I bear witness of them humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy has just concluded speaking.

The Choir and Congregation will now sing: "For the Strength of the Hills," after which we shall hear Elder Ezra Taft Benson.

The Combined Choruses and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "For the Strength of the Hills."

President David O. McKay:

We acknowledge the receipt of a dozen or more telegrams from those who gathered last evening in Priesthood meeting in the various parts of the west. Their numbers will add to the 22,000 reported already.

Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve will now speak to us.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSONOf the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters and friends: I thank God for that stirring Mormon hymn which we have just sung. ["For the Strength of the Hills."]

In deep humility I stand before you this morning. I seek an interest in your faith and prayers, and the blessings of our Heavenly Father, that I might have his Spirit to sustain me.

This is a great honor, a sobering responsibility, and a sacred privilege. I thrill with this great conference and the messages that have been given. Although I will have to get part of the messages through the written word, I am very grateful to the Lord that I was able to attend part of the meetings yesterday and to be here this morning. It became necessary to attend an important cabinet meeting in Washington on Friday and to stop in Denver en route to Salt Lake City.

I would like to say to you, my brothers and sisters and friends, that I am very happy to report, based on that visit and on a telephone conversation five minutes before this session began, that the President of the United States continues to make excellent progress. He has been informed of the spontaneous prayers that have ascended to our Heavenly Father in the sessions of this great conference, and more particularly the prayer which was offered in his behalf by the General Authorities of the Church as they surrounded the sacred altar in the temple in fasting and prayer on Thursday. Knowing the President as a great and good man—a man of faith and deep spirituality—I know he would want me to express to all within the sound of my voice his gratitude for the faith and prayers which have been offered.

I have been deeply impressed the past few years with the growth in spirit, fellowship, and brotherhood which seems to be in evidence in the Church. For the past three years I have been traveling approximately one hundred thousand miles each year. Almost everywhere I have gone I have been greeted by members of the Church, either at the airport or at meetings—which they were not obligated to attend—and always there were expressions of love and confidence and prayers in my behalf, and an expression of interest and pride in the growth of the Church in all the world. I believe I have also found evidence of increased faith and devotion.

It is quite appropriate, it seems to me, that much reference has been made in this conference to conditions in Europe and the great events that have taken place there in recent months: the dedication of the temple at Bern; the breaking of ground for a new temple in England; the announcement of a possible third temple.

Reference has been made to the European tour of the choir, the faith of the Saints, and the blessings which they enjoy today compared with only a few years ago—yes, just a short decade ago. I am very grateful to President McKay and the other members of the Presidency that Sister Benson and I were invited to attend that glorious dedication in Bern, Switzerland. I think I have never felt in all my life the veil quite so thin as it was three weeks ago this morning as we met in the opening session of that dedication service in that lovely spot in the house of the Lord, and as we listened to the prayer offered by President McKay and the remarks which preceded that prayer. Surely he was inspired, and surely we were all uplifted and convinced beyond any shadow of a doubt that the action taken by the First Presidency in extending temples into Europe had the benediction and approval of our Heavenly Father. I shall never forget that glorious event! To me it was the most important event that has transpired in Europe in 118 years since the gospel was first taken to those shores. I am grateful to the Lord that my official duties permitted me to attend that dedication, almost in a miraculous manner, because had it not been for the postponement of a week I probably would not have had the opportunity. I think, President McKay, that the postponement was in part an answer to my prayers.

Naturally I was deeply impressed with the contrast between conditions in Europe in 1946 when I was there last and conditions as we find them now. I have been going back in memory, off and on ever since the dedication, reviewing in my mind the conditions that existed there when I went on an emergency mission in response to the First Presidency's call in 1946, and conditions as we saw them and as others saw them on this recent tour of the choir and the visit of the other brethren and the dedication of the temple. Surely the God of heaven has blessed Europe and the people of those countries. It almost seemed impossible for me to realize that in 1946, while traveling over 60,000 miles, most of it by army planes — unheated planes with bucket seats—in jeeps, and some of it in wooden railway coaches and on army trains—that much of Europe was in complete economic and spiritual collapse; it seemed almost impossible to realize the change that had come about, the comforts that are available now which were entirely absent then. Then there were railway stations that were bombed and blasted, schedules that were irregular and undependable, whole cities laid waste, service disrupted, and business paralyzed. Now everything seems to be in order—no more sleeping on straw beds or living on “K” rations. Everything seems promising and peaceful.

The people too have changed—no more shivering with cold; no more evidence of malnutrition; no more people poorly clothed and in rags; no more hungry and starving people, especially little children. No more great streams of refugees crowding the country roads with all their earthly belongings on their backs; no more great hordes of displaced persons, families broken, people discouraged, bewildered, frustrated, sick at heart! Yes, there has come a great change, and I thank God that his blessings have been showered upon those nations, particularly those that have suffered so much because of World War II.

I would like to mention this morning just one simple experience to illustrate not only the changes that have come about, but also something of the influence and the power of music and the Tabernacle Choir. I have wanted to relate this to the Tabernacle Choir ever since I returned. Even though they are not all here this morning, I want to mention it.

You will recall the accounts of the bombing of that great city of Hamburg, a great and proud city, a great industrial center. When we went there in the spring of 1946, it seemed as if the whole city was a shambles. There was nothing but rubble. There were no streetcars operating, no bus lines—all services were broken. Everything seemed to be broken to pieces. As I remember they estimated that the city was over seventy percent destroyed. A thousand planes had swooped down upon that city night after night. During one terrible night—and I heard the account firsthand from many of our faithful Saints—during one terrible night five of our six places of meeting were destroyed. We lost, as I recall, twenty-six members of the priesthood.

Sunday, October 2

Third Day

Then there followed one of the best demonstrations of the spirit of the well-fare program that I think this Church affords: The district president called the Saints together and they brought such food, bedding, and clothing as they could salvage and put it at the feet of the district presidency for distribution among the members of the Church according to need.

While this experience was still fresh in our minds, we were meeting at the city of Herne with the Saints of the battered Ruhr industrial area for their first district conference after the war. The meeting was being held in an old bombed-out schoolhouse. I do not recall exactly how many people were there, but there were several hundred. We had set the meeting for eleven o'clock in order to give them time to walk the long distances many of them had to come, some of them carrying babies in arms because there were no public conveyances available, and most of them had worn out their bicycles or were unable to get repair parts.

The district presidency had arranged, with our co-operation, a special surprise for the congregation that morning. From somewhere they had obtained an old radio which they had placed under cover in one corner of the building. At a certain moment in that service, which I shall never forget, the controls of that radio were turned to Radio Stuttgart, the American army radio station operated by a Mormon serviceman, and we heard strains of the Tabernacle Choir float out over the audience in that stirring and beautiful pioneer song, "Come, Come, Ye Saints."

After the second number, "O My Father," had been sung, I think there was not a dry eye among the adults in that audience. I saw before me an audience literally melted to tears through the singing of Mormon hymns by our great choir. It seemed as if all the cares of those suffering Saints were forgotten that morning. Even during the thirty-minute lunch period—when the most common item for lunch was a mixture of cracked grain and a little water such as we used to feed the baby chicks—even during the lunch period they talked of their blessings and expressed their gratitude for the gospel.

Then as we left that evening after the second session, the common expression was, as we bade them good-bye, "All is gut, Brother Benson." Well, all is good now surely. With the coming of the temples, with the material restoration that has come to those countries, and with what I hope is a deepened interest in spiritual matters—to which the temple will contribute in great measure—I hope too there will be a great increased interest in things spiritual, that those nations might be preserved in peace.

May God bless those wonderful people who will be recipients of the blessings of the temple, provided they prepare themselves for those blessings by living the gospel. And I sincerely hope and pray that not only they, but also all of us everywhere, will make that preparation that we may enjoy the richest blessings known to men and women in this world which are tied up with the sacred ordinances and blessings of the temples of God. While I recognize that there are many Saints who are still isolated and who will be unable, probably, to reach the temples, this movement in Europe which I am sure was made under inspiration will bring the temples closer to many thousands of our Father's children.

To those who are still isolated may I say this: In my humble judgment if you continue to live the gospel and keep the commandments, and keep yourselves pure and unspotted from the world, the Lord will in some way make up to you that which you seem to be losing because it may not be possible for you to go to the temple. You will not be deprived of blessings which your lives merit.

Now, my brethren and sisters, much has been said regarding the attitude of the world toward the Church and kingdom of which we are a part. It seems as if we have been accepted, as it were, by the world. Much of praise, much of commendation, many favorable comments in the press and elsewhere have been made regarding the Church in recent years. Sister Benson and I were delighted as we traveled officially through six countries of Europe. We were delighted to find as we visited with officials of governments and agricultural leaders, men of prominence, in dinners and receptions, and in informal meetings, that everywhere there was favorable comment regarding the Church and its people. Many, many were the conversations we held regarding the Church and its program.

But I would like to raise this warning, my brothers and sisters. In this period of apparent goodwill—good feeling toward the Church—when it seems as if we have no great obstacles any more as we once had, there should be deep concern. In my judgment, in the hour of our success is our greatest danger. And apparently this is an hour of great success. No more persecution—persecution which once tended to drive us together and make us united! Now we seem to be accepted by the world. Will it mean disunity? Will it mean that we will rest on our laurels and sit back, as it were, and think that all is well in Zion? I think there is real danger in this period, this period of praise and commendation. I am happy for it, provided we be careful, that we be on our guard. The praise of the world will not save us. It will not exalt us in the celestial kingdom. Only the living of the principles of the gospel will bring us salvation and exaltation. And so I hope that our performance in living the gospel will be equal to the commendation and the praise we are receiving, that our performance will at least equal our reputation, and we have a good reputation. God grant that we may merit all the good things that have been said about us, and that more good things might be accurately said about us in the future.

I realize that the devil is alert. He is the enemy of this work. He is the enemy of all righteousness, and I know that he is clever, that he never takes a holiday. He works overtime. He is ingenious. I am confident he will devise new ways to fight this work. We may not know just what form those schemes will take, but we must be vigilant.

President McKay, I thought, very wisely said last night that should opposition come the best way for us to meet it is to live to prove false any false accusations. With all my heart I endorse that sentiment.

But there is real danger, my brothers and sisters. There is real danger that during this period we may let down our guard, as it were; that we may be tempted to join with the world and adopt some of their standards against which we have been warned by the Lord. I think this is particularly true in the social field. Only recently there came to my attention the fact that a group of young women, wives, some of whose husbands are employed in the government of the United States and of men who had attained a certain amount of prominence in their respective fields, who had more or less concluded that in order to be accepted by the world, in order that their husbands might get ahead in the world, they would have to let down just a little in their standards. They had concluded they would have to serve cocktails and coffee in their homes when friends came.

I want to testify to you, my brothers and sisters, and particularly to the young married couples of this Church, that such a conclusion is not only unwise and unjustified, but it is also dangerous and can lead only to heartache and disappointment and a loss of faith. I am confident that now more than ever before, possibly, is a time for us to live the gospel, to keep the commandments, to maintain every standard of the church, and to be true to our covenants. By so doing we not only guarantee and safeguard our own future and our salvation and exaltation, but we will also tend to safeguard the future of our own descendants and assure to a much greater extent our own success in our chosen fields, no matter what those fields might be.

I think it was Nephi who said that the time would come when there would be a tendency for people to become pacified; they would be lulled away into a false security; there would be those who would be at ease in Zion, saying, "Zion prospers, all is well"; and that the devil would cheat their souls and lead them carefully down to hell. (See 2 Nephi 28:21.)

I think we need to be on the alert today to see that that does not happen in the Church. I had occasion many times on this last tour through Europe, as I have had before, to thank the

Sunday, October 2

Third Day

Lord for the Word of Wisdom. Many were the conversations we had regarding the Church, and particularly those my good wife had, as we sat at dinners, luncheons, etc., and it came to their attention that we did not drink liquor, smoke, etc. Immediately they wanted to know more about the Church, and always there was commendation for our standards. Never once was there any embarrassment. Always there was a feeling of gratitude and thanksgiving on our part at the end of the day or evening because of the standards which the God of heaven has provided in his Church.

This was the same no matter how high the station of the officials with whom we met. And I say to you, it always will be true of men of goodwill, men of character. As Latter-day Saints we cannot afford to let down our standards, to refuse to live the gospel completely and fully.

God bless us, my brethren and sisters, that we may continue a peculiar people, as Peter said of the saints of old. He referred to them as a peculiar people. So are we, and may we continue so. May we who hold the priesthood of God be unafraid to step forward and provide the righteous leadership which is necessary in our various fields of activities! This is a time for demonstration, my brethren of the priesthood, to let the world know something of the fruits of Mormonism, something of the testimonies which we bear, something of our faith and our determination to live the gospel.

Yes, let us do what is right, and we shall have no occasion to worry. I testify to you with all my soul that this work in which we are engaged is the truth. God has again spoken from the heavens. His work is upon the earth. Joseph Smith was in very deed a Prophet of God. The same power and authority which he bore is now in the hands of President David O. McKay.

God help us to realize these facts and to heed the counsel of our great leader and those who serve as leaders in the priesthood everywhere, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve has just concluded speaking.

The closing song by the Combined Singing Mothers Choruses will be, "Still, Still With Thee," conducted by Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen. The closing prayer will be offered by Elder William Jackson O'Bryant, president of the Idaho Falls Stake, following which this Conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

The choral music for this session was furnished by the Singing Mothers Choruses, under the direction of Florence Jepperson Madsen, with Frank W. Asper at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

The music for this, the seventh session of the 126th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, will be rendered by the Combined Singing Mothers' Choruses from Twenty-one Stakes in the Bannock and East Idaho Regions, and from Star Valley, under the direction of

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS: I sincerely seek an interest in your faith and prayers, that what I shall undertake to say in the next few minutes may be directed by the Spirit of our Heavenly Father and may be delivered in a spirit of love and fellowship, for I love the work of the Lord, and I love his people; I love to work with them.

I have been interested in this conference, especially interested in the many references that have been made to the foreign missionary work and to the newly completed temple in Switzerland. Those references have caused me to reflect upon the purposes of temples. We have had some instruction already as to why we build them. It seems to me that so far as a newly erected temple is concerned, perhaps its major purpose would be to take care of the living, because I believe the accommodations of those already existent would take care of the vicarious work that we have available at the present time. So this newly erected temple is likely to be most beneficial for the living people of Europe. They who have never had the experience of an endowment in the temple before, will receive a wonderful uplift in their spirituality as they enjoy this rare and wonderful privilege which is given to us in the temples of God.

The priesthood has for its purpose integrating into the lives of people the ordinances and the benefits of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The greatest and most supreme of all of these blessings comes to us through the administration of the priesthood in the temples of God and in no other place and were this new temple limited to the benefits the people receive in mortality, its erection and administration would be amply justified, but the benefits of these ordinances when they are carried through to their ultimate end, are not limited to mortality. They penetrate the veil between mortality and eternity, giving people advantages which are past our understanding. Really, they are so sublime and wonderful that they stagger our imagination.

In the Doctrine and Covenants we are told that any man who can attain to the magnification of all of his duties in the Melchizedek Priesthood would and will ultimately attain to the powers of God.

No man who goes into a temple and is content with receiving his own endowments realizes the full possibilities that the temple offers him. He only who takes a wife into the temple and is sealed to her for time and all eternity can ultimately attain to the tremendous and wonderful blessings that are held out as an inducement for righteous living. That seems to me to be the sublime and supreme distinction between the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and all other religious denominations.

During the last year, 1954, and this year up to the present, as we have ministered among the stakes of Zion, there has been placed in our hands an item, a statistical item relative to the numbers of people who avail themselves of this grand and glorious privilege. I have kept account of the stakes I visited last year and this. Last year there were reported 1811 marriages in the stakes that I visited, and I was surprised to learn that less than half of them were consummated in the temple, a fifth of them involving people who were not members of the Church.

It is an astonishing thing. I rather feel to regard that as an unsatisfactory percentage. There may be people who think it is perhaps all that could be expected, but I do not. I think that we ought to strive to increase that percentage, and then once you make up your mind that that should be an incentive and an objective, the question then is: Where are you going to start to bring about an improvement?

It seems to me that the duty of teaching people who are approaching marriageable age, the advantages of celestial and eternal marriage, first, and always, is with the parents. Then I wonder how parents who have not availed themselves of that privilege and who hardly live so as to impress their children with the desirability of perpetuating the marriage relationship, can expect so to impress their children. I have come to decide, brethren and sisters, that the place to start is not with the young folk, but with the old folk, to get the fathers and mothers of young people fully to appreciate the advantages, the wonderful advantages of celestial marriage, and then to present to their growing children an example which will make marriage, a marriage for eternity, attractive to them.

If the parents do not do it, where can we lay the responsibility for it? We have a good many agencies that are supposed to supplement the efforts of the parents, brethren and sisters, but it seems to me that fathers and mothers can never escape the responsibility for this instruction.

So it behooves us to live to be worthy of it. If we have not already availed ourselves of the opportunity to bring our lives into conformity with the standards of the gospel so that we can avail ourselves of that privilege, what example do we set as a lesson to our children? Words fall flat when they do not show in the example of the parents the value of the teaching.

So I believe that is where we ought to begin, brethren and sisters, and there are many of us who can take it to heart. I am sure there is a wonderful percentage of people who make every possible effort to magnify their calling and obligation, but there are many others of us who do not. We let jealousy and hatred and other things enter into family relationships which disrupt them and disturb them, resulting too frequently in the dissolution of the union, and all of that is not right, brethren and sisters. It is not right, and it behooves us as fathers and mothers to set the example and then give the instruction. That instruction should be subtle. It should be attractive. It should be convincing.

Then to supplement the efforts of the father and the mother, we have the bishopric of the ward. We had a wonderful film on the responsibility of a bishop the other night. There have been bishops in the Church who have seen and used the opportunity that is theirs to instruct their young people when they approach marriageable age in the advantages of celestial and eternal marriage. There, again, is the closest contact I believe that we have in the Church to supplement the efforts of the fathers and the mothers. And if fathers and mothers and bishops and auxiliary associations should combine in a serious effort to teach this truth, I believe we could make it so attractive that the evils which befall many of our young people would cease to be attractive to them, and they would develop a strength in their youth which would carry them through all their future lives in honorable service to God, our Heavenly Father, and in righteous living.

Now what will we do about it? We cannot dream ourselves into it, brethren and sisters, and if any single one who is here today finds opportunity, he should start action at once to correct his life and make it appropriate for the realization of these grand and glorious principles and privileges.

The greatest result of such living is the union of a man and a woman for time and eternity, sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise, with the power of eternal increase, an attribute of Godhood. "... all that my Father hath shall be given unto him" (D & C 84:38) is the promise made to the man who receives and magnifies the priesthood.

God bless you. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Antoine R. Ivins has just concluded speaking. He will be followed by Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER ADAM S. BENNION

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

THIS HAS BEEN a stirring conference, my brethren and sisters, and I trust that the few minutes I may occupy I may catch its spirit in the prayer that was uttered at the beginning of this session. We have always had beautiful music at these sessions. Today's singing was music at its best. While this group of mothers sang, I looked over the brethren down below, and I think I got a new meaning to the Eighth Psalm:

What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?

For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels. . . . (Psalm 8:4-5.)

When they sang that first song, "When Children Pray," I was reminded of the experience of the little fellow, two-and-a-half, who was sitting at the table and was asked to say the blessing. He had his hands crossed over his eyes, said the author, "The better to peek through," and then offered his prayer, understandable only to his mother—and one other. I am sure this choir has brought us into the spirit of Him who understands.

It is an honor to follow the leadership of this great First Presidency and to labor in the fellowship of my Brethren of the General Authorities. The evidence of this conference, I think, must be convincing to all of you that they are strong, devoted men. I give you my witness that they are men of God.

As we walked out of the morning session, I shook hands with Sister John A. Widtsoe, the wife of the man whom I had the honor to follow into this quorum. As we threaded our way through the narrow lane that is prepared down there in the great crowd that gathers around the car of our President, Sister Widtsoe said, "The soul of people hungers for an ideal." I was impressed that it may be that same hunger that prompts us to believe in God. There are so many evidences, the mystery to me is not that men may believe in God, but as Ballard once wrote, "the great miracle of mankind is the miracle of unbelief."

Dinmore has put it beautifully: "If no help had ever come from God, the impulse to pray would have died out long ago."

Among the stirring things of this conference is the living evidence here today of Thomas E. McKay and Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin. They have been so critically ill that man's power alone could never have made it possible for them to give the witness they have given in this conference.

The other night as I read into the Book of Mormon, I turned to the book of Ether, wherein is this remarkable passage:

Wherefore, whoso believeth in God might with surety hope for a better world, yea, even a place at the right hand of God, which hope cometh of faith, maketh an anchor to the souls of men, which would make them sure and steadfast, always abounding in good works, being led to glorify God. (Ether 12:4.)

As I pondered the meaning of an anchor, I was impressed that faith is that anchor. It is a wonderful thing to be anchored to the truth of Almighty God through faith which bids us to know that he lives. But faith is more than an anchor. As a matter of fact, if I have a theme for these few minutes, it centers in the thought of the faith which impels us to action. Faith is a dynamic thing. Faith is an adventurous term.

I was so much impressed a couple of nights ago with the declaration of PeeWee Reese, the great little shortstop of the Brooklyn Dodgers. (In case anyone did not get the word during the noon hour today, the Dodgers won again.*) You will remember in this series, the Yanks had taken the first two games, and historically the record seemed to indicate that no team which ever lost the first two games ever came back to take the series. So the commentator asked PeeWee Reese what he thought of that.

"Well," said Reese, "I know what the record is, but sometime it ought to be broken, and I believe we have the team this year to do it."—I do not want to be partisan.

As a matter of fact, faith exists in every field of activity. It is faith—it is confidence—that risks everything for the pearl of great price. The scientist watching the test tube does it in terms of faith. The men these days who are searching for a cure against polio have been following the lead of faith these many years. A neighbor of mine devotes his entire life and plans to dedicate his life to the search for something that will prevent the hardening of the arteries. It is faith that prompts men to move toward their coveted goal always. Really, it is faith that prompts a teacher to try to inspire students with the thought that there is a better life ahead.

I wish I had the magic to give to the teachers of our own schools, and to all others, the precious formula that was given to me when first we went east to go on with advanced training. My mother, who had had none of it, said, "All right son, get all of it you can." Then she gave me a farewell message that has rung in my ears ever since: "Get all the learning you can, son, but don't ever let it destroy your faith." God bless her for that admonition.

*After losing the first two games of the World Series to the New York Yankees, Brooklyn won three straight games. The day following Elder Bennion's address the Yankees won again, but Brooklyn won the seventh, and concluding game.

THE FAITH OF THE SCRIPTURES

I. Now, in these brief minutes I am going to lead your thinking to the faith of the scriptures. I think I shall beg leave to print in the interest of time. There are wonderful passages. As a matter of fact, the more I read the scriptures, the more I am impressed that the great echo through the scriptures is an echo of faith and of love and of obedience. When you put the three of them together, you have a great formula for proofreading all the experiences of life.

For those who receive it in faith, and work righteousness, shall receive a crown of eternal life. (See D & C 20:14.)

Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

For by it the elders obtained a good report.

Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear. (Hebrews 11:3.)

I love to read the life and story of Abraham and of Nephi, and both of them echo the same sentiment.

By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. (Ibid., 11:8.)

Read 1 Nephi, chapters 2 and 3, the glorious experience of Nephi, who believed he could get the plates from Laban, against the doubt of his brother, Laman, who was sure he could not. Read those two chapters to find the power of faith and the emptiness of doubt and disbelief.

The kind of faith that I have in mind is the kind that always leads into works. I am mindful of James' injunction,

But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? (James 2:20.)

Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. (Ibid., 2:18.)

But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. (Hebrews 11:6.)

Third Day

Consider these further meaningful scriptures:

For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also. (James 2:26.)

And Christ truly said unto our fathers: If ye have faith ye can do all things which are expedient unto me. (Moroni 10:23.)

And except ye have charity ye can in no wise be saved in the kingdom of God; neither can ye be saved in the kingdom of God if ye have not faith; neither can ye if ye have no hope. (Ibid., 10:21.)

Ask the Father in my name, in faith believing that you shall receive, and you shall have the Holy Ghost, which manifesteth all things which are expedient unto the children of men.

And if you have not faith, hope, and charity, you can do nothing. (D & C 18:18-19.)

But after repenting, and humbling himself sincerely, through faith, God ministered unto him by an holy angel, whose countenance was as lightning, and whose garments were pure and white above all other whiteness; . . . (Ibid., 20:6.)

And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto me, saying: Blessed art thou, Nephi, because of thy faith, for thou hast sought me diligently, with lowliness of heart. (1 Nephi 2:19.)

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, said unto my father: I will go and do the things which the Lord hath commanded, for I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commandeth them. (Ibid., 3:7.)

We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: first, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Fourth Article of Faith.)

THE FAITH OF OUR FATHERS

II. The second thought I want to leave with you is the faith of our fathers. What a wonderful place to contemplate the faith of our forebears. Before you go out this afternoon from these grounds, won't you take one more look at the Seagull Monument and read the inscription on the north side:

"Erected in grateful remembrance of the mercy of God to the Mormon Pioneers." When you gather in this edifice, you must think of the faith of men who from 1863 to 1867 toiled to build it—to 1870 to complete the balcony. As you look now at the pipes in this great organ, you must be mindful that some of them were made possible only because the pioneers discovered certain kinds of timber three hundred miles to the south.

I talked the other day with a grandson of a man who helped to saw that timber, and he said it took eighteen yoke of oxen to drag the tree from where it grew to the location of the saw that had been set up. Then by ox team they had the problem of bringing it three hundred miles to this square—and over what roads! Men without faith never would have done it!

I go out through these grounds, and though I have said it many times, will you let me say it again: The privilege that is ours at times to bring visitors to this spot always inclines me to take them to the southeast corner, for when our grandfathers lived in log cabins such as you see out there, they were dreaming dreams of the temple into which they put forty years of effort and four millions of dollars, which they did not have. That is faith!

Reference has been made to the glorious experience of the choir, and I understand every place they sang "Come, Come Ye Saints" they were encored again and again. We sing it frequently. Let me read the third verse again. William Clayton was not speculating about their arrival here. He said:

We'll find the place which God for us prepared,
Far away in the West,
Where none shall come to hurt or make afraid;

There the Saints will be blessed.
We'll make the air with music ring,
Shout praises to our God and King;
Above the rest these words we'll tell—
All is well! All is well!

Do you know what he was doing when he wrote that? It was on the 15th of April between Nauvoo and Winter Quarters, one of the toughest trips that any people ever took. I beg of you to remember that six hundred people lost their lives in those three hundred miles. He had been sick much of the time. Pick up his journal and read the first twenty pages—the little journal of William Clayton. He had been ill. His wife, Diantha, was still ill—too ill to travel. As you read those twenty pages, you will notice how often he was writing a letter to be sent back to his wife, hoping that she would be well. Then came the glad news that she had given birth to a son, she herself too ill to move. She struggled against the ague and against the mumps. He himself was sick, but the morning—I love to read this—the morning the word came that he had a son—notice the practicality of it—he said they had been spending the day in a search, for “Henry Terry’s horses are missing. They’ve been hunted all day, but are not found yet. This morning I composed a new song, ‘All is Well.’ I feel to thank my Heavenly Father for my boy, and pray that he will spare and preserve his life and that of his mother, and so order that it be soon that we may be together again.” He asked President Brigham Young, “Could they not send back and bring her along?” and President Young said, “You may.”

I tried to conjure up last night that as William Clayton talked to Brigham Young about the new song he had just written, whether either one of them could ever have imagined, even in fancy, that a hundred years later 379 voices of the choir would take that same hymn and sing it to 60,000 people in Europe. And yet they did it. And we live today under the reflected glory of that choir. That’s faith in its fulfilment.

Brigham Young said these remarkable things:

I do not wish men to understand I had anything to do with our being moved here; that was the providence of the Almighty; it was the power of God that wrought out salvation for this people; I never could have devised such a plan. . . . We have faith, we live by faith; we came to these mountains by faith. We came here, I often say, though to the ears of some the expression may sound rude, naked and barefoot, and comparatively this is true. We had to have faith to come here. When we met Mr. Bridger on the Big Sandy River, said he, “Mr. Young, I would give a thousand dollars if I knew an ear of corn could be ripened in the Great Basin.” Said I, “Wait eighteen months and I will show you many of them.” Did I say this from knowledge? No, it was my faith; but we had not the least encouragement—from natural reasoning and all that we could learn of this country—of its sterility, its cold and frost, to believe that we could ever raise anything. But we travelled on, breaking the road through the mountains and building bridges until we arrived here, and then we did everything we could to sustain ourselves. We had faith that we could raise grain; was there any harm in this? Not at all. If we had not had faith, what would have become of us? We would have gone down in unbelief, have closed up every resource for our sustenance and should never have raised anything. (History of Brigham Young, Ms. 3:95.)

THE FAITH OF TOMORROW

III. Then I wanted you to take just a brief look at what I like to call the faith of tomorrow. I was impressed a little while back at a convention in Chicago of the young people of that town. They said they were getting a little tired of those screaming headlines each day about some wild exploit of some wild youngster, so they gathered themselves together, and they made a study. They took a look at police records in Chicago, and they discovered that of all the juvenile delinquency cases that came before the court in Chicago in Cook County, all were attributable to three percent of the population, and they made a plea in that convention: “Let’s not forget the ninety-seven percent as we brand the immaturity of the three.” Then they said what to me was a wonderful thing: “We pledge ourselves to live so as to honor and revere our parents, to be decent ourselves, and to prepare ourselves to defend this nation—so to live that those whose names we bear will be proud we came along.” That gives a man faith in a new generation!

This has been a wonderful year to me. A year ago now I was not here. I give you my witness along with Brother Wirthlin and Brother Thomas E. McKay that the God who lives answers prayers. I give you my witness that that same God can carry the benediction of the faith of these people to President Eisenhower. May it be so.

I want to close with two or three concrete cases which out of this year have thrilled me. We go to these stakes week after week and come back so built up, so reinforced, so strengthened! We love you people for your faith. We are grateful for the prayers you utter for us, and we return them in the councils of these good brethren.

A young couple came into the office the other day, and the girl said, "We've always wanted him to go on a mission. Either he didn't get the call or the circumstances were not quite right, but he has not gone. Now we have a little baby, but that ambition still burns." Then she said, "I have made arrangements so I can work to support myself and the baby and have a good bit towards his keep. Is it possible that he can go?" You love that kind of faith!

Reference has been made in this conference to Brother Nebeker of Bear Lake. He went on his mission after the children had come, and one of the dramatic things, in my judgment, in Bear Lake is the day when his wife wrapped her skirt loosely around the children as she waved good-bye to the husband who rode horseback to make his train connection, and said, "In a situation like this the only things that help are work and prayer."

A few short weeks ago in Hawaii I had the privilege of giving a blessing to two Japanese girls, lovely young people, the only ones out of their families to come into the Church. They were willing to bid good-bye to the family circle. They had faith that this is the work of God, and they wanted to go on a mission. They want to go among their own people and carry this great message to them.

Then let me take you, as I close, to Cumorah. I could pay tribute to the wonderful boys and girls in the missions of the great Northwest. President McMurrin, we are grateful to you for the notable job you have done. I look down at Brother Steed and President Taylor, and I am grateful for the great theater that they have built against the Hill Cumorah. There are stirring things in life, but to stand against that hill, with only the darkness of the night for a curtain, and then have the four trumpeters come out on the top of that hill and play "An Angel from on High!"

Then sit through the evenings that attracted 54,000 people to witness the pageant, and then go through four days of testimony in the Sacred Grove!

I want to take you into that Sacred Grove for just a minute. We had listened through those four days to 248 wonderful young men and women—missionaries, and students from Brigham Young University—if you could have heard them, you would have been proud, too. They all bore wonderful witness, but included in that Sunday service, attended by some 750 people, were two women I shall never forget, both of them brought up in wheelchairs to the little platform that stands in the Grove.

One of them, Sister Louise Lake, has a sublime faith, the faith that one day she will walk again. God grant her that request. The other girl, a Miss Brown from Connecticut, who said, as she was wheeled up, "I know that I shall never walk again"—misshapen limbs, which under palsy she has such a hard time to control. She said that when that disease first struck her, she was numbed for awhile, and she was bitter for a while, but she said, "I have risen above all that"—and I think when she was through, there wasn't a dry eye in the grove. The young people who heard Miss Brown that day will never forget. She said, "Crippled as I am in my body, I rejoice that my spirit is still intact. I have the faith to believe that one day, either here or elsewhere, God will work out the healing of my body—and while I live, let me never complain, but let me go about bearing my witness to his goodness."

This has been a wonderful conference. God bless you to go out in the spirit of faith, the spirit that bids us to make a rededication of our lives and our services. We can all pray; we can all labor; we can all gather the family around us; we can attend our services; and we can do some good for somebody. In the spirit of that kind of faith, I ask God to bless you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder ElRay L. Christiansen will succeed Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve who has just spoken to us.

We shall now hear Elder ElRay L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve.

ELDER ELRAY L. CHRISTIANSEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I AM SO GRATEFUL, my brothers and sisters, for the blessings that have come to me from this conference. I have thought of it in this way: "If thy brother ask thee to go with him one mile, go with him twain." (See Matt. 5:41.) As someone put it: "The first is an obligation; the second, a consecration."

I have made up my mind that henceforth, because of the marvelous things that have been said here, I will be more determined to dedicate that which I have in the way of energy and substance to the work of the Lord here upon the earth—more determined than I have ever been before.

It seems to me that the life of a Latter-day Saint is intended to be a life of dedication and of consecration to the things of God. The gospel of Jesus Christ is a program for the perfecting of the individual member by his adherence to the principles of that gospel. It is designed to teach us to forget ourselves, to be unselfish. I have come to think that selfishness on the part of those of us who are inclined that way is one of the great deterrents to our progress and to the realization of a divine destiny. Let us be determined to overcome selfishness and personal aggrandizement by sharing with others that which we have, by dedicating ourselves to the work at hand which we have to do, through dedication of our talents, our time, our substance, our tithes, and our offerings, our love, our goodness and kindness one to another, always seeing the good that always may be found in others.

When we partake of the sacrament, brothers and sisters, we presumably take upon us the name of Christ. We agree to do as he would do, to act as he would act:

... by love serve one another.

For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. (Gal. 5:13-14.)

The reward of unselfish service has been told us by the Lord when he has said that "... whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake [I take it, in his service and the service of his fellow men] shall find it." (Matt. 16:25.) The sweetness and the joy of life is found when we are willing to deny ourselves for the good and the benefit of others. Service to others, service in the Church, giving of our substance, is part of the life of a Latter-day Saint. We are taught that sacrifice brings forth the blessings of heaven. In no other way, as I see it, can the Lord raise up a people who will be fit for the kingdom, who will have it ready for his coming. By offering himself as a sacrifice for the sins of the world and the redemption of mankind from death, Jesus set an incomparable example to us in the way of sacrifice and of love for others.

Again, when Abraham and Sarah were commanded of the Lord,—requested at least—to give as a sacrifice their son Isaac, we can imagine what must have gone through their minds. Nevertheless, they met the test. The Lord did it to see how much they loved him. Abraham was sustained, I am sure, by an unwavering trust in God. I am sure that Abraham knew that to accomplish his purposes, God could, if he desired, raise up Isaac from the dead, even after he had died. But what a lesson that is in service, of dedication, of consecration of that which he dearly loved! No wonder that Abraham was called a "friend of God."

An opportunity to demonstrate his love of the Lord was given to another man. He had great possessions, and he had a chance to test his unselfishness when he asked of the Lord, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" (Luke 10:25.) Now this man had done many good things. He had kept most of the commandments, I understand, but he had become selfish because of his great possessions. Evidently he thought more of them than he did of eternal life, because when told by the Savior that in order to gain eternal life he should sell whatsoever he had and give to the poor and take up the cross and follow him, he was sad, and according to the record, "... went away grieved: for he had great possessions." (Mark 10:22.) He had not learned the meaning of dedication and of consecration.

Contrast this man with a certain poor widow who cast into the treasury her two mites, which made a farthing—all that she had. Her contribution amounted to very little in monetary value, about one half of a penny of our money, but it was not the smallness of her offering that made it especially acceptable unto the Lord as he witnessed her placing her money in the treasury, but it was the spirit of sacrifice that she had shown. As he observed others throwing their money into the treasury, the record states:

... he called unto his disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury:

For all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living. (Ibid., 12:43-44.)

Dedication, it seems to me, in some form, is the real essence of all religion. Dedication to the will of the Lord and to his work is the religion of the Latter-day Saints. In this dispensation of the gospel, thousands have met the test when called upon to sacrifice their personal positions, their time, and even their lives, in order to establish and defend the kingdom of God upon the earth.

The Prophet Joseph Smith permitted himself to be taken by the mob and be put to death, and along with him, Hyrum, whose life was lost by an assassin's bullet, and in the same room at the same time, Dr. Willard Richards and John Taylor, who refused to leave him, and Dan Jones, and others who were loyal and devoted and would have given their lives gladly in preference to the Prophet's life. They set an example for us in this dispensation! There is scarcely an end to the list of those who have done likewise or who stand now willing to do all that is required of them. A spirit of dedication, willingness to serve in any capacity and to sacrifice, if necessary, characterizes the true Latter-day Saint.

It was not long ago that I was in one of the stakes in southern Idaho. I was asked to interview five young men between twenty-five and thirty-five years of age, most of them married and having one or two children, to see if they were ready to receive an office in the Melchizedek Priesthood for which they had been recommended. I received the thrill of my life. Somehow, I decided—I don't know whether I made a mistake or not—but I decided to see what the depth of their willingness to sacrifice was. As each one came into the room, I sat down with him, introduced myself, and became better acquainted with him. Then I stated that the Church had acquired a great tract of land in Brush Creek and wished to prepare it for settlement for the Saints. The water had to be brought on to it, the brush had to be cleared and the land leveled, homes built, schools erected, and all things must be done from scratch. It would be no easy thing. I said: "If you were asked to go, would take your wife and family and leave what you have and go to Brush Creek and settle it?" Every one of those young men said yes.

I said: "What would your wife think about it?" In every case they said, in effect, "I am sure she would feel as I do, that if the Church required it, we would go." Then I explained that I had concocted the story.

I felt like putting my arms around each of those young men. I commended them, and then I got down on my knees, and I thanked the Lord for such young men of this day who were ready to dedicate, to consecrate, to leave all that they had and go, no matter where they may be called to go and build up Zion. That is the test that we all should be ready to meet.

There is a veritable army of men and women such as these in the quorums, in the missions, and in the wards and stakes, and in all places, where they serve without a thought of compensation. There is no end to the list—the ward teachers, who do good jobs, all of those who serve, all of you. It is commendable, and it must be pleasing in the sight of the Lord. Among them, not to be overlooked, are those much unnoticed, unsung men and women, who day after day, month after month, year after year, labor in the temples of the Lord, giving vicarious service on behalf of the dead. Along with them are those who do research work, hiding behind desks and files, where nobody knows about them, spending hours and money and time and energy that the work might be perfected. It is one thing, you know, to do something for those who can return the goodness and who can thank you, but these people—this great army of those who do vicarious service, who do not expect a return in thanks, at this time at least—I think win our most sincere commendation and our admiration for that type of dedication.

Paul has said that “. . . He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully.

“. . . let him give, not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.” (II Cor. 9:6-7.)

With the Apostle Paul, brothers and sisters, let us say, as we go from this conference,

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come,

Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. (Romans 8:38-39.)

May it be so with us. I testify that this is the work of God; that his power is within this Church—the power to bring redemption to the dead and salvation to the living, and I am honored to be affiliated with the membership of this Church and to do my little bit in furthering the work. God bless you and keep you and comfort you when you need comfort, I pray humbly, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The congregation will please rise and sing one verse of “Praise to the Man Who Communed with Jehovah.”

The Combined Choruses and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, “Praise to the Man Who Communed with Jehovah.”

President David O. McKay:

Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve will now address us.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BELOVED brothers and sisters: President McKay began this great conference on a note of gratitude. My soul immediately responded to the theme. The spirit of it has inspired the proceedings of every session of the conference. In harmony with it, let me say that I am grateful for the peace that has come into my heart during the conference, and for the peace of this moment as I stand before you to express my feelings.

Among the many things for which I am thankful is the sanctifying process of repentance. I am grateful to the Lord Jesus Christ who, through the atonement he wrought, gave us the gift of repentance. I am grateful that he was willing voluntarily to give his life for us: That is literally what he did. He did not have to give it; he did not have to die. Because he was the Son of God, he was not subject to the fall, as were men. Within him was power to live forever. “. . . I lay down my life for the sheep”—he said. “No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again.” (John 10:15, 18.) He inherited power over death from his divine Father.

It took a person with power over death to pay the debt to justice to bring men forth in the resurrection. It took a sinless one, a god, even the sinless Son of God, to satisfy the demands of justice for men's sins. They themselves could not make an atonement which would either bring about their resurrection or pay for their sins and bring about their spiritual rebirth.

And so I repeat, I am grateful for my Redeemer, grateful that he paid the debt and brought about the means of repentance so that by repenting of my transgressions I can bring my soul within the reach of his atoning blood and thereby be cleansed of sin; for, after all, it is by the grace of Christ that men are saved, after all they can do. The thing they can and must do is repent. I love the doctrine of repentance.

During the past few months I have seen the need of it—oh, how I have seen the need of it. I have seen missionaries, saints, and non-members of the Church, in far-off lands sorrowing with a godly sorrow for sin. I have heard them say, "Oh, Brother Romney, do you think there is any hope for me, any chance for me to get on even the bottom rung of the gospel ladder?"

And as I have witnessed their sorrowing, I have remembered the sorrowing of repentant men in days of old; Zeezrom, for example, whose "soul," after he realized what he had done in opposing the ministry of Alma and Amulek, "... began to be harrowed up under a consciousness of his own guilt; yea, he began to be encircled about by the pains of hell." So severe were his sufferings that he "... lay sick at Sidom, with a burning fever, which was caused by the great tribulations of his mind on account of his wickedness." (See Alma 14 and 15.) And Alma, who said of the suffering he endured for "seeking to destroy the church of God":

I was racked with eternal torment, for my soul was harrowed up to the greatest degree and racked with all my sins. Yea, I ... was tormented with the pains of hell; ... with inexpressible horror, ... even with the pains of a damned soul. (See ibid., 36.)

But then I also remembered the rest which came into their souls when, through repentance, they found forgiveness. "Yea, I say unto you," said Alma to his son Helaman, that as "there could be nothing so exquisite and so bitter as were my pains"—so "... on the other hand, there can be nothing so exquisite and sweet as was my joy." (Ibid., 36:21.)

And so I was comforted and encouraged those who confided in me, and I encourage all sorrowing, repentant men to be comforted—comforted by the experience of Alma and by Paul's assurance that "... godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation. . . ." (II Cor. 7:10.) For today, as well as in days of old, there is hope, there is peace, there is rest in Christ for all whose godly sorrow brings them to that repentance which worketh salvation. Forgiveness is as wide as repentance. Every person will be forgiven for all the transgression of which he truly repents. If he repents of all his sins, he shall stand spotless before God because of the atonement of our Master and Savior, Jesus Christ; while he that exercises no faith unto repentance remains "... as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death." (Alma 11:41.) Such is the gist of God's merciful plan of redemption.

My brothers and sisters, there are many among us whose distress and suffering are unnecessarily prolonged because they do not complete their repentance by confessing their sins. You will recall the following words of the Savior,

I command you to repent, . . . and that you confess your sins, lest you suffer these punishments of which I have spoken. (D & C 19:20.)

In another revelation he said,

By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins—behold, he will confess them and forsake them. (Ibid., 58:43.)

Repeatedly he says that he forgives the sins of those who confess their sins with humbleness of heart, "... who have not sinned unto death." (See ibid., 61:2; 64:7.) And he adds,

... he who has repented of his sins, the same is forgiven, and I, the Lord, remember them no more. (Ibid., 58:42.)

But how are we to fulfil this commandment? To whom are we to confess our sins? In the fifty-ninth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord, with other directions concerning his "holy day," says,

... remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. (Ibid., 59:12.)

I would assume that we are to confess all our sins unto the Lord. For transgressions which are wholly personal, affecting none but ourselves and the Lord, such confession would seem to be sufficient.

For misconduct which offends another, confession should also be made to the offended one, and his forgiveness sought.

Finally, where one's transgressions are of such a nature as would, unrepented of, put in jeopardy his right to membership or fellowship in the Church of Jesus Christ, full and effective confession would, in my judgment, require confession by the repentant sinner to his bishop or other proper presiding Church officer—not that the Church officer could forgive the sin (this power rests in the Lord himself and those only to whom he specifically delegates it) but rather that the Church, acting through its duly appointed officers, might with full knowledge of the facts take such action with respect to Church discipline as the circumstances merit.

One having forsaken his sins and, by proper confession, cleared his conduct with the Lord, with the people he has offended, and with the Church of Jesus Christ, where necessary, may with full confidence seek the Lord's forgiveness and go forth in newness of life, relying upon the merits of Christ.

Let us in this manner clear for righteous living the decks of our own lives, and get on our way to eternal life. Only by so doing can we rid ourselves of those guilty feelings of unworthiness, depression, fear, uncertainty, and self-condemnation which block our upward climb. So long as we put off either the forsaking or confessing of our sins, just so long do we delay the day of our redemption.

Let not the past hang heavy as a millstone to thy heels,

To drag thee downward as each upward impulse to thy nobler self appeals;

But as the joyous butterfly from its chrysalis shell breaks free,

So from the past must thou rise jubilant, thine own true self to be.

This we may do today if we will, for Amulek assures us that ... if [we] will repent and harden not [our] hearts, immediately shall the great plan of redemption be brought about unto [us]. (See Alma 34:31.)

And President Joseph F. Smith spoke these comforting words:

... none of the children of the Father who are redeemed through obedience, faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, and who live in that redeemed condition, and die in that condition, are subject to Satan. . . . They are absolutely beyond his reach just as little children are who die without sin. (Gospel Doctrine, p. 570.)

God grant that it may be so with us all, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Clifford E. Young will please come forward. Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve has just spoken to us, and some of you will be wondering who the Elder is who spoke just prior to our singing. It was Elder ElRay L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve.

Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve, will now speak to us, and he will be followed by Elder Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS:

When I was on my mission many years ago, I was laboring in Southern Germany, and in 1907 President Joseph F. Smith, in company with then Bishop Charles W. Nibley, who subsequently was called to be a Counselor to President Heber J. Grant, was traveling through the missions. While in Switzerland, as has been related here, a meeting was held attended by Saints and some of the missionaries, at which President Smith made that memorable prediction that the day would come when there would be temples in Europe and in that land of Switzerland.

It seemed so incredible at that time. We were facing persecution. In Germany we were not permitted to meet openly, so we held our meetings in the forests in the summer and in private homes in the winter.

The newspapers carried articles against the Church and the missionaries, vicious in their nature. It seemed that the powers of the evil one had been turned loose to stop the work, and when that prediction was made, as we talked about it in our little missionary group, we wondered if it would ever be fulfilled.

I came home from my mission in 1908. Conditions here were not too good. There was persecution here at home, criticism toward the leaders of the Church, President Joseph F. Smith being especially singled out in newspapers and magazines for vitriolic attacks on the part of those antagonistic to the Church.

There are two types of persecution. In the early history of the Church it was more or less physical. Later on it was of the nature I have described. It just seemed that the work could not go forward.

What a change now! God moves in the affairs of men. It is his work. We are his children, and no matter what may come, if we do our part in preaching the gospel, declaring its message, its saving truths, there will be no question about the outcome. These things we have learned over the years.

No one would have hazarded such a prediction except a prophet of the Living God. He saw, he knew, through the prophetic powers that he possessed, and today, during this conference, we have had related to us the fulfilment of that great prediction.

Thus, my brethren and sisters, it has ever been, and thus it will ever be in this work. There will be no failure. We may fail. Six months ago, you will recall we had a heavy snowstorm—conference weather they called it—and President McKay announced that all the roads in Wyoming were blocked and that the Saints should not attempt to drive home until the storm cleared. Today under such beautiful weather conditions we meet in conference. How this epitomizes the rolling forth of the work of the Lord! We meet storms; we meet roadblocks; then the storm clears. We ourselves sometimes throw up road blocks when we fail to do our part, when we fail to support the organizations, when presiding officers in wards and stakes fail to give the necessary direction to the auxiliary organizations, helping them in their work, all of them being important and necessary. We throw up road blocks when we fail to do our duty and keep his commandments. But the Lord, just as the storm cleared, clears the way, and in spite of us his work goes on, and there is no failure.

I am grateful for my testimony. I am grateful for the cleansing power of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I thank the Lord for faith in God. I thank him for his blessings that come even in the face of adversity and affliction, for the power to see even beyond the affliction. I am grateful for these blessings.

God sustains us. You know what was said of the Savior—that although he were a son, yet learned he obedience by suffering, by the things which he suffered, and being made perfect through that suffering, he became the author of eternal salvation to all who obey.

Thus it is with us, my brethren and sisters, and I leave with you my testimony, and pray that God may help us that there may be no failure on our part, and that we may not place any road-blocks because we have sufficient evidence to know that even against odds and adversity, there is no failure.

God help us to appreciate these things, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve, has just spoken to us. Elder Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of the Seventy will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I PRAY for the blessings of our Heavenly Father.

President J. Reuben Clark, on his eighty-second birthday, said these words: "This is a great world for each youth, but he must conquer it for himself by work and right living."

President Stephen L. Richards, at the dedication of a ward chapel in Cache Stake stated: "We are engaged in building the kingdom here on earth. That is our assignment. Men are not endowed with the same talents, but everyone can make a contribution in his way."

President David O. McKay said, at the dedication of a chapel in the Box Elder Stake: "Three virtues contribute to the spirit of man: first, control of the passions; second, reverence; a great man is reverent in his attitude toward God and his Son, Jesus Christ; third, service to his fellow men."

Out of our welfare program has come: "They are putting a roof on the house of a sick brother. Men and boys are harvesting the widow's potato crop."

Lucy B. Young, one of President Brigham Young's wives, said one day in Germany to me, "I went up the hall in the Lion House. President Young had just crossed the road on South Temple and hurried into his office. With the curiosity of a good woman, I walked up to the end of the hall and listened at the door. I heard President Brigham Young say: 'Down on your knees, Brigham! Down on your knees!' He had had some difficulty with the men across the street. In a few moments he opened the door calmly, with perfect control, and went about his work.

May God school our feelings, give us a desire to do the right with such fine determination and faith, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of Seventy has just addressed us briefly, but he said much in those few words.

We have been deprived of the inspiration of remarks from Elder Henry D. Moyle. He would rather I would not say what I am going to say, and I do not want my remarks to arouse any undue anxiety in your hearts.

Brother Moyle was one of four of the Twelve who were present at the dedicatory services of the Swiss Temple. Just prior to that he filled a special appointment. As always, he said, "Yes, I will go." I think that the filling of that appointment did not result in the cold from which he suffered when he got back to Bern. Be that as it may—I want to say that he participated in all the exercises, too. He speaks German fluently, and hundreds of thousands of German Saints rejoiced in his message.

The doctor thought he should not attend these services. He has a very painful case of shingles. I have deemed it unwise to have him exert himself to address this large congregation. We unite our prayers, Brother Moyle, for your complete and permanent restoration to your usual vigor and health.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

O YOU SAINTS listening in: Thank you for the many telegrams you have sent. We rejoice with you in the excellent transmission of the messages from this tabernacle. I know the Saints would be pleased to hear your comments, but time will not permit our reading them. I have two here, though, which I am sure the Saints and you in California will be pleased to hear.

One is: "The servicemen assembled at Fort Ord and those gathered in homes enjoyed the TV broadcast of conference this morning. Approximately ninety in attendance."—Chaplain Connell.

The other is from Tijuana, Mexico: "The Saints gathered here in Mexico enjoying good conference reception. Proceedings are being translated into Spanish. Best wishes.—The Tijuana Branch Presidency, Tijuana, Mexico." Then, as you see, dozens of others. We are just one great, united Church—united in love.

In your behalf, may I express appreciation and gratitude to all who have assisted in any way in making this great semi-annual conference such an inspirational success. As I was driven down to this session, I saw the officers of the law on duty, and I thought that their diligence has prevented accidents; perhaps they have saved lives by their faithfulness. I know they have greatly contributed to our convenience, and we thank them and our city fathers for their co-operation. To you reporters for your fair and accurate reports we express thanks; also to the audience as a whole for your responsiveness, attentiveness, and example in reverence, too, even you who have to stand in the doorways. It is all these little things which contribute to a spirit of unity, brotherhood, and love. The fire department has been on hand in case of any emergency. Red Cross officials have been rendering service.

These flowers we have mentioned before. I did not tell you however that the presidency of the Wilford Stake asked permission to furnish these flowers. We did not ask them. They asked for the privilege of contributing to the beauty. We accept their flowers as messengers of love. We thank you, and to think that these other flowers could come across the Pacific Ocean and retain their beauty and fragrance as these have done emphasizes the nearness of our Saints in the far-off parts of the world to us.

We mention the ushers. Have you noticed how quietly they have attended to their duty? They have been on hand, each at his post, with no confusion whatever. Thank you for considering your post important and doing your duty so well.

To the various radio and television stations in our own city and state, and in other states named in the various sessions of the conference, we render our special thanks in behalf of the tens of thousands of people who have heard these proceedings due to your courtesy and contribution.

To these groups of singers from Friday morning on, we cannot say in words that which we feel in our hearts. The German Saints on Friday—how well they sang! How gladly they rendered that service! That group of young men and young women on Saturday—why they just seemed to throw their young hearts into the expression of love through singing, and we all responded to it!

And this afternoon, shall I say the climax? I can, because our mothers who always sing from the heart have just lifted us to spiritual heights, and Sister Madsen, how the Lord has blessed her to get these groups of mothers together and to sing with such expression! It is so inspiring! Well, on behalf of the thousands who listen, we thank you, one and all, for what you have done today.

I have time to say only a word in conclusion. The brethren who have addressed us have been inspired of the Lord, as you will all testify, and they have given us sublime messages. They have given us the gospel. What shall we do about it?

I remember fifty-eight years ago, on one occasion I sat in council with two local elders in Glasgow who had trouble which they could not solve, and which threatened to become serious. Something that was said touched the sympathy of one, and when you touch the sympathy of a Scotchman you have him, and he said, "Tell us what you want us to do, and we'll do it." (Tell us what you want us to do, and we'll do it.)

Well, we have been told in this conference what to do. God help us to do it. May I mention two important things just by way of emphasis upon which we should center our efforts. One pertains to the priesthood quorums. Fellow presiding officers in missions, stakes, wards, and quorums, make your quorums more effective in regard to brotherhood and service. The quorums are units which should effectively hold the priesthood in sacred bonds and in helpfulness.

I refer particularly to the senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood—you businessmen, successful in the business world; you professional men who have devoted your time to the success of your vocations and are successful and are leading men in civic and political affairs—get together more closely in your quorum. Yes, it may be teachers—that is all right. You meet as teachers, adult teachers, and help one another. If one of your number be sick, two or three of you get together and call on him. You can do that. You do not like to preach, and you hesitate to appear before an audience, even to pray. You can go together and sit by the side of your comrade who lies in bed. He will never forget it.

You elders perhaps have one of your number sick, and his crop needs harvesting. Get together and harvest it. One of your members has a son on a mission, and his funds are getting low. Just ask if you can be of help to him. Your thoughtfulness he will never forget. Such acts as these are what the Savior had in mind when he said, "Inasmuch as ye do it unto the least of these my brethren, ye do it unto me." (See Matt. 25:40.) There is no other way that you can serve Christ. You can kneel down and pray to him, that is good. You can plead with him to give you his guidance through the Holy Spirit—yes, we do that and must do it.

We have to do it. But it is these practical, daily visits in life, it is the controlling of our tongue, in not speaking evil of a brother, but speaking well of him, that the Savior marks as true service.

Read Peter's first epistle where he refers to the Holy Priesthood: "... ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light." (I Peter 2:9.) In his second epistle (see ch. 1:4) note the significance of this: "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, . . ." When you sense that, you have reached happiness.

Now the other point relates to your homes. Let us go home with a determination to have our homes places of contentment and peace. There is not one of us who cannot contribute to that condition. The ideal home should be found among the members of the Church of Jesus Christ, and I am just sufficiently old-fashioned to think that the home is still the foundation of the state, especially of a republic. Do not forget it. And the state has no right to take your children and attempt to train them and substitute for your protection, mother, and your prayerful guidance.

Brother Bennion referred to the influence of a mother. He expressed what each one of us may do. But I am referring now to the fathers' contributing to the home by showing a high sense of regard and courtesy to your wives in the home. Courtesy is a wonderful virtue, and it should be shown in the home. Courtesy is saying "thank you"; "if you please"; "pardon me." Have you forgotten those terms in the home? Children, hearing them, will themselves become courteous to mother and to father, and to each other. The home is the place to teach the virtues of society. The home is the place to instill the faith that has been emphasized in this conference.

Husbands, remember the covenants you have made to your wives. Do not permit your affections to be led away from the mother of your children.

Sunday, October 2

Third Day

Mothers, do not forget that you owe something to your children and to your husband. You, too, can keep yourself attractive. You, too, can refrain from finding fault. You, too, can contribute to the happiness and contentment of the home, the sweetest place on earth. That is about as near heaven as you will get here. Do not make it a hell. Some do.

We have had too many broken homes since the war, too many separations by divorce. Let us reduce that number. There is no use terminating a marriage just because of a few misunderstandings. Guard against misunderstandings by curbing your tongue. You hold the priesthood. Can't you control your tongue as well as your actions? Do not say the thing that comes to your mind when things go wrong, and by a quick-tempered remark wound her who has given her life to you. Control your temper.

Yes, you see weaknesses. The women see them in us husbands, too. I'll tell you they see them! They control their tongues more frequently, I think, than we do. Let us reverence womanhood. Is it not strange, when you think of it, that the one thing of which the world has accused this Church is the one thing in which this Church deserves most credit—keeping the home pure and stable, educating children in the faith of our fathers, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and the Father and in the restoration of the gospel.

Now, here is a final appeal at this conference for us to go home, to go back and set our homes in order. God bless you in so doing, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Choir will sing, "The Silent Sea—I Know not What the Future Hath of Marvel or Surprise," after which the benediction will be offered by Elder George L. Nelson, president of the Monument Park Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned for six months.

"The Silent Sea," by our Singing Mothers, led by Sister Madsen.

Singing by the Combined Choruses, "The Silent Sea."

President David O. McKay:

The Deseret Sunday School Union Conference will convene in this building tonight at 7 o'clock. All Sunday School workers will desire to be in attendance, and all are invited.

Presidencies of the temples will please make their way at once to the fourth floor of the temple building.

President George L. Nelson of the Monument Park Stake will now offer the benediction.

The benediction was offered by Elder George L. Nelson, President of the Monument Park Stake.

Conference adjourned for six months.

The congregational singing of the Conference was conducted by the conductors of the various choirs which furnished the music for each day's sessions, and by Elder Richard P. Condie.

The choral singing for the Friday morning and afternoon sessions was furnished by the German Speaking Church Organization Choir, with Heinz Rimmasch conducting, and Frank W. Asper at the organ.

At the Saturday morning and afternoon sessions the choral singing was furnished by the MIA Chorus from the Salt Lake Valley Stakes, with Elvis B. Terry conducting at the morning session, and Ruth Hardy Funk at the afternoon session, with Roy M. Darley at the organ.

At the General Priesthood Meeting held Saturday evening the choral music was furnished by the Bonneville Stake Priesthood Chorus, with David A. Shand as director, and Roy M. Darley at the organ.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers from 21 stakes in the Bannock and East Idaho Regions, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, and Frank W. Asper at the organ, furnished the music for the Sunday morning and afternoon sessions.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Frank W. Asper and Roy M. Darley.

FIRST DAY MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, April 6, 1956, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.

President David O. McKay presided and conducted the meeting.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses furnished the choral music for this session of the Conference, Ralph Woodward conducting.

President McKay made the following introductory remarks:

President David O. McKay:

All who saw the glorious eastern sky this morning before sunrise must have responded to the words of the poet: "Now morn her rosy steps in the eastern clime advancing, sows the earth with orient pearls." All Salt Lake Valley, and I think this western area, is filled with that sunlight. I hope that all who are listening and all who are assembled in houses of worship this morning will have their hearts filled with the sunshine of the Holy Spirit, that we may have the spirit of love and true brotherhood abiding with us during this session, and those that follow in the One Hundred Twenty-Sixth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. All the General Authorities are in attendance excepting Elder Ezra Taft Benson, whose duties as Secretary of Agriculture necessitated his flying back to Washington last evening.

Elder Joseph Anderson is Clerk of the Conference.

These services and all general sessions of the Conference will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall, in Barratt Hall, over public address system and by television. The Tabernacle is filled to capacity. The services this morning are also being televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5, of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over three television stations in Idaho. They likewise are being heard over twelve radio stations in Oregon, Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Nevada, and Arizona. The names of these stations have already been announced to the television and radio audience.

We desire most appreciatively to express our gratitude to those various radio and television stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts. It is truly a great service.

To those who are assembled in person, and to the untold thousands comprising the television and radio audiences, the First Presidency and General Authorities extend a most hearty welcome, and pray that our souls may be uplifted and inspired by our assembling together in this great Conference of the Church.

We greet the young people from the Brigham Young University, and their leaders, who are here to furnish music for us. It is a joy to have you with us.

We note these beautiful Calla Lilies and Daffodils. For the tenth consecutive year the Berkeley Stake has graciously furnished us flowers to beautify this building during the sessions of Conference. These Calla Lilies are messengers of their affection and loyal support. We thank the members of the Berkeley Stake for this loving service. These beautiful Daffodils have come from the Puyallup Daffodil Festival through the Tacoma Stake in the northwest. Thank you for these lovely flowers. Mrs. Mary R. Persson of Woodland, California, sent several dozen Calla Lilies to gladden our hearts, and in a note, stated: "Grown in my own garden." We send deep appreciation and thanks to Mrs. Persson.

Here is another interesting feature. We learned yesterday that sometime today 18 or 20 servicemen will come in a government plane to attend Conference from Scott Air Force, Belleville, Illinois, and about the same number from the Vance Air Force, Enid, Oklahoma. They will be a little late for this morning's session, so we suggest that Bishop Isaacson and his excellent corps of ushers reserve seats with the stake presidencies
